9:2-4 The six men, each with a war club in his hand, were emissaries of judgment. With them was a man clothed in white linen carrying writing equipment. God instructed him to put a "mark" on every person who grieved over the abominations of idolatry. The word translated "mark" is taw, the name of the final letter of the Hebrew alphabet. In ancient Hebrew script the taw was shaped like an X or + (not as in the "square" script commonly used for Hebrew after the return from exile). Each one who received the mark would be spared. Christian interpreters view this mark as a type of the cross of Christ (see Rev. 7:3; 9:4). According to Jewish tradition the taw also represented the first letter in the word tichyeh, "you shall live."

9:5-6 The merciless slaughter of those who did not have the "mark" seems out of character for God, who has made it clear that the taking of a human life is contrary to His will (Gn 9:6; Ex 20:13). Several considerations bear on this question. First, the OT names a number of crimes that were punishable by death, including some that were commonplace in Judah during the time of Ezekiel: advocating the worship of other gods (Dt 13:1-10) and sacrificing to false gods (Ex 22:20).

Second, it was permissible to take a life in the course of warfare. The command to kill those who were not grieved over Judah's rebellion against the Lord is comparable to the command to exterminate the Canaanites during Israel's occupation of the land (see Jos 6:17). A population steeped in pagan religion could not be allowed to remain, for it would tempt the people away from loyalty to the Lord.

Third, under the principle of corporate solidarity (seeDt 2:34; 5:9; 19:6), all who participate in a sinful culture are tainted by its sin. The application of the protective "mark" was an act of mercy by which the Lord spared those faithful few who had not yielded to the general perversity of a society under judgment; the prophet interceded with the Lord on their behalf (Ezk 9:8). Finally, this passage was a vision given to Ezekiel in Babylon (see 8:1-3), not an act that was ever carried out. As extreme as the Lord's command appeared, the actual killings in the streets of Jerusalem would be done by the Babylonian invaders, not the six warriors shown to Ezekiel. The slaughter in this passage was a word-picture predicting the eventual doom of Jerusalem and its inhabitants because of the pervasive climate of sin; the whole nation was guilty of "bloodshed" and "perversity" (9:9-10).

10:14-15 In this description of the cherubim, the first of the four faces, that of the ox (1:10), was replaced by a the face of a "cherub." Otherwise the faces were the same, and the text makes clear that these were the same creatures as those of chapter 1 (10:15,20,22). Rabbinic interpreters explained that the face of the ox was removed at Ezekiel's request because of its association with the golden calf of Ex 32. Since the cherubim, or similar figures, are known from other ancient Near Eastern cultures (see note on 10:18-22), it is also possible that the ox was the ordinary face of a cherub, so that the two terms are synonymous.

10:18-22 Figures similar to the biblical cherubim (cp. the "living creatures" of Rv 4:6-8) are found in excavations of sites from other ancient Near Eastern cultures. Their purpose was to signify the presence of royalty; large statues of such composite creatures flanked the throne of the Assyrian ruler at Nineveh, for example. Their function in the Bible differs somewhat. In Ezekiel's vision, the cherubim transported God in His glory from the threshold of the temple to the east gate of the temple complex. Cherubim appear as servants, worshipers, and guardians of God's holy presence. In addition to the similar "living creatures" in John's vision, cherubim are found exercising this role in five places in the Bible: guarding access to the garden and to the tree of life (Gn 3:24); mounted atop the ark of the covenant as guardians of the holiness of God in the inner sanctuary (Ex 25:18-22; 1 Sm 4:4; 2 Sm 6:2; Is 37:16; cp. Ps 80:1; 99:1); embroidered on the veil of the most holy place in the tabernacle, and later on the veil of the temple (Ex 26:31; 2 Ch 3:14); carved from olive wood and placed inside the inner sanctuary of temple (1 Kg 6:23-25; 8:6-7); associated with the movement of God's presence (1 Ch 28:18; Ps 104:3; Ezk 10:19; 41:18-20).

10:19 The eastern gate is especially significant in the eschatological doctrines of Judaism, Islam, and Christianity. For Jews and Muslims the golden gate is the site of the last judgment (Zch 14:1-9). Jesus ascended from the Mount of Olives on the east side of Jerusalem. He told His disciples He would return to the same place in like manner as He departed (Ac 1:9-12). Both Christians and Jews believe the Messiah will reenter the city through the golden gate (Ezk 44:1-3) from which the glory of God departed (see 11:22-25).

11:1 Recent archeological discoveries have confirmed the historicity of the background for this vision. Two leaders were mentioned by name from among the 25 seen previously in 8:16—Jaazaniah son of Azzur and Pelatiah son of Benaiah. These names were found in a collection of 200 bullae (clay seals) found in excavation of the "City of David" area of Jerusalem. These seals were used on official documents sent to the king and contained the name of the sender. Pelatiah was apparently a common name. Seals bearing at least two other Pelatiahs are among those found, one the son of Hoshea and the other the son of Heleq. Another seal contains the name Benaiah, the father of the Pelatiah mentioned here and again in verse 13. One seal also contained the name of Baruch the son of Neriah, Jeremiah's personal scribe.

11:3 For more explanation of the phrase "the city is the pot, and we are the meat," see note on 24:1-14.

11:4 On the meaning of "son of man," see note on 2:1.

11:13-16 Pelatiah's death was evidently a shock to all Jerusalem, including the prophet. Ezekiel's compassionate response was an intercessory prayer that the Lord would spare a remnant of Israel. God's answer was immediate and positive. He did not abandon His people even if the temple was destroyed. The message was simple: No one, especially not the leaders, would be immune from judgment (see 1 Pt 4:7). God wanted the exiles to know that, even though the temple was destroyed, He would be for them a "sanctuary." The Targums (Aramaic commentaries) interpret this as a reference to the synagogue, an institution that developed during the exile.

11:23 God's departure from the temple showed that He had distanced Himself from the abominable practices described in 8:1-18. His glory left the temple and the city and went eastward to the Mount of Olives. Rabbinic sources trace the movement of the Lord's glory in ten steps: (1) from one cherub on the ark to the other (9:3); (2) from the ark to the threshold of the temple (10:4); (3) back to the cherubim to be transported (10:18); (4) accompanied by the cherubim to the east gate (10:19); (5) the glory entered the court of the temple (10:4); (6) then moved to the altar of sacrifice (Am 9:1); (7) then moved to the roof of the temple (Pr 21:9); (8) then moved to the temple wall (Am 7:7); (9) then moved to the city (Mc 6:9); and (10) to the Mount of Olives (Ezk 11:23), where the glory remained for three-and-a-half years, as if waiting for a change in the hearts of the people.

12:1-7 Ezekiel enumerated many reasons for the fall of Judah and Jerusalem. This third cycle of prophecies includes ten messages that present seven causes for the community's demise (see 12:1,17,21; 13:1; 14:2,12; 15:1; 16:1; 17:1; 18:1), followed by a funeral lament in 19:1-14. The first reason for the fall, presented in this passage, was the people's obstinacy (2:3-8; Jr 36:1-32). The Lord reminded Ezekiel once again of their rebellious nature (see 2:3-5). The prophet then acted out another dramatic sermon by packing his bags with items carried by one leaving for exile (v. 4).

12:21-28 The rebellion of the Judeans was exacerbated because they despised the Word of God. The people adopted a proverb: "The days keep passing by and every vision fails" (v. 22), evidently deriding Jeremiah and Ezekiel. But God warned He would "put a stop to" their proverb and replace it with a new one, "the days draw near, as well as the fulfillment of every vision" (v. 23; see Dt 18:20-22; Jr 5:13-14; 17:15; 26:17-24).

13:1–14:5 The second circumstance that led to the fall of Judah and Jerusalem was that the people listened to and heeded the false prophets. This section clearly defines the breakdown of the religious institutions in the decline of the culture. Ezekiel listed eight failures of these false prophets. (1) They prophesied out of their own mind, or "heart" (Hb lev, the seat of the intention), and not what the Lord had told them (13:1-3,17).(2) They made the flock their prey (13:4). (3) They failed to reinforce the people's faith in the time of crisis (13:5). (4) They preached deception as divine revelation (13:6-9). (5) They preached peace in the face of judgment (13:10-16) (6) They used magical methods to gain advantage over the people (13:18-21). (7) They discouraged the righteous and encouraged the wicked (13:22-23). (8) They set up idols in their hearts, enshrining their own wills (14:1-5).

13:18,20 The Lord condemned false prophetesses for sewing magic charms on the wrists of their garments, wearing veils, and casting spells to ensnare victims (v. 18). Witchcraft was strictly forbidden among the Jews (Dt 18:10; 1 Sm 15:23; 2 Kg 9:22; 17:17; 21:6;2 Ch 33:6).

14:14,20 The identity of Daniel (Hb Dan'el) has occasioned considerable debate, though there is agreement on the identities of Noah (Gn 6:8–10:1) and Job (Jb 1–42) as well-known figures of the OT patriarchal period. Some scholars have equated Ezekiel's Dan'el in verses 14 and 20 with Dnil, a hero in Ugaritic tablets found at Ras Shamra, on the coast of Syria. That "Daniel" would have been a contemporary of Noah and Job, whereas the biblical prophet Daniel would not yet have attained the eminent reputation Ezekiel attributes to Dan'el (see also 28:3). However, it is unlikely that Ezekiel, unalterably opposed to the worship of false deities, would have upheld the Ugaritic Dnil—a devotee of Baal—as a paradigm of righteousness. Such use of a pagan hero as an example is unknown elsewhere in Scripture (see Dt 18:14-22). Daniel the prophet was in captivity from 605 B.C. and had ample time to establish his reputation as a wise and righteous man (Dn 1:1–2:49; 5:12). It is most likely, then, that Ezekiel was referring to the biblical Daniel—like him, a firm opponent of idolatry (Dn 2:8-20).

15:2-8 The third cause of the fall of Judah was that the nation was a useless vine (see 12:1-7). Ezekiel's portrayal of the nation as a vine was not unique. Hosea (Hs 10:1), Isaiah (Is 5:1-7), and Jeremiah (Jr 2:21) used the same figure, which is found in other passages (e.g., Gn 49:22; Dt 32:32; Ps 80:8-16). Ezekiel's message is similar to Isaiah's "Song of the Vineyard" (Is 5:1-30), a message of judgment against Israel. The grapevine has no value as wood for lumber (Ezk 15:2); its only use is its fruit. If a vine bears no fruit, its only other function is as firewood (vv. 3-5). Nebuchadnezzar's invasions in 605 B.C. and 597 B.C. were precursors of Jerusalem's destruction in 586 B.C.

16:1-63 The fourth reason for Judah's fall was the nation's history of unfaithfulness (see 12:1-7). This 63-verse chapter is the longest continuous prophetic message in Ezekiel. It presents Judah as a prostitute (see Hs 4:12-15; 6:10) lacking any sense of gratitude for the Lord's gracious choice of His people, or for His blessing and provision.

16:5 The prophet pictured Judah as an abandoned female upon whom the Lord had pity. In the ancient Near East, females often were abandoned at birth because of family poverty or fear of disgrace because of the low social position afforded women. It was also common to abandon ill, deformed, weak, and unwanted children. Although such barbaric practices were not supposed to be the custom in Israel, Ezekiel was comparing the Lord's compassion with the cruelty that characterized the pagan world. He found Judah in a helpless estate, unloved and unwanted, and rescued and adopted her as His own (Dt 7:6-7).

16:17-25 The "male images" (v. 17) could have been phallic-shaped stones used in fertility cults. Children were sacrificed to Molech, a molten hot image into whose arms a live baby was placed (v. 20). Devotees of these cults practiced sacred prostitution—male and female—at the shrines among groves of trees on the side of hills called "high places" (bamoth); in the city streets they might even build an artificial "elevated place" for this purpose (vv. 24-25). God's response of "woe, woe" (v. 23), was a common expression of horror uttered at the arrival of some disaster (1 Sm 4:8; Pr 23:29; Is 3:9).

16:44-47 What is the meaning of the proverb "Like mother, like daughter"? Judah followed the pattern of sin and depravity of her cultural ancestors, her "mother" the Hittites and her "father" the Amorites (v. 45). Samaria, the northern kingdom of Israel, was the "older sister." The phrase did not suggest that Samaria was older than Judah, but it was the first to become ripe for judgment (v. 46; cp. 1 Kg 12:1-33).

16:48-50 Judah was called the "sister" of Sodom since both Israel and Judah had followed the same course as Sodom in pride and perversion (v. 49). "Daughters" often referred to villages that were the suburbs of the larger cities. Judah's reprimand was more excessive than either Sodom or Samaria; she deserved a more severe judgment (vv. 50-54).

16:59-63 Despite the inevitability of judgment for breaking their covenant (v. 59), Ezekiel closed his story of the unfaithful sister, Judah, with a promise of restoration and a new covenant. He used emphatic language; in essence, God was saying, "I myself" will make a new everlasting and unbreakable covenant with her (vv. 60,62). The prophet added that "you will remember your ways and be ashamed" when the Lord makes atonement for her sin—a phrase pungent with Messianic overtones similar to Zch 12:10-14. Judah's new covenant would be based on repentance, an idea Ezekiel expanded in 17:22-24 and 34:23-29 (see also Jr 31:31-34).

17:11-21 A fifth reason that Judah fell was because of her trust in political alliances instead of the Lord (17:1-24). Commentators generally agree on the interpretation of this parable of the great eagle and the cedar (vv. 1-10). The weight of evidence suggests that the story was about Judah's dependence upon alliances with Nebuchadnezzar, the great eagle. At the same time, in secret treaty with another great eagle—Pharaoh Hophra—Judah hoped to gain independence from Babylon's control. But Hophra's kingdom withered and was no longer a factor when Zedekiah was finally overthrown.

17:22-24 With the nation hopelessly gone, the prophet turned to a messianic theme, speaking of a "tender sprig" taken from the top of a tree and replanted in a prominent place. The Hebrew yoniq ("sprig" or "shoot") is the same word used in the messianic figure of Is 53:2. Elsewhere, the same word is used for an infant or nursing child (Nm 11:12; Dt 32:25; 1 Sm 15:3; 22:19; Jr 44:7). Synonyms such as choter "shoot," netser "branch" (Is 11:1), and semach "branch" (Is 4:2; Jr 23:5; Zch 3:8; 6:12) were used figuratively of the Messiah. Ezekiel's word picture affirmed the certainty of the restoration of Judah and Jerusalem. While some interpreters see this prophecy fulfilled in Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, Ezekiel's language went beyond these and looked to a time when the Messiah would reign over Israel and over all the earth.

18:1-2 Ezekiel's sixth reason for the fall of Judah and Jerusalem was the people's failure to accept responsibility for their sin (see 12:1-7). During the nineteenth century, some commentators claimed that the idea of individual responsibility developed only during the exile. But the concept was present in the earliest writings in the OT. Here, Ezekiel clearly made two points about individual responsibility. First, individuals are not guilty for sins committed by others—past or present—especially by family members (vv. 1-20). Rather, they are responsible for whatever they do. Second, although individuals are responsible for their sins, they are not bound by former sins—their own or others—but can alter their situation by repentance and faith (vv. 21-32).

18:5-9 What constitutes a "righteous" person? Ezekiel presented five principles of conduct for righteous people. First, they do what is "just and right" (v. 5). Second, they worship Yahweh as the one and only God (v. 6a). Third, they maintain marital fidelity and moral purity (v. 6b). Fourth, they are good neighbors (vv. 7-8). Fifth, they respect and obey the laws of God (v. 9).

18:10-20 A person who disregards the laws of God is not to go unpunished because he has a righteous father, nor is a righteous son who follows the way of the Lord guilty for the sin of his wicked father. Ezekiel summarized the principle of individual responsibility in verses 19-20. The rationale for it is found in the historical context. The suffering of the exile was a result of that generation's persistent rebellion, idolatry, and covenant unfaithfulness. These sins were also seen in their forefathers, a point made clear in 16:1-59. But it was not their fathers' guilt that brought on their punishment, but their own. The "visitation" of sin mentioned in Ex 20:5 and 34:6-7 was not the transmission of guilt but the consequences of bad choices that affected following generations.

18:21-24 No generation is judged for the sins of a previous one. God always honors genuine repentance, as described in verse 21. Repentance is turning (shuv) from sin and turning to God in faith and obedience. The chiastic (symmetrical, in reverse) structure of verses 21-24 begins and ends with exhortations to repentance. Between them is the Lord's rhetorical question, "Do I take any pleasure in the death of the wicked?" The implied answer is, No. God does not create some individuals for the specific purpose of meting out His judgment, as some may claim.

18:25-29 The exiles accused God of being unfair because they failed to understand the principles of verses 10-24, in the belief that they were paying for the sins of previous generations. The accusation that the Lord is "unfair" or unjust is a translation of the Hebrew takan, literally "to measure" or "to examine" (1 Sm 2:3; 2 Kg 12:11; Jb 28:25; Pr 16:2; 21:2; 24:12; Is 40:12-13; Ezk 45:11). They claimed that God does not "measure" His actions but acts arbitrarily and unjustly. The Lord turned the argument on the hearers, asking them, "Isn't it your ways that are unfair?" (v. 25).

Judgment for sin is a fixed principle that only can be averted by repentance. When a righteous person abandons righteousness, the judgment of God is released against sin. If the person repents and turns from sin, the judgment is stayed. When a person's guilt is exposed, the human tendency is to blame someone else (e.g., Gn 3:12-13). At such times God can be a handy scapegoat. It is no surprise that both the exiles under judgment and those still in Judah maintained their innocence and the Lord's guilt (v. 29).

18:30-32 God's desire, even in the face of repeated rebellion, is always to deliver—but He will bring judgment if necessary. This is consistent with His character inasmuch as it reveals His wrath against sin and those who choose it (Ex 22:22-24; Nm 11:33; Rm 1:18). When a person repents (shuv) and changes direction, the wrath of God is averted because the person turned from sin to forgiveness and faith (see Zch 1:3-6).

19:1-9 Why is a funeral hymn included? The seventh condition that resulted in Judah's fall was that the nation was spiritually dead. This chapter contains two funeral laments written in a special meter called qinah, three beats followed by two. The book of Lm, like other funeral poems, was also written in qinah meter (see 2 Sm 1:17-27; 3:33-34; Is 14:4-21; Am 5:1-3). One of Ezekiel's laments was for the king (vv. 1-9) and the second was for the end of the kingdom (vv. 10-14).

Ezekiel called the last kings of Judah "princes" because he did not recognize their legitimate right to reign. The line of kings currently in power had gained the throne by intrigue and murder, and they proceeded to rule without seeking God's spiritual guidance. As Hosea earlier stated, "They have installed kings, but not through Me" (Hs 8:4). At the death of Josiah, his son Jehoahaz reigned three months. Eliakim, his brother, overthrew him and took the throne name Jehoiakim, pledging allegiance to Nebuchadnezzar. He reigned 11 years, and upon his death was followed by his son Jehoiachin. After a reign of only three months Jehoiachin was taken captive to Babylon (2 Kg 24:8-17) and replaced by Mattaniah, his uncle, to whom Nebuchadnezzar gave the throne name Zedekiah. He reigned as Judah's last king from 597–586 B.C. (2 Kg 23:31; 24:18).

20:1,5-6,8 A contingent of leaders came to "consult the LORD" about Ezekiel's judgment messages. The Lord responded with five oath-lessons each containing the phrase "I swore to them" (lit. "I lifted my hand to them," vv. 5-6,15,23,28,42), signifying that God swore by His name and reputation. First, He had sworn to be their God and deliver them from Egypt (see Ex 20:2) but both they and their fathers responded with rebellion (Ezk 20:5,6,8). See the following notes for the other vows in this series.

20:15 Second, the Lord swore to them in the wilderness that He would not let them enter the promised land unless they were obedient. His faithful protection (vv. 16-22, cp. Dt 8:4) was repaid by repeated rebellion.

20:23-24 Third, the Lord swore to disperse the people because they persisted in rebellion, desecrating "My Sabbaths" (vv. 13,16,20-21,24). God chose 70 years for the captivity because of their repeated desecration of the Sabbath and the sabbatical year (Ex 20:8-11; 2 Ch 36:21; see five cycles of rebellion in Lv 26:14-35; 2 Ch 36:21).

20:28-38 Fourth, although the Lord had vowed to give them the land, the people came under judgment because, once in the land, they established bamoth or high places for pagan altars. "What is this high place you are going to?" is a rhetorical question, a reminder that God knew every bamah or pagan shrine they had set up. These idolatrous practices continued while the Judeans were in exile (v. 38).

20:39-49 Fifth, the exile was a divine judgment to purge the nation of sin (vv. 40-44), that the Lord might fulfill his vow to give them the land (v. 42). Verse 46 uses three different words for "south": timanah "to the right," since directions were determined by facing east; darom "south" in a geographical sense; and negev referring to the southern portion of the land. The destruction would be of such magnitude that everyone would recognize it as an act of divine judgment (vv. 48-49). (In the MT, vv. 45-49 are Ezk 21:1-5.)

21:1-7 The phrase "Son of man, turn your face toward . . ." occurs nine times in the Bible, all in Ezk and all in a context of judgment (6:2; 13:17; 20:46; 21:2; 25:2; 28:21; 29:2; 35:2; 38:2). Commentators call Ezekiel's three messages here "sword oracles," and they envision indiscriminate judgment of both the "righteous" and the "wicked" (vv. 3-4). The passage raises the issue of whether the use of a pagan nation, Babylon, as God's "sword" was justifiable. Habakkuk wrestled with this same question and received the same answer: God is sovereign and free to use whomever He wishes to accomplish His purposes (Hab 2:5-20). Those God used, like Babylon, also were accountable to Him (see Ezk 25:1–32:32).

21:8-17 Interpreters who consider this passage a wanton celebration of slaughter are taking a superficial view. This sword song is not a song of delight but a warning of certain judgment. The sword was sharpened and made ready for slaughter (vv. 8-11). Like the Lord, the prophet was visibly moved and grieved by the carnage of judgment (v. 12). The sword was instructed to strike three times to emphasize the extent of judgment (vv. 13-15). Finally, the sword was instructed to strike and do its work (vv. 16-17). Some interpreters try to connect this passage with the sword song of Lamech (Gn 4:23-24), but there is no clear correlation.

21:18-27 The Lord did not endorse divination as legitimate. However, Ezekiel showed that God is in control even when aberrant methods are used to determine the future. Nebuchadnezzar, in his invasion, came to a fork in the road and faced a choice of military objectives: Should he attack Rabbah or Jerusalem? He used three methods of divination (v. 21). The shaking of arrows (belomancy) was intended to determine a yes or no answer to a question. Consulting small household ancestral gods (teraphim, cp. Gn 31:34) was another method for making decisions. Observing the pattern of the holes in an animal liver (hepatoscopy) was another form of divination. The answer Nebuchadnezzar received in each case was the same: Attack Jerusalem!

21:28-32 Why would Ezekiel concern himself with judgment against the Ammonites? The Ammonites and Moabites were descendents of Lot from his incestuous relations with his daughters (Gn 19:30-38). In a sad commentary on the consequences that sin visits on successive generations, their descendents became bitter enemies of the Lord and His people. The Ammonites aided Babylon in the conquest of Jerusalem. Ezekiel's message makes clear that they will not go unpunished. The sword will also visit judgment upon them (25:1-7).

22:1-12 Some commentators suggest this list of the 15 specific sins of Jerusalem is not Ezekiel's. But the list compares favorably with 18:5-17. Both lists include bloodshed (22:3,6); idolatry (v. 4); violation of God's law (v. 4); perversion of power (v. 6); loss of domestic discipline (v. 7); lack of hospitality to strangers (v. 7); oppression of widows and orphans (v. 7); profaning holy things (v. 8); violating the Sabbath (v. 8); giving false witness (v. 9); eating at pagan shrines (v. 9); sacred prostitution (vv. 10-11); accepting bribes (v. 12); exacting exorbitant interest rates (v. 12); and forgetting God (v. 12).

22:23-31 These sins chronicle the total social disintegration of Judah in which all leaders had a share including princes (vv. 6,25), priests (v. 26), government officials (v. 27), false prophets (v. 28), and the people (v. 29). In the midst of this decadence the search for one righteous person to make a difference proved fruitless (see Gn 18:16-33).

23:1-14 The parable of the two sisters, Israel and Judah, is comparable to the parable of chapter 16. While that passage was about the seduction of Canaanite religion, this stressed the political alliances that excluded God from their national life. Oholah (Hb "my tent") represented Israel and Oholibah (Hb "my tent is in her") represented Judah (see Jr 3:6-12). Ezk 23:22-35 contain four messages of judgment directed at Judah, and verses 36-42 make up a list of crimes similar to the list in 22:1-12 and 18:5-9,10-13.

24:1-14 The parable of the boiling pot is a poetic story that expands on 11:3. In that passage and here, Jerusalem was the pot, the people were the meat, and Babylon was the fire.

24:15-27 Interpreters question why a compassionate God would take the life of Ezekiel's wife as an illustration of coming judgment, but there is no reason to assume that was what the Lord did. In providing advance knowledge of her death to Ezekiel (vv. 15-17), He was preparing him to respond to his loss in a way that would make the deepest impression on the prophet's community. In the ancient Near East, mourning was a public rite in which a family often hired professional mourners to bewail the loss of their loved one. Ezekiel's unorthodox conduct in the face of his wife's death—he was instructed not to mourn in public—aroused the people's curiosity, giving the prophet an opening to declare the word of the Lord. When judgment arrived, there would be no opportunity to conduct the usual ceremonies of mourning for lost loved ones or for the demise of the nation. This passage brings to a conclusion the record of Ezekiel's ministry as the prophet of judgment to come upon Judah and Jerusalem.

25:1ff The messages against the nations serve four purposes. First, God will judge nations that applauded the fall of Jerusalem. Second, foreign nations were not immune from judgment. Third, these messages were against false gods of nations Judah trusted. Fourth, all will know Yahweh as the one true God.

25:1-7 Ezekiel's messages against the nations are similar to those found in Is 13:1–23:18; Jr 46:1–51:64; and Am 1:3–2:3. They affirm that all nations who oppose God and His people will be judged. The Lord chose these nations for a particular reason. Each of the first three was a blood relative of the Israelites. Each had become bitter enemies of God and His people. The Ammonites (Ezk 25:2) were the descendents of Lot (Gn 19:38) from an incestuous relationship with his younger daughter. The speech against them is a continuation of the previous message of Ezk 21:28-32. The Ammonites were known for cruelty (Am 1:3), idolatries (1 Kg 11:7,33), pride (Zph 2:9-10), and hatred for Israel (Dt 23:3-4, Jdg 3:13; 1 Sm 11:1-2; 2 Sm 10:1-14; 2 Kg 24:2; Neh 4:3,7-8).

25:8-11 Moab was Lot's son by his older daughter (Gn 19:37). The Moabites introduced Baal worship to Israel (see Nm 21:1–25:5) and participated in the sins of Ammon (Ezk 25:1-8). Both Ammon and Moab would disappear from the family of nations (vv. 10-11).

25:12-14 The Edomites were descendents of Esau (Gn 25:25), who foolishly sold his birthright to Jacob and held the promises of God in contempt (Gn 25:29-34). He was a profane person (Heb 12:16) who despised his birthright and despised God's promises (Gn 25:29-34). His descendents were bitter enemies of the Jews. Edom would be laid waste (Is 34:5-17; Jr 49:7-22; Am 1:9-12; Ob 18).

25:15-17 The Philistines, a seafaring people, were condemned because of their constant opposition to the Israelites during the period of settlement in Canaan. Their threat gave impetus to the Israelites' desire for a king to lead them in warfare. They captured the ark of the covenant (1 Sm 4–5) and were a source of tension from the time of the Judges (Jdg 3:31; 10:7; 13:1–16:31) until the reign of Saul. Ultimately they were responsible for his death (1 Sm 31:1-13). They were judged because they "took revenge with deep contempt, destroying because of their ancient hatred" (Ezk 25:15).

26:1–28:26 Ezekiel devoted chapters 26–28 to the judgment of Tyre, the "rock" and principal city-state of Phoenicia. A massive rock fortress guarded the harbor of this great commercial and shipping center. Ezekiel predicted that many nations would come against this city, its walls would be destroyed, the supposedly impregnable island fortress would be rubble, and the city plundered (vv. 1-6; cp. Is 23:1-18; Jl 3:4-6; Am 1:9-10; Zch 9:2-4).

27:1-36 Tyre was influential as a center of world commerce in its heyday. Ezekiel listed 23 nations, many still in existence, that had trade relations with Tyre. In verses 3-9 he described it as a magnificent ship marked for judgment because of its self-sufficient pride. Its trading partners would lament its fall (vv. 28-36).

28:1 The most enigmatic and debated passage in Ezekiel's messages against the nations is the lament over the king of Tyre. Although no specific king is mentioned, the king who reigned during Ezekiel's ministry was Ethbaal II (585–573 B.C.). He was called the "prince" of Tyre, judged for arrogance and greed (vv. 1-10).

28:3 On the name Daniel (Dan'el) in Ezk, see note on 14:14,20.

28:1-19 This text has presented difficulties for interpreters. Ezekiel compared the king of Tyre to a figure "in Eden, the garden of God" (v. 13). This passage is similar to Isaiah's taunt against the king of Babylon (Is 14:12-17). The king was seeking divine status (Ezk 28:2,6). This is not extraordinary, since ancient Near Eastern kings customarily proclaimed themselves divine and were regarded so by their people. But verse 12 adds that the king was a "seal of perfection, full of wisdom and perfect in beauty." A detailed description follows, naming nine precious stones covering this impressive figure. Verse 14 adds, "You were an anointed guardian cherub" and "You were on the holy mountain of God."

These extravagant descriptions could not literally apply to the king of Tyre; the prophet was comparing him with someone with an exalted position in the garden of God, but who became corrupted and lost his favor and position. Of 20 descriptive elements identifiable in this passage, at least 16 can be seen to correlate with Is 14:12-17, written some 150 years earlier. The correspondence leads many conservative scholars to conclude that the passages are related and refer to the fall of Satan, the adversary of God and His people and the source of evil. On this view, Ezekiel was stating—in terms his audience would understand—that Satan was the mastermind behind the king of Tyre.

Other commentators, no less committed to the inerrancy of Scripture, find such a theory speculative, going "beyond what is written" (1 Co 4:6). If Ezekiel had meant to speak of Satan there is no reason why he would not have mentioned him by name, as occurs in other OT passages (1 Ch 21:1; Jb 1–2; Zch 3:1-2). Ezekiel, like other prophets of Israel, is known for exaggerated speech; in this passage he magnified the king of Tyre as an exalted Edenic figure in order to amplify the "spectacle" (v. 17) of his disgrace, as one who "will never exist again" (v. 19).

28:20-26 Sidon was the sister city of Tyre, often mentioned together with her. Sidon was the home of Jezebel, wife of Ahab (1 Kg 16:31-34). Her vigorous promotion of Phoenician religion resulted in the widespread replacement of the worship of Yahweh with the cult of Baal. The Lord hid Elijah in Zarephath, a suburb of Sidon(1 Kg 17:9), before he went forth to summon the nation back to the Lord (1 Kg 18:1—2 Kg 2:18). The last two verses in this passage are the Lord's promise that He would restore Israel in safety to the land after executing His judgment on their surrounding enemies.

29:1,6-9 This prophecy against Egypt is the first of seven judgment messages against that land that follow in chronological order, except for 29:17-21. Ezekiel gave more attention to Egypt than to any other nation, probably because of its hostility against Israel from the time of the exodus. This prophecy is dated early in 587 B.C. (reckoning from a new year that began in the spring of the previous year), seven months before the fall of Jerusalem. It is usually understood to apply to Pharaoh Hophra. The prophet portrayed Egypt as a splintered reed that would prove worthless; anyone relying on Egypt's help would be crippled (cp. "tearing all their shoulders," v. 7).

29:17-21 This second prophecy, earlier than the others, is dated in the spring of 571 B.C. When Nebuchadnezzar's 13-year siege of Tyre ended unsuccessfully, his armies were left with no spoils with which to pay his soldiers. Ezekiel prophesied that the Lord had allowed him to plunder Egypt as a consolation. The passage concludes with a brief Messianic prophecy that the "horn" of the house of Israel will "sprout" (Hb tsemach), the same word used in Jeremiah's prophecy of the "righteous Branch" (Jr 23:5-6), the "beautiful and glorious" branch Isaiah foretold (Is 4:2-6), and "My servant, the Branch" of Zch (Zch 3:8-10).

30:2-4 The third prophecy is undated. It is not the "Wail: Alas" of the funeral lament but the cry of one under judgment, signaling that Egypt would perish on that "day."

30:13-19 These eight Egyptian centers of religious, political, and military might were marked for judgment as centers of idolatry —gelullim, literally "dung pellets," Ezekiel's favorite word for idols (see 6:4). The fall of these centers marked the end of Egypt as a world power, as predicted in 29:14.

30:20-21 The fourth prophecy is dated in the spring of 587 B.C. Pharaoh Hophra was portrayed as helpless before the complete devastation by Nebuchadnezzar.

31:1-9 The fifth prophecy is dated in early summer, 587 B.C. Depicting rulers as trees was a common literarydevice in the ancient Near East (see Jdg 9:7-21; Is 14:1-8; Ezk 17:1-24; Dn 4:1-37). This king of Assyria was compared to a cedar of Lebanon, the tallest known trees of the ancient world.

32:1-16 This sixth prophecy is dated in late winter, 585 B.C. (just before the spring new year). It is another funeral dirge in qinah meter, lamenting the distress the fall of Egypt would bring to those nations that looked to it for leadership and protection. Egypt's demise was an act of divine intervention by which all would recognize Yahweh as the one true God.

32:17-32 The seventh prophecy is dated shortly after the previous one, after the spring new year. It is the final lament, not composed in qinah meter but—like the second prophecy in 30:2-4—a wailing song. These two passages are the only examples of a wailing song in the OT.

32:22-32 When Egypt was thrown in the pit (Hb bor, a synonym for sheol), Assyria and Elam, former victims of Babylon's might, already were there along with two older nations, Meshech, and Tubal—all known for terror and ruthlessness. Edom and the Sidonians also were there, as previously predicted in 25:12-14 and 28:20-26.

33:1-2,7 This passage is a turning point, as Ezekiel transitioned to messages of hope and restoration in (chaps. 33–45). This message parallels 3:16-21 and reaffirmed Ezekiel's authority as the prophet of restoration.

33:10-11 The hope of restoration begins with a question, "How then can we survive?" Ezekiel brought a forceful and clear call to "repent, repent," the imperative form of Hebrew shuv, "turn."

33:21 The date of this message was early in 585 B.C., nearly two years after the fall of Jerusalem. The text offers no explanation for the delay of news of the fall to reach Babylon. Ezra gave the travel time as five months (Ezr 7:6-9). The news may have come from a refugee who hid along the way to avoid Babylonian troops. Another suggestion is a possible copyist's error; there is only a one-letter difference in the Hebrew spelling for the twelfth year and the tenth year. The LXX and the Syriac (Aramaic) version adopted that solution. Still another possibility is that Jerusalem's fall occurred in the summer of 586 B.C. instead of early in 587 B.C., in which case the "twelfth" year should read the "eleventh"; that would reduce the time span to six months, which better fits Ezra's timetable.

34:1-2 Chapter 34 is a sequel to the enumeration of Judah's sins in 22:1-31. Kings and leaders were often called "shepherds" in the ancient Near East. The failure of weak and corrupt "shepherds" of 22:23-31 and the false prophets of 13:1–14:11 gave way to the Lord's true shepherd promised in 34:11-31.

34:6-31 The Lord is the true Shepherd of Israel. He made clear in this passage by the use of 18 possessive pronouns such as "My flock" and "My sheep." Human shepherds were accountable to the Divine Shepherd, a concept David well understood (Ps 23:1-6). So the Lord declared that He was against the human shepherds (Ezk 34:2,10) and would be the true Shepherd. At least 25 verbal forms translated "I will" punctuate verses 10-29. These promises express the Lord's determination to personally attend His flock. His Messiah will mediate a "covenant of peace" between God and His flock (v. 25; 37:26). Ezekiel joined Jeremiah in outlining the new covenant (34:25-31; Jr 31:31-34).

35:1ff Why was another judgment message spoken against Edom? Some interpreters suggest this message was either superfluous or misplaced and should be moved, perhaps to 25:12-14. But the message indeed was appropriate as a solemn reminder of the tragedy of Esau's descendants, the Edomites. Jacob's descendents would receive the blessing Isaac gave to Jacob (Gn 27:27-29). Mention of the judgment of Edom was a reminder of Esau's loss and a fitting prelude to the restoration of Israel. The Edomites opposed Israel and finally were judged (see also Is 34:5-6; Jr 49:7-22; Ob 1; Mal 1:4).

35:5-15 What were the specific reasons for Edom's judgment? Five reasons are presented. First, Edom's hatred that had been harbored for hundreds of years after Jacob's deception of Esau (v. 5). Second, the Edomites' encouragement of Israel's enemies and participation in Israel's slaughter (v. 5; see Ps 137:7; Ob 10-14). Third, Edom's belief that the land was still theirs because Jacob obtained it by deception (Ezk 35:10; cp. Gn 27:1-40). Fourth, Edom's cursing of the mountains of Israel and denial that God gave them to Israel (Ezk 35:12). Fifth, Edom spoke defiantly and strained against God's will (v. 13).

36:1-15 This passage was a reversal of the message against the mountains in 6:1-14. It was a celebration of the repossession of the land by the Judeans returning from exile. The passage includes additional accusations against Edom. First, when the Judeans were exiled, the Edomites rushed in to claim the land for themselves (vv. 2-3,5). Second, they plundered Judah and left the land desolate (vv. 3-4). Third, they ridiculed and scorned the people of Judah (vv. 3-6,15). Consequently, God gave four promises to the Judeans who would be returning: (1) the land would again be fruitful (vv. 8-9; cp. 6:8-10); (2) all the people of Judah ultimately would return, multiply, and prosper in the land (vv. 10-11); (3) their return would be permanent (vv. 12-14); (4) the Judeans would no longer be an object of scorn by other nations (v. 15).

36:16-23 The Lord gave two reasons for restoring the "house of Israel," the religious community of Judah:(1) He restored them for the sake of His holy name, not because they deserved deliverance (vv. 21-22); (2) the restoration served notice to foreign nations thatYahweh, the God of Israel, was still in control (v. 23).

36:24-32 This passage expands on 11:14-21, the Lord's promise to the returning exiles, in a series of affirmations. (1) The Lord will honor His promises of restoration (v. 24). (2) He will cleanse the people from their idolatry (v. 25). (3) He will give them a "new heart" and "new spirit" (v. 26). (4) His Spirit will enable them to walk in His laws (v. 27). (5) They will live permanently in the land (v. 28). (6) The Lord will renew His covenant affirmation to have them as His people and be their God (v. 28; cp. Jr 31:32-33). (7) The land will again be productive (vv. 29-30; cp. Am 9:13-15). (8) The Judeans will remember their idolatry and "loathe" themselves (v. 31). (9) Their cities will be resettled (v. 33). (10) Desolate land will again be cultivated (v. 34). (11) The land will be as productive as the garden of Eden (v. 35). (12) All surrounding nations will acknowledge what Yahweh has done (v. 36). (13) He will bless and increase His people like a flock (v. 37).

37:1-14 This passage, among the best known of Ezekiel's writings today, consists of his dramatic vision for the restoration of Israel's life as a community. The restoration of Israel as a people is a fundamental component of the biblical doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. Christian interpretation views this text as part of the "buildup" to the resurrection of Jesus (the passage is read, for example, in the Easter Vigil service of many churches). The distinction sometimes drawn between national restoration (as here) and individual resurrection (as in the NT) is a distinction foreign to biblical thought with its understanding of "corporate solidarity." What happens to the head, or representative, of a community happens to all its members, so that Jesus' resurrection is also the resurrection of all who belong to Him (1 Co 15:22-23), who are the "Israel of God" (Gl 6:16). While Ezekiel's primary purpose may not have been to teach a doctrine of the resurrection, he was not alone among OT writers in being given insight into this concept. Some interpreters deny that either Ezekiel or his hearers had any developed concept about the resurrection of human life, but many OT passages suggest that there was some understanding of resurrection before and after the sixth century B.C. (e.g. Gn 22:5; Jb 19:25-29; Ps 16:10-11; 49:15; Is 26:19; Dn 12:2-3; Hs 13:14). Ezekiel's statement, "I am going to open your graves and bring you up from them" (v. 12) is a direct resurrection analogy. If the Judeans had no idea of the possibility of the resurrection of human life, the analogy would have made no sense.

38:1–39:29 Interpreters have considered these two chapters to be one of the most difficult sections of the Bible. While other approaches are possible, this discussion will take the prophecies literally as referring to a future event of history within a premillennial eschatological framework. The discussion will consider other related biblical passages.

This section is a type of prophecy called "apocalyptic," which presents its messages in symbols and cryptic characters. Generally, the prophets of the OT called for repentance and sought the reformation of human conduct. Apocalyptic prophets such as Ezekiel, Daniel, Zechariah, and John (in the book of Rv) certainly shared these spiritual goals. But they believed God's ultimate solution to evil was not reformation but revolution. They looked to the latter days when God would confront Satan and evil, transform the world, set up a perfect kingdom, and live and fellowship with His people forever.

38:1-3 Gog's identity is crucial to understanding this passage. The name Gog appears only here, in 1 Ch 5:4, and in Rv 20:8. In the book of Ch, Gog was one of the sons of Joel, a descendant of Reuben. In Rv 20:8 he was the leader of history's final battle. Suggestions of Gog's identity include: (1) a ruthless ruler of Lydia known as Gugu or Gyges; (2) a figure from ancient history called Gagu of the land of Sakhi, a region in northern Assyria; (3) an official title, like Pharaoh; (4) a general term for any enemy of God's people.

Amazingly, Babylon was not included in the judgment messages against the nations (Ezk 25:1–32:32). Gog may be a cryptogram for Babel or Babylon, which would make this section Ezekiel's missing judgment message against Babylon. Taking Gog as a cryptic symbol for Babylon fits the apocalyptic character of the book by giving it an immediate limited fulfillment in the fall of Babylon in Ezekiel's day, and a long-range complete fulfillment in the latter days. Babylon, in Scripture, is synonymous with godless government under Nimrod (Gn 10:8-10); under Nebuchadnezzar (Dn 1:1–4:37); under the "Mystery Babylon" of the last days (Rv 14:8; 17:5); and under Gog at the end of history (Rv 20:7-15).

Gog indeed may be a cryptic reference to the forces of evil foreseen by Ezekiel and already operative in the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar. The name may be from a Sumerian loan word, gug "darkness." This is a suitable synonym for the ruler of end-time "Babylon," the "ruler of this world" of Jn 12:31; 14:30, and Satan, the prince of darkness in Ac 26:18; Eph 6:12; 2 Pt 2:4 (see Mt 8:12; Lk 11:34-35; 22:53; Jn 1:5; 3:19; 8:12; 12:35,46; Rm 13:12; Col 1:13; Jd 6,13: Rv 16:10) who counterfeits himself as an angel of light (2 Co 11:14). This identification of Gog also is appropriate as a cryptic reference to Nebuchadnezzar. His father, Nabopolassar, engineered the overthrow of Assyria, the dominant world powerof the day. He accomplished it by forming an alliance with the king of Media named Cyaxares, who also helped him secure support of the Scythians to overthrow Nineveh in 612 B.C. This alliance was sealed by the marriage of his son, Nebuchadnezzar, to Amytis daughter of Cyaxares. By this arrangement Nebuchadnezzar became the prince of Meshech, Tubal, Gomer, and Togarmah (Ezk 38:2,6).

38:2 There has been a temptation among conservative scholars to associate "Rosh" with Russia. But, this identity was made more from opposing political worldviews about Russia during the twentieth century than from exegetical and lexical evidence. The word ro'sh is Hebrew for "head," "top" or "chief," meaning the first or principal thing. It is a component of the first word in the Bible, bere'shith, literally "in the head" of things—a point of absolute beginning for the created universe. The phrase should be translated "Chief" (meaning head) Prince of Meshech and Tubal, to be consistent with the Hebrew text and with the historical role of Neb-uchadnezzar as son-in-law of the king of Media.

38:4-7 These verses identify a northern confederacy of Gog's allies, nine nations that make up Gog's army amassed to obliterate Israel from the land. It is called a "huge company" (v. 4) with soldiers from Persia (Iran), Cush (Ethiopia), Put (Lybia), Gomer (Armenia), Togarmah (Armenia)—all of whom will join the armies of Gog (Iraq?), Magog (Western Asia, Sycthians?) Meshech (Armenia, Azerbaijan), and Tubal (Armenia, Azerbaijan, v. 7).

38:8-16 This battle is to take place "after a long time" and "in the . . . last days"—both consistent references to the end-time (cp. Jr 4:6,13,24-26; 5:15; 6:1,22; 10:22; 23:20; Dn 8:26; 10:14). The confederacy will come into the land "that has been restored from war and regatheredfrom many peoples," a reference to regathered Israel. Gog will devise an evil plan against Israel. According to Rv 20:1-10, this battle may be in two parts: one at the end of history (Rv 19:17-21) and one after a thousand years of peace (Rv 20:1-3). Gog and Magog, along with Satan, will be fully and finally defeated (Rv 20:7-10). Ezekiel's battle may be the first battle, or the second, or both. Gog will loot and plunder those who dwell in "open villages" at "the center" (Hb tabor), possibly the region around Mount Tabor just north of the Valley of Jezreel, site of the battle of Armageddon (Rv 16:16). Motivated by vengeance and greed, Gog will attempt the annihilation of Israel (v. 16).

38:17 Identification of the prophecies of "former times" (v. 17) has been an issue of debate. Interpreters have compared them, inconclusively, with Is 14:24-25; 26:20-21; Jr 4:5; 6:26; 30:18-24; Jl 3:9-21; Zph 1:14-18. Theexact translation of the question itself, "Are you the one I spoke about in former times through My servants?" is also in doubt. Some amend it to read "You are he . . ." assuming the introductory particle halo' ("are you not. . . ?") which is absent from the text. Whatever the case, it was a rhetorical question anticipating a positive answer. This would mean that Gog is not a divinely commissioned agent of judgment, but a perennial enemy of God and His people, an interpretation consistent with the identification of Babylon and Satan.

38:18-23 The battle is resolved through God's direct, wrathful intervention by means of a great earthquake (vv. 19-20), the sword, pestilence, bloodshed, flooding rain, hailstones, fire, and brimstone (vv. 21-22). The Lord says that He will "reveal Myself in the sight of many nations," and by this judgment all will know that "I am the LORD," Yahweh (v. 23).

39:4-9 In the end, Gog will "fall on the mountains of Israel" (v. 4), becoming a meal for predatory birds. Fire will destroy the armies of those who have profaned the Lord's holy name (vv. 7-8). Gog's weapons will be burned and it will require seven years to dispose of them (v. 9).

39:11-20 Gog's defeated armies are to be buried in the unidentified valley "east of the Sea" (v. 11). Since the Dead Sea has no large valley to its east, the sea in question would be the Mediterranean and the valley would be Jezreel, the only east-west passage to the Jordan rift. Burial takes seven months and a search party marks body parts for pickup (vv. 12-15). The bodies are buried at a site called Hamon-gog (v. 15, Hb lit. "multitude of Gog") near a city to be called Hamonah (Hb "multitude," v. 16). The Lord invites all birds of prey to the celebratory meal at "My table," to feast on the armies of Gog.

39:25-29 This message parallels 38:18-23, giving a summary of Gog's defeat and exulting in the glory ofYahweh. This passage concludes the restoration section of the book of Ezekiel that began in 33:1. It forms an appropriate prelude to the vision of the coming messianic King and kingdom in chapters 40–48.

40:1–48:35 What is the meaning of the new worship of chapters 40–48? It is fitting that the writings of Ezekiel, a priest, would conclude with the presentation of a new temple and new sacrificial system in the restoration of God's kingdom. This promise was partly realized when Israel returned after the exile and partly realized when Israel became a nation again in 1948. In a Christian interpretation, the realization is present now in the worshiping church and in the Spirit-filled life in the risen Christ which is the "Father's promise" (Ac 1:4; Gl 3:14). The final part will be realized by the rule of the Messiah in His millennial kingdom. For Ezekiel the vision was a whole and only in retrospect have stages of fulfillment been discerned.

40:1-4 Ezekiel's detailed description, including precise measurements, suggests that the prophet saw a literal future temple. No such temple has been built—neither the temple of the returned exiles nor the grand edifice erected by Herod the Great followed Ezekiel's blueprint. Many conservative scholars agree that Ezekiel's vision was for the latter days of the end time.

This is the last dated prophecy in the book, in the spring of 573 B.C. It was not the last message chronologically, as the vision of 29:17-21 is older. Ezekiel was in the twenty-fifth year of exile. In this vision he was taken to Jerusalem, 14 years after its fall (40:1), and the actual city was still in ruins. The language of this vision suggests Ezekiel believed he was seeing Jerusalem in a Jubilee Year of the latter days, evidence suggesting the advent of the millennial kingdom.

40:5-27 In the Hebrew text, all of Ezekiel's measurements are in cubits, a unit of approximately 18 inches. Ezekiel's cubit was a "royal cubit," which added a "handbreadth" or another three inches (v. 5). (To convert feet to royal cubits, divide by 1.75 or multiply by .571429.)

40:31-34,37,39-41 Many of the details of the temple complex the prophet envisioned had typological significance. Each of the gates in the inner court had eight steps instead of seven (vv. 31,34,37). Eight is a Messianic number in rabbinic literature, suggesting the Messiah is the only way of access (Ac 4:12). Details such as a washroom for cleansing sacrifices and eight slaughter tables also pointed to the work of the Messiah, the perfect sacrifice (Heb 10:10).

41:1-4 The floor plan of Ezekiel's structure was the same as that of the Solomonic temple. A porch led into an inner sanctuary known as the "most holy place," 20 by 20 cubits in Hebrew (v. 4).

42:1-14 The large building on the north side of the temple was to be reserved for the priests when they ate the communal meals from sacrifices offered on the altar (e.g. Lv 2:3,10; 6:16-18; 7:14-15). All these offerings were symbolic of Messiah (Ezk 41:13-26; Heb 10:1-39).

43:1-12 Ezekiel witnessed the return of God's glory to the temple from the Mount of Olives. The glory returned (vv. 4-5) to its place in the most holy place(1 Kg 8:10-11) as it had departed (Ezk 10:19; 11:23). The temple had deep theological significance. It was the place of God's throne, a sign of God's election of Israel and a sign of His holiness (43:7). It was a reminder of the people's sin (vv. 10-11) and a visible witness to the laws of the covenant (vv. 11-12; cp. Jr 31:31-34).

43:13-17 This section presents the dimensions of the altar of sacrifice in the restored temple. Ezekiel's blueprint raises the issue of why sacrifices would be reinstated in the end time, since Christ fulfilled them (Eph 5:2; Heb 9:26; 10:5,8,12,26). The Israelites were called to be the Lord's "kingdom of priests" (Ex 19:6) and the vehicle for His blessing on all peoples (Gn 12:3), but through the centuries their understanding of this calling became distorted under the pressures of history, especially that of foreign occupation. As a result, Israel never fulfilled its missionary purpose under the "old covenant." Interpreters who view Ezekiel's prophecy as a prediction of future, end-time events look ahead to the millennial kingdom when Israel, recognizing Jesus as the Messiah, will reestablish the sacrificial ordinances of their covenant in remembrance of His redemptive work. Other commentators, taking a different approach, see Israel's calling to be a kingdom of priests fulfilled in the church of Jesus Christ (1 Pt 2:9; Rv 5:10). In this view, Ezekiel's description of the restoredtemple, altar, and sacrifices points to the priesthood of the new covenant community.

43:18-27 This section provides Ezekiel's instructions for the consecration of the altar. The altar was the table of God where sacrifices were transformed into smoke to rise to Him (44:16; Mal 1:7,12); it was the hearth of God's house where the fire of purification burned (Ezk 43:15-16; cp. Is 6:5-6). The altar of the temple was the sign of God's presence among His people (Ezk 43:27), and was associated with holiness, purity, and mercy (43:15-21; cp. 1 Kg 1:50-51; 2:28). It was an instrument of mediation for the person bringing the offering (Ezk 40:47; 43:19), and sacrifices offered upon it were a gift to God and a form of prayer (43:27; cp. Ps 51:19; 141:2). These sacrifices were an expiation for sins committed in ignorance (Ezk 43:25-27; cp. Lv 4:2,13,22,27; 5:3-4,15,18; Nm 15:22-31).

44:1-3 Ezekiel's guide took him to the eastern gate of the temple, but he found that it was closed. It was to remain closed because the Lord entered the temple through that gate. Only the "prince" could sit in the gate to "eat a meal before the LORD," probably a communal meal (vv. 2-3). Offerings for the feast days, sacrifices, Sabbath, and other offerings were to be presented to the "prince" (nasi' "one lifted up," "chief," "prince," "captain," or "leader"; the word appears 14 times in 44:3; 45:7,16,22; 46:2,4,8,10,12,16-18; 48:21-22). The eastern gate is still walled up. In Jewish theology, it awaits the coming of the Messiah who will enter the temple area through this gate.

Some interpreters identify the "prince" as the Messiah. But since he was required to offer a sin offering for himself, he could hardly be the Messiah (45:22; 2 Co 5:21). The Messianic statement in 37:25, "My servant David will be their prince [Hb nasi'] forever," may refer both to the Messiah and to David, the "prince" who will serve as temple administrator and Messianic leader of the millennial temple.

44:4-14 Zadokite priests would be the only ones allowed to minister in the temple, according to Ezekiel's vision. Because these regulations for priests are substantively different from those in Lv, Julius Wellhausen, a prominent nineteenth-century OT scholar, used this section as evidence that the Pentateuch was compiled after the time of Ezekiel. He argued that the distinction between priests and Levites in Nm 3:1–4:49 did not come from the time of Moses but originated with Ezekiel. Wellhausen also claimed that the Levites were given an inferior place in temple service because they had administered the pagan sanctuaries where idols were worshiped (Ezk 44:10). When Hilkiah rediscovered the law (2 Kg 22:8), Josiah reformed the laws for worship and eliminated all the pagan shrines. The Levitical priests refused to cooperate (2 Kg 23:9; Ezk 44:10-15). Wellhausen claimed Ezekiel included this to discredit the Levites and establish the line of Zadok over the Levites because of their loyalty to David (2 Sm 15:24-29; 1 Kg 2:35). Wellhausen's view was taken up by other proponents of the "documentary hypothesis," the theory that the Pentateuch is a late compilation of several sources rather than a composition coming from Moses.

Wellhausen's reconstruction of history is based on unfounded presuppositions and unlikely interpretations. Certainly nothing in Ezekiel demands the view that Ezekiel was reallocating the role of the Levites (vv. 10-16; cp. 40:45-46; 45:4-5; 46:20-24). Accurate consideration of the biblical evidence doesn't support Wellhausen's conclusions. Because the priests had participated in idolatry, they were disqualified in Ezekiel's plan for temple service, as verse 15 clearly states. In spite of their participation in pagan worship, the Levites still were allowed to participate as "guards at the temple gates" but excluded from serving at the altar (vv. 10-13). While past moral failure does not exclude a person from worship or the service of God, it may preempt one from serving in a leadership role (vv. 11-14).

44:15-31 This section contains Ezekiel's regulations for the Zadokite priests. They were to teach the people the distinction between sacred and common things (v. 23) because what is "holy" is to be treated in a special way. They are to have "no possession in Israel" (v. 28), that is, no personal property, a practice still observed in the priestly ordination vows of some churches.

45:1-8 The Hebrew text gives the dimensions of the sacred district and its neighboring tracts for the new city of Jerusalem and for the prince in cubits. The district allotted to the prince extends across the land to the west (the Mediterranean) and to the east border (the Jordan and Dead Sea) between the lands of six tribes to the north and six to the south (47:21-22). Ezekiel's dimensions are rectangular and take no account of the actual topography of the land except for the boundaries (see 47:16-20).

45:9-12 This demand for honest balances and measures seems out of place amidst the priestly regulations, but it was a rebuke to the priests for use of dishonest scales for offerings brought to the temple. Old Testament writers frequently mention the abuse of standards in the marketplace (Lv 19:35; Dt 25:13-16; Pr 11:1; Am 8:5; Mc 6:10-12). Just dealings precede acceptable worship, a point Jesus also made (Mt 5:21-26).

45:13-25 The role of the prince was to administer, or arrange for, the offerings of the temple. The people were to bring him offerings for the service and upkeep of the temple. He was to regulate observance of the feast days and rites of purification for the temple (see 44:1-3). In exercising general oversight of the temple, the prince would be following the pattern of David and succeeding rulers of Judah who also provided for the ongoing worship of the sanctuary. The Hasmonean kings of independent Judah (141–37 B.C.) were also priests, administering the temple. In the NT period, Jewish princes who were client rulers of the Romans exercised general oversight of the temple (e.g., they normally nominated the high priest), even when the temple was not included in the territory they governed. If such princes considered their role to be a fulfillment of Ezekiel's vision, it was surely an inadequate one.

46:1-8 The prophet spelled out regulations for the Sabbath in great detail. Every aspect of worship in the new temple will be a celebration of the redemptive work of the Messiah. Israel will celebrate their salvation through the redemption Christ has already purchased for them.

46:19-24 Kitchens were provided in the temple courtyard so the priests could prepare their communion portion of the animal and grain offerings for their consumption. This arrangement was meant to avoid any defilement by contact with the general population.

47:1–48:35 Some interpreters consider this concluding section to be wholly symbolic. While the passage is saturated with symbolic spiritual truths of great importance, it may also be intended as a description of literal events. It is best to interpret this text allowing for both possibilities.

47:1-12 Ezekiel saw a stream of water flowing from under the threshold of the temple toward the east, then under the south wall, increasing in breadth and depth as it flowed toward the Dead Sea. Current topography of the area would preclude water flow as described here. Zechariah's vision described a cleavage in the Mount of Olives that will occur in the latter days (Zch 14:4-8); Ezekiel's vision apparently presupposed such a topographical restructuring of the region. On either side of the river grow fruit trees whose leaves perpetually provide healing (vv. 7,12). The water of the river brings life to everything it touches, including healing the uninhabitable waters of the Dead Sea, although the useful salt marshes will remain unchanged (vv. 8-11).

Ezekiel's picture of the "river of living water" forms part of the vision of the "new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven" (Rv 21:2) in the revelation to John (Rv 22:1-3). Both passages envision a new quality of life governed by the influence of the worship of God. Water, a commodity not always easy to obtain in the Near East, is a biblical symbol of life—not only physical life but life in its deeper dimension as the fulfillment of God's purpose in the human spirit. He invites all to come to the living waters available in unending supply (see Is 55:1; Jn 4:14; 6:35; 7:37-39). The "water of life" flows from the temple, and from the "throne of God and of the Lamb" (Rv 22:1) in the heavenly city. Christian worship, which celebrates the sacrifice of Christ and exalts God the Father as King, can be a release of divine power in human life—the power of the Holy Spirit—for healing, spiritual sustenance, and productive activity that blesses others. Thus interpreters can see in Ezekiel's vision a charter for the worshiping church, whose influence permeates and transforms the barrenness of surrounding cultures.

47:13-23 The new borders of the land are similar to those in Nm 34:3-12. Ezekiel may have been contemplating a return to boundaries as defined by the Lord. His vision may also have been an attempt to redefine the royal boundaries of the Davidic kingdom (2 Sm 8:1-18). The prophet defined the borders of the land to incorporate its largest geographical and political extent from the Brook of Egypt (47:19; see 2 Kg 24:6-7). Land will be distributed equitably, each tribe receiving an allotment of the same size. Ezekiel's plan also provided for aliens and proselytes who would settle in the land (47:22-23; Is 56:3-8). The boundaries between the tribal territories, and those of the sacred district, the city and the prince, ignore the actual topography of the land, suggesting either that future surface changes are to occur in the millennial era or that this is a symbolic blueprint for the reconstitution of Israel.

48:30-35 Ezekiel closed his prophecy with a marvelous vision of the new Jerusalem located foursquare in the southern sector of the sacred district. The city has 12 gates, three on each side, and is the pattern for John's vision of the Jerusalem "from God" in Rv 21:12-14. The city's name is a testimony of Yahweh's presence among His people forever: Yahweh Shammah, "The LORD is there." John's city, likewise, is the place where God will dwell among His people, to "be with them and be their God" (Rv 21:3).

The first city mentioned in the Bible came about as a result of Cain's act of rebellion (Gn 4:12-14). The final city is the city of God, His dwelling place. Ezekiel's ministry began with an awesome vision of the storm of judgment approaching a sinful nation. It closes with a glorious vision of a new people, a new land, a new worship—and in the midst of it all, "Yahweh Is There."

Daniel Articles

How Does Christianity Relate to Other Eastern Religions?

by Winfried Corduan

One of the distinctives of biblical religion is that it does not readily accommodate elements from other religions. Eastern religions, on the other hand have more flexible boundaries. For the five religions below, we will give a brief summary and a response from a biblical perspective.

1. Jainism is a popular Indian religion, similar to Hinduism and Buddhism. It was founded by a man named Mahavira in the sixth century B.C. (roughly a contemporary of Jeremiah and Daniel in the Bible). Mahavira taught that human beings need to escape from reincarnation and that they can do so by living a rigorous life of self-deprivation. The highest obligation is never to harm any living being, whether it be animal, insect, or plant. Someone who observes this duty faithfully will attain a higher state of life and, ultimately, release from reincarnation. Jains venerate Mahavira and his mythological predecessors, the Tirthankaras.

Response: The Bible teaches that humanity's main problem is not reincarnation but separation from God due to sin. Salvation cannot be earned by an ascetic life; it can only be received by faith through God's work of redemption in Christ. Christians agree with Jains that all life deserves respect, but they do so because life was created by God, not because it is inherently divine.

2. Sikhism was founded by Guru Nanak in India around A.D. 1500, contemporary with the Protestant Reformation in Europe. Nanak sought to establish harmony between Hindus and Muslims by teaching that God is beyond any human name or attribute and that true devotion to God will bring about union with Him. There were nine successive gurus after Nanak, but the last of the line declared that the Sikh holy book, the Adi Granth, would henceforth be the true guru. It has been the focus of veneration among Sikhs ever since.

Response: Christians who believe the Bible is the inspired Word of God can appreciate the Sikhs' devotion to the Adi Granth. But whereas for Sikhism their holy book itself is a sacred object, for Christians the Bible is the revelation of God's message. The Bible offers to Sikhs (and anyone else) a hope for the future and an assurance of salvation that is absent from Nanak's message.

3. Daoism (formerly spelled Taoism) is part of popular Chinese religion, originally based on some fairly esoteric philosophical writings. Its founder, the legendary Laozi (roughly sixth century B.C. again), taught that the true "Way" (the Dao) of life could be found by allowing the opposing forces of the universe—yin and yang—to find their balance. This philosophy eventually metamorphosed into a religion devoted to the service of many gods and spirits, presided over by the Jade Emperor in heaven. Religious Daoism emphasizes devotion to one's ancestors.

Response: In contrast to philosophical Daoism, the Bible asserts that good and evil are genuine realities, not just matters of cosmic imbalance. The Bible condemns all worship of creatures, including nature spirits, ancestors, or images of deities. The Christian gospel offers release from the bondage to the spirit world in which religious Daoists usually live.

4. Confucianism is the philosophy of life taught by Confucius, another sixth century B.C. figure in China. It is primarily a code of conduct for individuals and the society they comprise rather than a set of doctrines about gods or worship practices. The fundamental premise of Confucianism is that there is a proper way in which all persons should act, depending on their station in life and the specific relationship of the moment. Thus a prince lives under a different set of expectations than a common worker. The obligation of setting the right example lies with the prince; if he will set the proper example, his subject will follow him in proper behavior, and a perfect society will result. The highest Confucian virtue is filial piety, the unconditional obedience of children to their parents. Even though many Confucian ideals are outdated, the attitude of filial piety persists prominently among traditional Chinese, Japanese, and Korean people today.

Response: Christians can resonate with the Confucian commitment to a life of virtue, though they will take exception to the way it puts forms ahead of sacrificial love. Even more importantly, the Bible teaches that perfection is unattainable for human beings, who need inward reconciliation with God before outward changes in actions are possible.

5. Shinto is the national religion of Japan, worshiping spirits and deities. The Kojiki, the Shinto sacred writing, claims the emperor of Japan is a direct descendant of the sun goddess and therefore divine—a claim now officially renounced. Shinto shrines, marked by the traditional torii gate, are colorful ceremonial centers.

Response: Shinto illustrates two problems commonly addressed by the Bible: ritualism and escape into myth. By contrast, the Bible offers salvation grounded in the historical Christ, whom we can receive by faith.

What Does It Mean to Say, "Jesus Is Messiah"?

by Walter Russell

The Bible is more focused upon proving that Jesus is the Messiah than on proving that Jesus is God. While some NT passages clearly declare that Jesus preexisted as deity, dozens demonstrate that Jesus of Nazareth is the long-awaited Davidic Messiah-King of Israel. In other words, Jesus is the only one anointed with the Holy Spirit by God the Father and thereby uniquely authorized and empowered to bring about God's kingdom on earth. He is the Anointed One (Hebrew = Messiah; Greek = Christ). While His messianic identity includes His divine preexistence, this isn't the primary emphasis of the NT. That's why all four Gospels speak of Jesus' anointing (baptism) with the Holy Spirit as the beginning of His ministry as the Christ (Mt 3:13-17; Mk 1:9-11; Lk 3:21-22; Jn 1:32-34). For this reason, Christ is a title or office, not a part of Jesus' name. Whenever "Jesus Christ" or "Christ Jesus" or "Lord Jesus Christ" is used, the NT is saying, "Jesus the Messiah" or "Messiah Jesus" or "Lord Jesus the Messiah."

To understand the full significance of saying, "Jesus is Messiah," we must think primarily historically and secondarily theologically. For example, when it comes to Luke 4:16-30—Jesus' inaugural address in the Nazareth synagogue—we must think historically to understand what Jesus was claiming about Himself. He quoted from Isaiah 61:1-2, a favorite messianic passage of the Jews in Jesus' day and one of a cluster of OT passages speaking of the Spirit of the Lord anointing the Servant of the Lord to preach good news to needy people. In Luke 4:21, Jesus claimed that the Spirit anointing that Isaiah prophesied had been fulfilled in His anointing (baptism) in John the Baptist's presence a short time before (Lk 3:21-22). In other words, Jesus claimed to be the Anointed One—the Messiah of Israel. Moreover, Jesus made the unpopular point that His present messianic ministry would be gracious to Gentiles, not wreaking vengeance upon them or overthrowing Rome (Lk 4:23-30). Jesus' claims can be understood only when we see them primarily as claims to be the Messiah who is the unique representative of the Father.

Even in passages clearly emphasizing Jesus' deity (e.g., Jn 1:1-18), such a theological emphasis is secondary to the historical emphasis that the Word who preexisted as God has become flesh and dwelt among us as Messiah. The double mention of John the Baptist, Messiah's forerunner, reveals that the messianic framework is primary (Jn 1:6-8,15).

Even Jesus' miracles weren't primarily to prove His deity but to prove His Spirit-anointed identity (e.g., Jn 6:1-15). However, they prove He is the Messiah as well as God. Also, the confession Jesus spent three years soliciting from His disciples was not "You are God" (which He is) but "You are the Christ" (Mt 16:16; Mk 8:29; Lk 9:20). Moreover, rejection of Jesus' works is not a rejection of His deity per se but rather is a blasphemy against the Holy Spirit who has empowered these works by the Anointed One (Mt 12:22-32; Mk 3:20-30). Last, Jesus' resurrection is the occasion of His coronation or official installation as the messianic ruler (Ps 2, esp. vv. 7-12; Mt 28:16-20; Rm 1:1-5; Ac 13:30-33; Heb 1:1-14).

In defending Jesus' identity, we should confidently set forth, as the NT does, that "Jesus is Messiah!"

Does the Bible Teach Annihilationism?

by J. P. Moreland

Does the Bible teach that the unsaved will suffer in hell for only a time and then be annihilated? Some argue from Scripture that the flames in hell are literal and point out that flames destroy whatever they burn. Further, they claim that infinitely long punishment is disproportionate to a finite life of sin. Thus extinction is morally preferable to everlasting punishment.

The scriptural argument is weak. Clear texts whose explicit intent is to teach the extent of the afterlife overtly compare the everlasting conscious life of the saved and the unsaved (Dn 12:2; Mt 25:41,46). Moreover, the flames in hell are most likely figures of speech for judgment (cp. Heb 12:29; 2 Th 1:8). Otherwise, contradictions about hell are apparent (for example, it is dark despite being filled with flames).

The moral argument fails as well. For one thing, the severity of a crime is not a function of the time it takes to commit it. Thus rejection of the mercy of an infinite God could appropriately warrant an unending, conscious separation from God. Further, everlasting hell is morally superior to annihilation. That becomes evident from the following consideration.

Regarding the end of life, sanctity-of-life advocates reject active euthanasia (the intentional killing of a patient), while quality-of-life advocates embrace it. In the sanctity-of-life view, one gets one's value, not from the quality of one's life, but from the sheer fact that one exists in God's image. The quality-of-life advocates see the value of human life in its quality; life is not inherently valuable. Thus the sanctity-of-life position has a higher, not a lower, moral regard for the dignity of human life.

The traditional and annihilationist views about hell are expressions, respectively, of sanctity-of-life and quality-of-life ethical standpoints. After all, the grounds that God would have for annihilating someone would be the low quality of life in hell. If a person will not receive salvation, and if God will not extinguish one made in His image because He values life, then God's alternative is quarantine, and hell is certainly that. Thus the traditional view, being a sanctity-of-life and not a quality-of-life position, is morally superior to annihilationism.

Introduction to Daniel

AUTHOR

Traditionally, Christians and Jews have maintained that Daniel wrote the prophecy that bears his name in the sixth century B.C. and that his predictions are supernatural and accurate. Critical scholars disagree and hold the view (first proposed by Porphyry, a neo-Platonist, in the third century A.D.) that an anonymous Jew writing under the pseudonym Daniel produced the prophecy in its present form during the second century B.C. They argue that the book consists of non-historical tales and pseudo-prophecies. Its purpose was to encourage Jewish believers in their struggle against the Syrian-Greek tyrant Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–163 B.C.) during the Maccabean period. According to this theory, the book of Daniel is the latest of the OT Scriptures. Generally, those who advocate the Maccabean view consider chapters 7–12 essentially to be an original creation of the second-century author, who introduced his material with the "court legends" of chapters 1–6, dating to the previous century. Often this writer is identified as a member of the religious sect known as the Hasidim.

THE RELIABILITY OF DANIEL

Critics claim that the book's language, theology, position in the Hebrew Scriptures with the Writings rather than the Prophets, and inaccuracies about historical events before the second century B.C. demand a late date of composition. Evangelicals respond with the following arguments:

1. Daniel was not placed in the Writings because the book was written later or the author's prophetic credentials were in doubt. At Qumran, the religious center from which came the Dead Sea Scrolls, the prophecy enjoyed unusual prominence and both the Septuagint and Josephus (Against Apion 1.8) classified Daniel with the Prophets. Apparently those responsible for fixing the order of the Hebrew Bible did not include the book in the prophetic section because Daniel was mainly a statesman, not a preacher to the nation of Israel in the manner of Isaiah or Jeremiah.

2. Archaeological discoveries have confirmed the reliability of the book in many instances (e.g., the existence of Belshazzar). Alleged historical inaccuracies on close examination are found to be nonexistent or have reasonable explanations.

3. Daniel's Hebrew is consistent with a sixth century date (it resembles the Hebrew of Ezekiel), and his Aramaic exhibits striking parallels with that of the Elephantine Papyri, also written in imperial Aramaic and dated to the fifth century B.C. By contrast, the Aramaic of the book does not conform to later samples of the language found at Qumran (e.g., Genesis Apocryphon). Critical assertions that the book's Persian and Greek loan words require a late date will be discussed in the notes at 3:2 and 3:5.

4. The theological argument is one of the most precarious proofs for dating any biblical book. If Daniel is dated to the sixth century by other objective criteria, alleged late theology in the book (e.g., teaching about angels, the Messiah, and the end times) is sixth-century theology.

Arguments for the traditional view include these points:

1. The NT writers and Jesus Himself accepted the traditional understanding of the prophecy (cp. Mt 24:15 and Mk 13:14; Mt 26:64 and Mk 14:62 and Lk 22:69; Heb 11:33-34).

2. The book professes to have been written by Daniel (see 7:1; 12:4), to be an account of a historical individual who experienced the exile and lived in Babylon, and to predict future events (e.g., 2:29-45; 7:2,15-27; 8:15-26; 9:24-27; 10:14; 11:2–12:4).

3. One of the eight manuscripts of Daniel discovered at Qumran (4QDan^{c}) has been dated to about 125 B.C. and may have been written earlier. Some scholars have argued that there would have been insufficient time for the book of Daniel to have gained such widespread acceptance if it were written only 40 years previously.

4. The Septuagint was the Greek translation of the OT produced in Alexandria, Egypt, that came to be used widely by the Jews of the Diaspora. Scholars generally agree that at least the Pentateuch (first five books) was translated in the middle of the third century B.C., but it is likely that all the Bible books were translated into Greek about the same time. If so, a second century date for Daniel is impossible. According to the critical view, only 30 years after it was written, the book of Daniel was received into the canon and carried to Alexandria, approximately 300 miles away, and there translated into Greek. Such a proposal seems unlikely.

5. Ezekiel, the sixth-century prophet, mentioned Daniel three times in his book (Ezk 14:14,20; 28:3)—seemingly clear verification of the traditional view. Critical scholars, however, insist Ezekiel was speaking of a mythological hero named Danel who appears in the ancient Ugaritic epic "The Tale of Aqhat." A decisive argument against such a theory is that the epic Danel was an idolater, hardly a model of faithfulness to Israel's God. Ezekiel must have been referring to the author of the book of Daniel. If so, the historicity of Daniel and his book would seem to be established.

THE APOCALYPTIC GENRE

Daniel (specifically chaps. 7–12) is the classic example of the apocalyptic genre. The term apocalyptic is derived from a Greek word apokalupsis, meaning "revelation, disclosure." In this genre (type of literature), a divine revelation is given to a prophet through a mediator concerning future events. Symbolism and numerology are often used. Apocalyptic literature's major theme is the triumph of the kingdom of God over the kingdoms of earth at the end of time. Critical scholars view apocalyptic merely as a literary technique used to convey a writer's theology of future hope, not as a record of actual supernatural visions given by God about the future. Evangelical scholars differ on specific interpretations of Daniel's apocalyptic passages but agree that biblical apocalyptic grants the world an authentic glimpse of God and the future.

An unusual feature of the book is that it is written in two languages—Daniel 1:1–2:4a and 8:1–12:13 are in Hebrew and Daniel 2:4b–7:28 is in Aramaic. Critics insist that the use of Aramaic reflects a late date (when Aramaic had replaced Hebrew) but offer no convincing explanation as to why only a portion of the book is written in Aramaic. Chapter 7 (Aramaic) seems particularly problematic for the critical position since it is the same literary genre (apocalyptic vision) as chapters 8–12 (Hebrew). The most satisfying proposal is that Daniel wrote in Aramaic (the common language of that region in that period) the parts of the book with universal appeal or special significance for the Gentile nations and employed Hebrew in sections more applicable to the Jewish people.

Eight manuscripts of the text of Daniel have survived two millennia in the caves of Qumran. They were produced sometime between the second century B.C. and the first century A.D. These fragments demonstrate the Qumran community's high regard for the book of Daniel and the faithfulness with which the biblical text was preserved over the centuries.

Daniel Study Notes

1:1 Some commentators deny the historicity of this invasion, yet Babylonian documents record that Nebuchadnezzar defeated the Egyptians at Carchemish in late spring of 605 B.C. and quickly subdued northern Syria. Immediate threats against Egyptian allies such as Judah's king Jehoiakim (2 Kg 23:34) would be expected, and the Babylonian priest-historian Berosus (c. 300 B.C.) reported that Nebuchadnezzar took Jewish captives in his 605 B.C. campaign (Josephus, Against Apion 1.19). Jeremiah dates the battle of Carchemish to Jehoiakim's fourth year (Jr 46:2), whereas Daniel (Dn 1:1) places the siege of Jerusalem, which took place shortly after that battle, in Jehoiakim's third year. During this period the Jews used both the Babylonian spring and Judean fall calendars (cp. Ezk 29:17; 30:20; 32:17 where the "first month" reflects a spring new year). The months between Nisan (March–April) and Tishri (September–October) 605 B.C., when the events took place, fell in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign according to the Babylonian calendar but were still in Jehoiakim's third year following the Judean system. Nebuchadnezzar was crowned "king of Babylon" subsequent to the siege of Jerusalem, but Daniel wrote after Nebuchadnezzar's coronation and likely spoke of the king's position from the standpoint of a later time (also Jr 46:2). Moreover, a Jewish writer could appropriately refer to the crown prince as king because father-son co-regencies were commonplace in Judah.

In the Hebrew Bible, this book is not in the Prophets section but the Writings section, following the five "Scrolls" or megillot (Ru, Sg, Ec, Lm, Est).

1:2 By the use of the title "Lord" (Hb 'adonai, "owner, ruler, sovereign"), Daniel emphasized the sovereignty of his God, the dominant theme of the book. References to Daniel's "God" throughout the prophecy read "the God" (lit. "from the house of the God") in the Hebrew-Aramaic text, apparently to underscore that Yahweh was the true God and Babylon's deities were merely lifeless idols. The consistent use of the prefixed definite article when referring to Israel's God is further evidence of the book's literary unity.

1:3 A century and a half earlier, Isaiah warned Hezekiah that some of his descendants would be carted off as officials to Babylon (Is 39:7)—an amazing example of fulfilled prophecy.

1:5 Tablets listing the provisions allotted to the exiled King Jehoiachin (2 Kg 25:30; Jr 52:34) have been uncovered in Babylon and corroborate Daniel's testimony that captives were assigned royal rations. The Babylonian training period of three years was apparently similar to that of the Persians. Plato wrote that Persian youths began their education when 14 (Alcibiades 1.121), and Xenophon testified that they finished when 16 or 17 (Cyropaedia 1.2.8). According to the Persian Avesta, a Zoroastrian scripture, a student trained with a religious teacher for three years.

1:6 Omission of the fathers' names of Daniel and his friends was not a failure in historical accuracy. The fathers' names of Habakkuk, Haggai, and many others whose historicity is beyond dispute are not disclosed.

1:7 Dual names were not uncommon in ancient times. Pharaoh assigned Joseph an Egyptian name (Gn 41:45), and Hadassah is better known by her Persian name, Esther (Est 2:7).

1:8 Critics who consider Daniel a fictional story from a later time maintain that this moral test reflects the pressure to forsake the Mosaic dietary laws during the reign of the Seleucid (see Dn 2:31-43) ruler Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175-163 B.C.), who attempted to stamp out Judaism in the Syrian Empire. Dietary laws were an issue during these persecutions (1 Maccabees 1:62-63), but keeping kosher practices when in foreign lands has been a challenge for Jewish people from the sixth century B.C. onward.

1:15 The improvement in the Hebrew youths' appearance after only 10 days may be attributed to God's special intervention, or to their improved diet through following His directives in the Torah.

1:18 In the ancient texts, usually in Jr, and always in Ezk,the Babylonian king's name is spelled Nebuchadrezzar (with an r). In Dn, 2 Kg, Jr (8 times), 1 and 2 Ch, Ezr, Neh, and Est the spelling is Nebuchadnezzar (with an "n"). The rendition with an "r" is closer to the Babyloni-an name, Nabu-kudurri-usur ("O Nabu [the god], protect the offspring/boundary,"). For this reason some critics deem the spelling Nebuchadnezzar in Dn incorrect. However, the change from "r" in Akkadian and Aramaic to "n" in Hebrew was an accepted literary practice.

1:21 Some commentators allege that this verse is saying that Daniel died in the first year of Cyrus, in contradiction to 10:1 which reports that Daniel was living in Cyrus's third year. But this verse says nothing of Daniel's death. It simply notes that Daniel was still alive in the first year of King Cyrus, perhaps emphasizing that he survived his Babylonian masters.

2:1 How could Daniel have finished a three-year training program by Nebuchadnezzar's second year if he was captured in the year that Nebuchadnezzar became king (605 B.C.)? During this period the Babylonians used the accession-year dating method whereby the king's first year did not begin until after the new year. Thus, Daniel's first year of captivity corresponded to Nebuchadnezzar's accession year, his second year of captivity to the king's first regnal year, and so forth. Moreover, Daniel did not have to train three full years; according to Hebrew usage a part of a year could be counted as a whole (cp. the "three days" between Jesus' death and resurrection [Jn 2:19-21], which was actually on the third day [1 Co 15:4]).

2:2 In this book, "Chaldeans" may refer to the Babylonian people generally (1:4; 5:30; 9:1) or to a professional group of priests or wise men (2:2,4,5,10; 3:8; 4:7; 5:7,11). Critics insist that the term was not used in the professional sense until the Hellenistic age when Greek culture spread throughout the region with Alexander's conquests of the fourth century B.C. Yet Herodotus (Histories 1.181-83) wrote of the Chaldeans as priests of Bel about 450 B.C., less than a century after Daniel's death. Sorcery (also called "witchcraft," Nah 3:4) was widespread in the ancient world but was severely condemned in the OT (Ex 7:11; 22:18; Dt 18:10; Is 47:9,12; Jr 27:9; Mal 3:5). The book of Daniel accurately reflects how pervasive astrology, sorcery and other occult practices were in sixth-century Babylon.

2:4 From this point through 7:28 the book was written in Aramaic rather than Hebrew. The term "Chaldeans" may indicate that the would-be dream interpreters spoke to the king in Aramaic, the diplomatic language of the Babylonian and Persian Empires and throughout the region.

2:5 Herodotus, the Greek historian, related a similar instance in which Darius I (about 100 years later) massacred his wise men with the result that the group was almost annihilated (Histories 3.79). Examples of houses and temples being made into refuse sites or public toilets as a mark of contempt are also known from ancient times; Jehu did the same to the temple of Baal in Samaria (2 Kg 10:27).

2:27 Astrology may be traced back to earliest antiquity and was highly regarded in Babylon. The Tower of Babel, "with its top in the sky" (Gn 11:4), may have been planned as an elevated map of the heavens for the purpose of seeking advice from the stars. The practice was implicitly condemned by the prophets' ridicule of it (Is 47:13; Jr 10:2) and Daniel's repeated emphasis on its failure to afford divine wisdom (2:27; 4:7; 5:7-8).

2:28 Daniel's statement "But there is a God in heaven," the overriding theme of the Bible, was a direct challenge to atheism and agnosticism. God's reality is attested by His creation (e.g., Rm 1:19-20), His wondrous acts in history, His supernatural revelation —the Bible—and the Spirit's witness in the hearts of those who know Him (e.g., 1 Co 2:9-10).

2:31-43 The different materials of the statue represent four world empires. Interpreters who view Dn as taking a long-range view have usually identified these kingdoms as the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greek, and Roman. Critical scholars who view Dn as a work from the second century B.C. generally consider the empires to be Babylon, Media, Persia, and Greece—the empire of Alexander the Great of Macedonia, whose far-flung empire was divided into four major parts (cp. "a divided kingdom," v. 41) after his death in 323 B.C. On this view the final kingdom, to be crushed and replaced by God's eternal kingdom, would be the regime of the Seleucid ruler Antiochus IV Epiphanes. By this argument these critics assign the writing of Dn to the period of Antiochus's persecution. To make the Greek Empire the last in the series, they claim that Daniel's author artificially partitioned the Medo-Persian Empire into two consecutive world empires, the Median and the Persian. The traditional interpretation (Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome) conforms to the text of Daniel, which considers the Medo-Persian Empire as one (e.g., "law of the Medes and Persians" in 6:8,12,15; cp. 8:20). It is supported by other OT testimony (2 Ch 36:22-23; Ezr 1:1-4), the historical record, and more than two millennia of Jewish (Talmud, medieval Jewish commentators, etc.) and Christian (Church fathers, Jerome, Calvin, etc.) interpretation.

2:44 According to some critics, the author of Dn predicted that God's kingdom "that will never be destroyed" would appear with the collapse of the Seleucid dynasty. As the record of history shows that did not occur, therefore these commentators assert that this prophecy was in error. But if the fourth kingdom referred to Rome, not Greece, the difficulty disappears. Jesus Christ set up His spiritual kingdom (e.g., Jn 18:36-37) in the Roman period and will establish a direct rule at His second coming (which some suggest will involve a later form of the Roman Empire).

2:46 Skeptics claim the king's response is implausible, but Nebuchadnezzar had just witnessed a miracle (vv. 10-11). No record exists from the ancient Near East of a wise man revealing the content of someone else's dream.

3:1 Ancient rulers commonly constructed large statues (e.g., the Great Sphinx in Egypt), and Herodotus wrote that a solid gold statue of Bel (Marduk) in Babylon stood 18 feet high.

3:2 Some commentators claim that Persian loan words (including some titles for officials listed in chap. 3) indicate a late date for the book. But Daniel completed his book after the Persian conquest of Babylon and even served in the new administration, so the presence of Persian loan words is not surprising. The Persian expressions are, in fact, strong evidence for a date of composition not long after the Babylonian exile, since they are old Persian words that ceased to be used by about 300 B.C.

3:5 Typically, interpreters who advocate a date for Daniel's composition in the Hellenistic period point to three Greek loan words in chap. 3 (vv. 5,7,10,15) as evidence favoring their view. One of these Greek terms (kitharis "zither") is documented in Homer (eighth century B.C.). The others (psalterion "harp"; symphonia "drum") are not attested in Greek until after the sixth century B.C., but this argument from silence does not mean they were unknown in Babylon at the time. Archaeology has demonstrated extensive Greek trade and influence in the Near East during this period, and Greek mercenaries even served in Nebuchadnezzar's army. Conversely, the meager number of Greek terms in the book of Daniel is one of the more convincing arguments that the prophecy was not composed in the second century during the height of the influence of Greek culture.

3:6 Burning, as a form of execution, was a practice of Babylonian rulers. According to Jr 29:22, Nebuchadnezzar burned to death two men named Zedekiah and Ahab. Burning as a penalty for certain crimes appears twice in the Code of Hammurabi, the system of law set forth by that Babylonian king (eighteenth century B.C.). Another early Babylonian monarch, Rim-Sin, also punished in this manner.

3:12 Critics who question the authenticity of the book of Daniel point to the omission of his name here as evidence that the story of the three Judean youths was a legend that had circulated independently of the other narratives in the book. They assert that the author conflated older tales into one story to inspire faithfulness during the persecutions of Antiochus IV. Such a conjecture has no objective support. Daniel's responsibilities as "ruler over the entire province of Babylon and chief governor over all the wise men of Babylon" likely required his presence at the palace (2:48).

3:17 The Judeans had no doubts about God's existence or power to deliver. Their statement, "If the God we serve exists, then He can rescue us," did not suggest any uncertainty on their part about the reality of God; it means only that they were leaving the matter of their deliverance to His sovereign will. The verse may also be rendered "If it happens [that we are thrown into the furnace], our God whom we serve can rescue us."

3:25 Grammatically, the text may be translated "a son of the gods" or "the Son of God" (KJV). In this context, the HCSB rendering is to be preferred since the polytheistic Nebuchadnezzar had no conception of the Christian Trinity nor of Jesus Christ as the Son. The pagan king recognized that the being in the fire was divine; inscriptions found in excavations of ancient Ugarit (Ras Shamra, on the coast of Syria) use this expression to designate members of the court of the gods. Nebuchadnezzar's use of the phrase in a pagan sense does not mean that the person in the fire was not Christ. Most likely, He was the fourth man in the furnace. Indeed, the pre-incarnate Christ appeared to other individuals in the OT (e.g., Gn 18:1-2,10).

3:29 Nebuchadnezzar's decree shows that he, unlike modern skeptics, accepted the truth that God can miraculously deliver His people. In this he was in agreement with the biblical view that God can override what is seemingly a closed system of cause and effect in the physical world. The angel Gabriel told Mary, "For nothing will be impossible with God" (Lk 1:37); Jesus Himself affirmed, "With God all things are possible" (Mt 19:26).

4:16,32-33 Nebuchadnezzar's appalling illness resembles a well-documented psychological malady known as lycanthropy (lit. "wolf-man"), although there is insufficient detail in the text to assume that he suffered from that particular condition.

4:30 Historical sources (e.g., Herodotus, Berosus, cuneiform inscriptions) and archaeological excavations have substantiated Nebuchadnezzar's claim concerning Babylon's grandeur and the king's extensive building program. Ancient Greeks regarded Babylon's famous Hanging Gardens as one of the "seven wonders of the world," and bricks from ancient Babylon are stamped with Nebuchadnezzar's name.

4:34-37 Critical scholars consider this section to be literary fiction derived from the same source as the "Prayer of Nabonidus," an Aramaic fragment discovered at Qumran near the Dead Sea in 1952 (known in scholarship as 4QPrNab). Though affinities exist between chapter 4 and that document, they are far outweighed by the differences (e.g., the name of the king, the nature of the illness, and the location). The Nabonidus story is doubtless a distorted version or later application of the biblical narrative. Apocryphal imitations of canonical works were common during the intertestamental period, and several others grew up around the book of Daniel (e.g., Prayer of Azariah, Susanna, Bel and the Dragon). Although these works drew material from biblical sources, they are clearly fictional.

5:1 Until the latter half of the nineteenth century, Belshazzar's name was unattested except for the book of Daniel and works dependent on it (Baruch, Josephus). From other sources Nabonidus was known to have been the last king of Babylon, and some critics declared Belshazzar to be fictional. However, during the past 150 years abundant evidence has come to light (at least 37 archival texts) demonstrating that Belshazzar was a real person, the son of Nabonidus and ruler of Babylon during his father's extended absences.

5:2 "His predecessor" literally reads "his father" in the Aramaic text. Nebuchadnezzar is called Belshazzar's predecessor six times in this chapter (vv. 2,11,13,18), and the king is designated as the "successor" (literally, "son") of Nebuchadnezzar once (v. 22). Babylonian sources record that Belshazzar was the son of Nabonidus. The apparent discrepancy may be explained by the use of the terms predecessor (or father) and successor (or son) in the Semitic languages. "Predecessor" could refer to one's immediate father, grandfather, ancestor, or as in the case of kings, the immediate predecessor. Likewise "successor" may mean one's immediate offspring, grandson, descendant, or the immediate successor. An example of the latter is Jehu's designation as the "son of Omri" in the Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser III. It is likely that Nabonidus wed a daughter of Nebuchadnezzar, making the great king both Belshazzar's "predecessor" and grandfather.

5:7 The fact that Belshazzar could offer only the "third highest position in the kingdom" (5:16,29) is evidence that the author of Daniel had accurate knowledge of Nabonidus. Nabonidus was first in rank, followed by his son Belshazzar and then the decipherer of the handwriting would be third in rank.

5:30 Xenophon mentions that Babylon's Medo-Persian invaders "avenged themselves upon the wicked king" (Cyropaedia 7.5.32), meaning they executed Belshazzar.

5:31 According to the Nabonidus Chronicle, Babylon fell to the Medo-Persians on the sixteenth of the month Tishri, in the autumn of 539 B.C. The Greek historians Herodotus and Xenophon supply fascinating details about Babylon's fall. The Nabonidus Chronicle and the Cyrus Cylinder both agree with Daniel that Babylon was captured without a major battle and that the citizens readily accepted Persian rule (6:1-3).

6:1 Critical scholars judge Darius the Mede (see 5:31) to be literary fiction, pointing out that no such name has been discovered in ancient texts. They claim the Jewish author conflated details about Cyrus (559–530 B.C.) and Darius I (522–486 B.C.) into his imaginary monarch. Such arguments from silence are notoriously precarious. Skeptics once confidently declared Belshazzar to be a fictional character as well. Scholars who accept the historicity of Daniel's account usually identify Darius the Mede as a governor of Babylon (Gubaru=Gobryas) or as Cyrus himself. Lesser rulers were often spoken of as kings in ancient times, and dual names for kings were common. Either explanation is historically feasible.

Ancient records vary in the exact number of Persian satrapies. "Satrap" means "protector of the kingdom"; Xenophon and other Greek historians applied the term to lower officials. Daniel apparently used it in similar fashion.

6:7 "Petitions any god or man" signifies religious petitions to the gods or their earthly representatives, the priests. Darius did not proclaim himself to be a god and forbid the worship of other gods. Rather, during this 30-day period, he intended to act as mediator for the gods of all the nations subject to him.

6:8 Critics have challenged Daniel's statement that "a law of the Medes and Persians" was "irrevocable" and could not "be changed" (see Est 1:19; 8:8), but Diodorus Siculus (17.30) reported that Darius III (336–330 B.C.) executed an innocent man because he could not change what had been decreed by royal authority. The phrase "a law of the Medes and Persians" (Dn 6:8,12,15; see Est 1:19; 8:8), shows that Daniel knew the Medo-Persian Empire existed jointly, and not as a separate Median Empire followed by a Persian Empire as some critics allege (see Dn 2:31-43).

7:3 Commentators generally interpret these "four huge beasts" in the same manner as the four parts of the statue described in chapter 2—the head of gold and the first beast symbolize the Babylonian Empire, and so on (see 2:31-43).

7:6 In Scripture, "heads" may represent rulers or governments (e.g., Is 7:8-9; Dn 2:38; Rv 13:1,3). Daniel predicted that this one kingdom (the "leopard") would ultimately evolve into four ("four heads"). Alexander the Great, ruler of Macedonia, spread Greek rule throughout the eastern Mediterranean region and as far eastward as Persia (modern Iran). After he died in 323 B.C., his generals—after extended internal struggle—carved his empire into four parts (cp. 8:8 with 8:21-22). No fourfold division of the Persian kingdom existed at any time throughout its history, compelling evidence against the proposal that the third beast symbolizes Persia.

7:13-14 "One like a son of man" has been interpreted in three primary ways—as an angel (Michael), a personification of the people of God (Israel), and the Messiah. The NT apostles (see Jn 12:34) and Christ Himself (Mk 14:61-62) confirm the latter view, specifically that the "son of man" is Jesus of Nazareth. Early post-biblical Jewish literature (e.g., 1 Enoch 46:1; 48:10; 4 Ezra 13) also reflects the messianic view. That the "son of man" of verse 13 was considered a divine personage is affirmed by the high priest's charge of blasphemy (Mk 14:64) when Jesus identified Himself as the One "coming with the clouds of heaven" (Mk 14:62). Jesus' use of this title for Himself is one of the strongest evidences that He claimed to be the Messiah. "Son of man" is especially common in eschatological passages (see, e.g., Mt 16:27,28; 19:28; 24:30; 25:31), and the phrase "a son of man coming with the clouds of heaven" is an allusion to the second advent of Christ, as Mt 24:30 makes clear.

7:26-27 Critical scholars claim that here, as elsewhere, the author erroneously predicted the end of the age in his own day—the reign of Antiochus IV. Yet Jewish believers would never have received the book of Daniel into the canon of Scripture if it contained such a blatant prophetic failure (see Dt 18:21-22). Daniel was looking ahead to the coming of the Messiah in great glory at the end of this present age (cp. Dn 7:13-14 with Mt 24:30).

8:1-2 Some critics have argued that Susa (Hb shushan), the capital of Elam, did not exist in Belshazzar's third year, because the Assyrian King Ashurbanipal had destroyed the city around 640 B.C. However, it is known that Nabopolassar (626–605 B.C.)

restored the Elamite gods from Uruk to Susa, and Jeremiah indicated in prophecies delivered around 596 B.C. that Elam had again become a relatively strong nation (Jr 49:34-39). In any case, the condition of the city makes little difference because Daniel apparently visited Susa in vision only.

8:3-14 Here Daniel predicted Alexander the Great's conquests 200 years beforehand, and Antiochus's persecutions 350 years in advance (vv. 20-26).

9:1 Critics equate the Darius of this verse with Darius I and Ahasuerus with Xerxes I, as in the book of Esther, and then charge the writer with several major historical blunders. Darius I was the father, not the son, of Xerxes I and both were of Persian, rather than Median, lineage. If Darius the Mede was someone other than Darius I, as is the case (see 6:1), such criticisms are without foundation.

9:2 Jeremiah first prophesied Judah's 70-year captivity period in 605 B.C. (Jr 25:11-12; 29:10), and Cyrus issued the decree releasing the captives around 538 B.C. Considering that 70 years is a round number, Jeremiah's prediction is an astounding testimony to God's omniscience (see Jr 29:10 for discussion of the 70-year number).

9:24-27 Some commentators interpret the "seventy weeks" as weeks of years (a total of 490 years) beginning in 586 B.C. with the fall of Jerusalem and terminating with the cessation of Antiochus's persecution in 164–3 B.C. At that time the kingdom of God would arrive. Thus, these critics argue, the author was mistaken about the arrival of the kingdom of God and miscalculated the time span represented by the weeks by approximately 67 years. Traditionally, Christians have held that the prophecy predicts Christ's coming, although there is disagreement as to whether the 70 weeks culminate with His first or second advent. There is also uncertainty about when to begin the count. John Chrysostom (A.D. 345–407), for example, did not take Jeremiah's prophecy of 29:10 (see Dn 9:2) as the reference point, but the "issuing of the decree to restore and rebuild Jerusalem" by Cyrus at the end of the Babylonian exile (Discourse 5.10.3). He therefore understood the rebuilding of Jerusalem to be that under Nehemiah a half-century later, and the destruction of the sanctuary (Dn 9:26) to be that under the Romans—Pompey (63 B.C.) and Vespasian and Titus (A.D. 70). However Daniel's scheme is calculated, it seems clear that only the Messiah is able to bring about the cessation of sin, the establishment of righteousness, and the consecration of the sanctuary associated with the end of the 70 weeks (v. 24).

10:12-14 The angel's delay does not signify that God's will can be thwarted, even temporarily. In this case the delay was permitted within God's divine plan, possibly to accomplish some work in Daniel's spiritual life as he prayed and fasted (vv. 2-3).

11:2 Xerxes I (486–465 B.C.) is unmistakably identified as the fourth Persian king by the description of his great wealth and expedition against Greece. This astonishing prediction by Daniel is one of more than 130 prophecies in the first 35 verses that are validated by a review of the history of the period. God's omniscience and omnipotence (power over history) are unmistakably set forth in this chapter.

11:3-35 Critical scholars point to the great number of historical details in Daniel regarding events in the Greek period, particularly the persecutions of Antiochus IV (175–163 B.C.) in verses 21-35, as proof that the book must have been written in the second century B.C. In light of the book's claims and other compelling evidence, only an a priori assumption that inspired predictive prophecy is impossible could rule out this text being a preview of future history written by Daniel in the sixth century B.C.

11:36 At this point the writer introduces a king who will rule "at the time of the end" (v. 40). His reign of terror ushers in a "time of distress" unparalleled in human history (12:1; see Mt 24:21,29-31), and the resurrection of the saints takes place immediately after God delivers His people from this evil king's power (12:2). This king cannot be Antiochus IV (certainly not in vv. 40-45) but is an evil, tyrannical figure of the end of the age. This identification conforms to the description of this figure presented elsewhere in the Bible (see 7:8-11,20-27; 2 Th 2:3-10; Rv 13:4-8; 19:19-20) and has been widely accepted throughout church history (e.g., Chrysostom, Jerome, Theodoret, Luther). The sudden leap forward in time from Antiochus IV (v. 35) to the eschatological opponent of God's faithful people (v. 36) is consistent with other leaps in time earlier in the chapter (vv. 2-3).

11:45 Some interpreters maintain that the author erroneously predicted that Antiochus IV would "meet his end" in Palestine when, in reality, the Syrian king died in Persia. Therefore they take this passage (which they view as original with the author of Dn) to be a precise indicator that the book was written in 164 B.C., just before Antiochus's death. Of course, such critics disavow the validity of future prophecy and have no compunctions about declaring that the author was mistaken. But if the king in question is not Antiochus IV but the end-time ruler who will persecute the faithful, no historical difficulty exists. The Apostle John also affirms that this figure, whoever he is, will meet his end in the land of Israel (Rv 16:13-16; 19:19-20; cp. Ezk 39:4).

12:2-3 Verse 2 is generally considered to be the OT's plainest reference to the resurrection of the faithful (cp. v. 13), though the idea occurs in several earlier passages (Jb 19:26; Ps 17:15; Is 26:19; cp. Ezk 37:11-13). At one time it was common for critical commentators to credit the author of Daniel with the first unmistakable teaching about life after death. Yet recent studies, particularly in linguistic parallels in texts from Ugarit(c. thirteenth century B.C.), have demonstrated that such a belief is very ancient in Israel. Critical suggestions of an origin for the Hebrew doctrine of the resurrection in the Zoroastrian religion of Persia have been shown to have no real basis.

12:11-12 Commentators who relate the book of Daniel to the events of the persecution under Antiochus IV Epiphanes theorize that the 1,290 and 1,335 days were adjustments to the author's previous failed predicted time until the end of 1,260 days (cp. v. 7 with Rv 12:6,14). Perhaps the extra days signify the time in which the Lord will judge the nations and officially inaugurate His kingdom. Those who reach the 1,335 days are "blessed" because they will enter the greatest period in human history—the Messianic Age.

Hosea Articles

Does the "New Physics" Conflict with Christianity?

by Jeremy Royal Howard

The Bible portrays God as a rational Being who created the world from nothing and rules over it as Sovereign. Logic, order, purpose, natural law—these qualities are etched into the universe as reflections of the will and mind of God. Moreover, God made humans in His own image, which means our minds are equipped to operate according to God's rationality. Finally, since God is the author of the world and humanity, we are intellectually ready-made to understand truth about God and the world He made.

Some people say quantum mechanics (QM) refutes these beliefs. QM studies the bits of matter that are the size of atoms and smaller. It was long assumed that these micro-objects would follow the physical laws Newton described, but modern research shows that quantum entities behave far differently than the objects of our everyday experience. For example, photons (light) can take the form of particles or waves. However, the problem is that waves and particles are contrary things. Waves cover a wide zone, but particles can only be at one tiny place at a time. Physicists are baffled that photons can do both. Next, tests reveal that in laboratory settings, quantum particles separated by a vast expanse can still affect one another as if they are in direct contact. This is like scratching someone's back from two thousand miles away. Finally, experiments suggest that quantum entities behave lawlessly, meaning there are no "rules" for their actions.

These oddities prompt some observers to conclude that QM overturns natural law and rationality, leaving us with an incomprehensible, uncreated universe. Standard physics says matter can be neither created nor destroyed by natural means, but some scientists (falsely) claim that quantum particles naturally pop in and out of existence. From this, leading atheists claim the whole universe "sprang" into existence naturally. No Creator necessary. Furthermore, they say that even if God exists and created the universe, QM shows He made a world He cannot control. Once He uncorked this world, not even God knows what will come of it. Theologians who favor science fads over Scripture conclude the same thing: QM implies God cannot govern creation or know the future.

Scientists have historically taken the appearance of mystery or irrationality in nature as a sign that they do not yet know enough about the object under study. However, following the lead of Niels Bohr's Copenhagen Interpretation (CI) of QM, many physicists refuse to count their inability to understand or predict quantum action as a sign of ignorance. Rather, they claim QM is basically a finished science that reveals a genuinely lawless and irrational world—a brooding cauldron of chance actions and purposeless conclusions. This fits well with non-Christian concepts of the universe. In fact, Bohr and his colleagues enthusiastically asserted that QM endorses Eastern worldview images. Today, popular science opinion is captive to Bohr's CI, and thus holds that QM supports New Age or atheistic worldviews.

I suggest the following starting points for the Christian response: First, for all the wild attributes that may hold true in QM, we note that macroscopic reality behaves in a predictable, law-like fashion and everywhere presents us with evidence of its fundamentally rational construction and operation. So even if quantum particles could do lawless things like pop in and out of existence naturally, no such thing happens in the realm of everyday objects. Quantum oddities, whatever you make of them, are detained at the door to the larger realities we experience.

Second, many of the astounding behaviors attributed to QM occur only in highly artificial laboratory settings. There is no certainty that these things can actually happen in real-world settings. Thus, we are justified in casting an indifferent eye on many of the zany headlines coming from physics laboratories.

Third, science's ability to penetrate the microphysical world is still very rudimentary. This leaves room for exceptionally high degrees of speculation and error. In this light, Christians should join the chorus of noteworthy scientists (like Einstein) who have insisted that QM should not be the basis for worldview assertions. This problem will apparently not be fully alleviated in the future, for scientists acknowledge that the mega-scale facilities and energies required to verify the most important claims of QM will forever lie outside our reach.

Fourth, science would be impossible if this world were not created by a personal, rational Being who designed both physical reality and human beings to reflect His rationality. Any scientific theory that supports non-rational worldviews is self-defeating. After all, the deliberations involved in reaching the conclusion that "this world is fundamentally irrational" have relied on the very rationality whose legitimacy is denied in the conclusion.

Finally, a growing body of experts believes the CI will someday fall out of scientific favor, thus shifting the dominant paradigm of QM to models supporting rationality and natural law. Whether or not this happens, Christians can rest assured that this world is the creation of a rational God who rules as Sovereign over all things, including the wily objects of the quantum realm.

Besides QM, some suggest Chaos Theory and Special Relativity impinge on the Christian worldview. Special Relativity shows there are no fixed reference points in the universe. All motion or apparent non-motion is relative to a specific frame of reference. Some have imagined that this undermines our ability to form fixed judgments that apply universally, but of course our inability to do this in physics is irrelevant to our assurance about unalterable, universal truths revealed by God. As for Chaos Theory, the name itself is deceptive. Properly understood, it only says that many deterministic physical systems are so sensitive to initial conditions that we cannot fully predict their future behaviors unless we perfectly comprehend all of those conditions. Hence it is our ignorance, not creation itself, which sets up the appearance of chaos in physics.

In summary, the new physics highlights human finitude but does nothing to overturn God as Author and Ruler of creation.

Introduction to Hosea

AUTHOR

Hosea addressed the nation of Israel when it was in a great struggle between those who worshiped the Lord only and those who advocated the worship of other gods in addition to the Lord. Hosea used many strange and harsh metaphors, writing most of his message in a powerful but sometimes obscure poetic form.

Hosea, along with the other prophets, had a message that concerned God's plan for the ages. Though the prophets spoke about their own times and people, they prophesied of the spiritual realities of the Lord and of His kingdom. This mission to speak God's voice into the everyday affairs of men and women required speech that would arrest the attention of a people who had become complacent.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF HOSEA

Hosea mentioned four kings of Judah and one king of Israel who reigned during his ministry (1:1). He omitted additional reigning kings of Israel, probably because he did not consider them legitimate (cp. 8:4).

Pressure from the Assyrian Empire caused much instability and violence during this period. Pro-Assyrian and anti-Assyrian parties developed within Israel, and often the king sought aid from Egypt or other nations. Of the six kings who followed Jeroboam II, only one was succeeded by his son, four were assassinated, and one was taken captive by Assyria (2 Kg 15:8-31; 17:1-6).

Judah also went through a major upheaval. King Ahaz refused to help Pekah (king of Israel) after he assassinated the previous king of Israel and rebelled against Assyrian authority. Aram (Syria) allied with Israel, but when Ahaz refused to join, Israel and Aram attacked Judah (2 Kg 16:5-6). This Syro-Ephraimite war may form the background for Hosea 5:8-15. Ahaz called upon Tiglath-pileser III, the king of Assyria, for help, and Tiglath-pileser subsequently conquered Damascus and took control of large portions of Israel (2 Kg 16:7-9). According to an Assyrian source, he also confirmed Hoshea (not to be confused with the prophet Hosea) as the new king of Israel.

The northern kingdom of Israel collapsed when King Hoshea rebelled against Assyria and sought aid from Egypt. The new Assyrian ruler, Shalmaneser V, invaded Israel, took Hoshea captive, and laid siege to Samaria. After three years, the city finally fell (722 B.C.). At that time the 10 northern tribes were carried captive into various parts of the Assyrian Empire, just as Hosea had predicted (cp. 9:3; 11:5). Based on this data, we can reliably place Hosea's ministry between 755 and 722 B.C.

THE MEANING OF HOSEA'S MESSAGE

Hosea claimed that his message was the "word of the LORD" (1:1). God's call came in the form of a command to marry an unfaithful woman, and so the prophet's family life became a model for God's relationship with Israel. Like his predecessor Amos, Hosea preached to the entire people of God, both Israel and Judah, but he stressed the coming judgment against the northern tribes (Israel).

Hosea wrote in a highly emotional tone, showing the Lord, as it were, agonizing over the consequences of judgment against His beloved Israel. This literary technique was intended to seal the message of God's everlasting love for His people in their hearts more powerfully.

At the exodus from Egypt, the Lord established a covenant with Israel. Hosea told the nation that they had broken not only the covenant but also the Lord's heart. God had loved them from the beginning, still loved them, and would always love them. But the people had spurned His love like an adulterous woman rejecting her husband. In following after false gods they participated in various rites of drunken and sexual debaucheries. They resorted to violence and relied on foreign nations to solve their political problems.

Hosea preached a tough love. God had to judge Israel's destructive behavior. The Assyrians would destroy Israel and send her into captivity. That disaster would set into motion a process of refinement that would result in restoration. God's covenant love is not like Israel's—fickle and quickly evaporating. God's love endures forever. Someday those who are no longer God's people will once again be called "My people," and once again they will say of the Lord, "You are My God" (2:23).

The book of Hosea gives insight into the character of God. He is the sovereign Lord over history and has the absolute right to bring judgment against His people, but He exercises that right only after bearing with them with long-suffering mercy. Eventually sin requires drastic action, but the Lord still has plans to give His people a future.

The Lord requires that all people must worship Him alone, and they must treat each other justly. Hosea shows us what it means to "love the LORD your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your strength" (Dt 6:5) as well as to "love your neighbor as yourself" (Lv 19:18). Hosea's message that God loves His people even when He has to discipline them is needed for any people who ignore their Creator and treat their fellow human beings as things that get in the way of personal pleasure.

Hosea Study Notes

1:2 The Lord ordered Hosea to marry "a promiscuous wife," but the exact nature of the command and how Hosea carried it out are not entirely clear. There are four common interpretations. (1) The marriage never took place; Hosea's experience should be interpreted either allegorically or as part of the vision itself.(2) Gomer was guilty only of religious infidelity; she was not literally a prostitute. (3) Gomer was a prostitute or at least sexually experienced at the time Hosea married her. (4) Gomer was pure at the time of the marriage and only later became unfaithful to her husband.

The first two views would not involve any immoral action on Hosea's part, but they are difficult to reconcile with a literal interpretation of the text. The third view would raise some problems for Hosea as a committed follower of God's ways. First, God had commanded that a priest should not marry a prostitute (Lv 21:1-15). Second, God had high expectations of purity for the marriage covenant (see Gn 24:16; Ac 15:19-20; Heb 13:4).

The fourth view is commonly held among evangelical scholars. It allows for a literal understanding of the marriage and the children while at the same time avoiding any moral difficulties. The most important support is provided by Hosea's description of the time when the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt as a season of bliss (2:14-15). Israel's initial purity at the exodus from Egypt required that Hosea's wife was also pure at the start of the marriage. In this view "a promiscuous wife" means a wife who would prove unfaithful to Hosea after she married him, because she had a predisposition to adultery.

2:2 By contemporary Western standards the rough language of verses 2-7 might seem abusive, casting the prophet, as the Lord's spokesman, in an unfavorable light. However, Hosea's marriage was a prophetic dramatization of the Lord's relationship with Israel, and the language of this section reflects that relationship, not the prophet's domestic situation. The Lord spoke with the voice of a husband whose wife has been consorting with other men. Whether Hosea ever said anything like this to his own wife and children is impossible to determine. That Hosea did not physically abuse Gomer seems clear from the fact that he later rescued her from the abuse of her "lovers" (3:1-2). Hosea's description concerned Israel's violation of her covenant with the Lord.

Adultery and prostitution were serious violations of God's law and were treated as such by the judicial system. The penalty for adultery was death for both the offending woman and the man (Lv 20:10). Therefore it would be an act of grace on Hosea's part to receive Gomer back as his wife (Hs 3:2-3), and in the same way the Lord would mercifully receive Israel because of His hesed (v. 19), His "love" or faithfulness to the covenant.

2:3 The sufferings that Israel would have to endure were punishment for sin, and the Lord's warning was intended to turn Israel back to Him. When the Lord said "I will strip her naked and expose her as she was on the day of her birth," He was referring to the Assyrians who would destroy the land and exile its inhabitants before not many years had passed. Israel would be "exposed" to all that the enemy would want to do to her with no protection from the Lord. She might think that her prosperity had come from other gods, but it was the Lord who had supplied her abundance (vv. 8-9).

2:4 The Lord not only directed Hosea to marry "a promiscuous wife," He also told him to acquire "children of promiscuity." Characterizing the children this way, in effect as bastards, seems unfair to them since they had no say in the circumstances of their birth. But verses 8-13 make it clear that the speaker here is the Lord, not the prophet speaking about his personal family situation. The language of the passage moves beyond the literal circumstances to a metaphorical application. Additionally, it is not clear whether all the children were Hosea's. The text indicates that Jezreel was Hosea's child (1:3), but the text is more ambiguous about the others. They were called "children of promiscuity" not because of anything they did but because of the character and behavior of their mother (vv. 4-5). The children of the unfaithful wife, Israel, were thereby children of Israel's false gods, not children of the Lord.

3:1 The usual interpretation of this passage is that Hosea was told to take Gomer back as his wife after her unfaithfulness; yet he was told in the beginning to take "a promiscuous wife" (1:2). Some interpreters believe this is not a second act on the prophet's part but another version of his initial marriage to a prostitute. The Hebrew text of Hosea contains many difficulties, which may reflect the unstable conditions leading to the demise of the northern kingdom of Israel. In this uncertain time, accurate transmission of Hosea's words (especially in an oral state, before they were committed to writing) may have been difficult. The later compilers of his book may have included both versions of the marriage in their care not to exclude any of the inspired text.

Assuming that Hosea took back the unfaithful Gomer, his action was consistent with that of other OT prophets who acted out their messages with dramatic signs (see Is 20:2-4; Ezk 24:16-19). In doing something unusual, they hoped to gain the people's attention. Normally such signs concerned future events, not the present condition of the nation. Hosea's "sign"—if it was that—was not a dramatization of Israel's unfaithfulness but of the Lord's mercy. No sign of Israel's sin was needed; that was evident enough in the people's own behavior.

4:1-3 This passage is an example of the basic form of Israelite prophetic utterances, the "judgment-speech." Scholars sometimes refer to it as the "covenant lawsuit". The prophet indicted the people of Israel on the basis of the violation of the covenant; there was "no faithful love" (hesed, loyalty to the covenant) in the land. The indictment lists several of the Ten Commandments that the people had violated (v. 2; cp. Ex 20:13-16), and the consequences (v. 3) reflected the desolation of the land that were part of the curses in the Sinai covenant (Lv 26:34-35; Dt 28:23-24,38-42). Commentators who claim that the law of Moses took shape only during the postexilic period ignore evidence, such as that which Hosea provides here, that the provisions of the Torah were well known long before the Babylonian exile.

6:2 The expression "on the third day He will raise us up" is sometimes taken as evidence for a belief in the resurrection during the OT period and a prefiguring of Jesus' resurrection on the third day. Although several OT passages witness to a belief in the resurrection of the dead (Jb 19:26; Ps 17:15; Is 26:19; Ezk 37:11-13), this verse should not be included in the list. It was, apparently, not Hosea's own teaching but the shallow, complacent response of the people to his warning of judgment to come. This becomes clear from the Lord's evaluation of their words: "Your loyalty [hesed, faithfulness to the covenant] is like the morning mist and like the early dew that vanishes" (v. 4).

8:13 Hosea twice declared that Israel would return to Egypt (v. 13; 9:3) but also that Israel would not return to Egypt (11:5). Several solutions to this seeming contradiction have been suggested. Many see the return to Egypt as figurative for the place of captivity. Yet 9:3 implies that Israel would go both to Egypt and Assyria, while 11:11 says that in the future they will also return to the land from both localities. Also, 9:6 refers to a role for Egypt in the coming judgment. Possibly Egypt stood for the general fact of renewed enslavement (as before the exodus), but Assyria gave the actual place of exile. Another possibility is that 11:5 may have suffered a scribal error in transmission, in which the word "not" (lo') replaced a similar-sounding word meaning "them" that should be attached to the previous verse. A third solution takes the word "not," which begins the sentence, as an independent clause, in the sense "No! He [Israel] will return . . ." The Lord was then drawing back from the compassionate actions of the past described in 11:1-4.

In any case, it is likely that some Israelites did flee to Egypt to escape the Assyrian oppressors, especially since there were frequent political contacts between Israel and Egypt. In relation to the large contingency of Israelites exiled to Assyria, however, the number that went to Egypt must have been small since Scripture does not mention them explicitly (see Dt 28:68).

Joel Articles

What Is the Relationship Between Science and the Bible?

by J. P. Moreland

Christians are committed to the reality of knowable truths from the Bible and science. Further, Christians seek to integrate claims from both sources into their worldview. How is this done? What is the relationship between the Bible and science?

Some claim that the history of Bible-science interaction is largely a war, with theology constantly losing. But for two reasons, this claim is false. First, the relationship between the Bible and science is much richer than what can be captured by a warfare metaphor (see below). Second, many times the teachings of the Bible and science confirm each other, and when there have been differences, it is not always the Bible that has been reexamined. Sometimes scientific claims have been reinterpreted. For example, shortly after Darwinism arose, creationists predicted that there would be gaps in the fossil record, with no clear transition forms, whereas evolutionists predicted that thousands of transitional forms would be discovered. Evolutionists were wrong.

In general, the warfare metaphor is not adequate. At least five different models have been offered to capture the integration of science and the Bible. None of these positions is exhaustive, and one can subscribe to any of the five on a case-by-case basis.

1. Distinct realms. Claims from the Bible and science may involve two distinct, nonoverlapping areas of investigation. For example, debates about angels or the extent of the atonement have little to do with organic chemistry. Similarly, it is of little interest to theology whether a methane molecule has three or four hydrogen atoms in it.

2. Complementary descriptions of the same realm. Claims from the Bible and science may involve two different, complementary, noninteracting approaches to the same reality. Sociological aspects of church growth and some psychological aspects of conversion may involve scientific descriptions of certain phenomena that are complementary to a theological description of church growth or conversion. Claims in chemistry that water comes from combining hydrogen and oxygen are complementary to theological claims that God providentially creates water.

In general, we may describe God's activity in terms of primary causes (when God acts in an unusual way and directly, miraculously produces an effect) or secondary causes (when God acts in ordinary ways by sustaining and using natural processes to accomplish a result). The complementarity approach is most effective when God acts by way of secondary causes.

3. Direct interaction. Claims from the Bible and science may directly interact such that either one area of study offers rational support for the other or one area of study raises rational difficulties for the other. For example, certain theological teachings about the existence of the soul raise rational problems for scientific claims that deny the existence of the soul. The general theory of evolution raises various difficulties for certain ways of understanding the book of Genesis. Some have argued that the second law of thermodynamics supports the theological proposition that the universe had a beginning. Special creationism—for example, young-earth and progressive creationism—are applications of this approach to the question of the origin and development of life.

4. Presuppositional interaction. Biblical teaching can be used to support the presuppositions of science. Some have argued that many of the presuppositions of science (e.g., the existence of truth; the rational, orderly nature of reality; the adequacy of our sensory and cognitive faculties as tools suited for knowing the external world) make sense and are easy to justify through Christian theism but are without justification in a worldview that does not include God.

5. Practical application. Biblical teaching can help one practically apply principles discovered in science and vice versa. For example, theology teaches that fathers should not provoke their children to anger; psychology can add important details about what this means by offering information about family systems, the nature and causes of anger, etc. Psychology can devise various tests for assessing whether one is or is not a mature person, given a normative definition (a definition of what ought to be the case and not just a description of what actually is the case) from the Bible as to what a mature person ought to be like.

It is the direct interaction approach that opens up the possibility that scientific and biblical claims may provide mutual intellectual support or be in conflict with one another.

Three things should be kept in mind in approaching areas of apparent conflict.

First, the vast majority of biblical teachings and scientific claims have little to do with each other directly, and it is wrong to give the impression that most of the issues from these two sources support or conflict with each other. Areas of potential conflict are quite small compared to the vastness of ideas from the Bible and science.

Second, there are several areas where scientific discoveries have lent support to biblical assertions:

- evidence that the universe had a beginning
- evidence that the universe is fine-tuned and delicately designed so that life could appear
- evidence strongly suggesting that there is no naturalistic explanation for the origin of life and moreover that life is characterized by information that always comes from a mind
- evidence that living things are irreducibly complex such that all their parts need each other to function and thus could not have evolved gradually
- numerous archaeological confirmations of biblical claims
- psychological discoveries of the importance of a unified spiritual, moral free agent to explain human functioning and maturity

Third, we should face areas of conflict honestly but confidently in light of points one and two. Christians ought to make sure we have understood scriptural and scientific data correctly, and we should seek solutions that are both biblically and scientifically adequate. Given that Christianity provides a reasonable worldview for justifying science, that most areas of science and the Bible do not directly interact, and that many scientific discoveries have added confirmation to biblical teaching, there is no reason why Christians cannot be rational in admitting that there are currently areas of apparent conflict for which we do not have adequate solutions. No worldview is without some problems and unresolved questions. Still, contrary to popular opinion, the difficulties that scientific claims raise for biblical teaching are far from overwhelming, and they are fewer in number than one would expect by listening to propagandists from secular culture.

Introduction to Joel

AUTHOR

Joel was the son of Pethuel, about whom we know nothing. That the prophet lived in Jerusalem is probable because of his avid interest in the city, his repeated references to Zion, his call to the people to assemble for worship, and his interest in the temple rituals and sacrifices. His use of the popular formula, "The word of the LORD that came," demonstrates his devotion as God's prophet. Distinguishing himself from the priests, he respectfully urged them to lead the people in repentance. As many as 20 references to and quotations from other prophets attest to his position in the prophetic ministry.

Joel prophesied about the future day of the Lord in terms of a locust plague and the specific events that would accompany it. He spoke about God's judgment of all the nations but also promised a renewed blessing in the land of Judah.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF JOEL

Joel's book does not state when it was written, and the main historical event it mentions is the locust plague—hardly something that helps to date the book. Since the book does not mention a king, one suggestion is that Joel lived during the minority of Joash (835–789 B.C.), when Jehoiada the high priest was the regent. The position of the book among the early prophets in the Hebrew canon is considered evidence for an early date. An alternative hypothesis dates Joel around 500 B.C. In the period after the Babylonian exile, Judah had no king. Of the nations mentioned in chapter 3, all except Sheba show up in Zechariah 9 or 14. While the mention of Greeks and Sabeans does not rule out a pre-exilic date, the reference fits naturally with the postexilic period (Zch 9:13). Joel's description of what the nations did to the Judeans (3:2-3) sounds like an event that was past, and it most likely refers to the fall of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. Certainty is not possible, but a date between 500 and 400 B.C. seems most likely.

THE MEANING OF JOEL'S MESSAGE

The effects of the locust plague and drought were so severe in Judah that sacrifices could not be provided for the temple. Joel suggested that this could be a sign that God's covenant with Israel had been broken and that Judah could be destroyed. Therefore Joel called the people to repent. Perhaps in His mercy God would relent (2:13-14) and renew the covenant, restoring and blessing the nation.

The second part of Joel (2:28–3:21) turns to the future when the Lord will judge the nations and restore Judah and Jerusalem. By intertwining the concepts of judgment and repentance, Joel stressed that while that day will be utter blackness, God will hear those who call on Him. The response of the Lord to Judah's repentance during the locust plague therefore prefigured His response to all Israel in the last days. God will destroy the nations who have harmed Judah just as He destroyed the locusts, and He will restore the fortunes of His people just as He made up for the devastation of the locusts.

Joel tells us how God will make His Spirit abundantly available in the last days and be a refuge to all who call upon Him (2:28-32; cp. Ac 2:14-39). Prophecy is meant to challenge God's people to live righteously in the face of opposition and struggle. Prophets like Joel show us the cosmic dimensions of life. Joel also shows us that God is at work in all aspects of life; even disasters are a part of His plan. Joel underlines God's control of the physical aspects of life in an age that increasingly seeks only scientific explanations. Such explanations may be helpful, but they do not explain why, only how.

Joel also teaches the importance of repentance and regular communication with God. The greatest tragedy of the locust plague was not the loss of daily bread but the loss of fellowship with God. Jesus reiterated the words of Deuteronomy 8:3, "Man must not live on bread alone" (Mt 4:4).

Joel Study Notes

1:15 Joel had a terrifying view of what he called "the Day of the LORD." He used terms like "Woe!" and "great and awe-inspiring" (2:31) to describe it. The expression "Day of the LORD" is known from other prophets. Amos may have been the first to use it. He spoke of a time that the Israelites longed for without realizing its negative consequences for them. Apparently they thought it would be a time of "light" and "brightness," whereas actually it was to be "darkness" and "gloom" (see Am 5:18-24). Both Joel and Amos mention a time of restoration after a period of judgment (Jl 3; Am 9), so that some will be saved from God's wrath. Joel emphasized the salvation aspect with his proclamation that "everyone who calls on the name of Yahweh will be saved" (2:32).

For Joel the locust plague was so severe that he compared it to the coming Day of the Lord. Only complete repentance on the part of the people could give the nation any hope that the Lord might turn back from the judgment it represented. The plague could bring about a destruction that, for all practical purposes, would seem like the final judgment.

2:1 Pronouncements about the Day of the Lord often speak of its imminence—it will come soon, it is impending. Three times Joel declared that the day of the Lord was "near" (1:15; 2:1; 3:14), and most of the other prophets who referred to the Day of the Lord also spoke of it as "near" (Is 13:6; Ezk 30:3; Ob 15; Zph 1:7,14). Zephaniah added that the day was "rapidly approaching." Since well more than two millennia have passed since these prophets wrote, it may seem strange that they used such an expression for an event that is yet to occur.

Christian interpreters who have pondered this biblical phenomenon have arrived at different explanations for it. One consideration is that, because the prophets who spoke of the imminence of the Day were themselves widely separated in time (spanning a period of 350 years or more), they did not mean that it would have to arrive within a few years. Their unified witness to the coming of the Day speaks not of its timing but of its certainty, and the foreboding associated with it. The devastating judgment could come at any time; this urgency was what they sought to convey.

The tension between the imminence and delay of the Day of the Lord is a question taken up in the NT. Peter pointed out that God's timing may differ from human expectations, and that a delay in His timetable for judgment is due to His grace. He wants to afford every possible opportunity for people to repent before bringing the judgment (2 Pt 3:8-10).

2:18-27 The Lord responded to the people's repentance, spared the land, and promised a new era of prosperity. After speaking of the "great army" of destruction that the Lord had sent against Judah (v. 25), Joel turned to His promise of restoration (see 3:3). Many of the Minor Prophets stress that the Lord personally brings disaster for the purpose of punishment or judgment (e.g., Hs 5:14; Jl 2:25; Am 1:4; Mc 1:12; Nah 1:2; Zph 1:17; Hg 2:17; Zch 8:10). In the prophetic worldview, God is ultimately behind everything that takes place, orchestrating the course of history even when injustice is seemingly allowed to prevail.

As objectionable as such a view of history may appear to people with a modern Western worldview, the Bible clearly presents it. But lest that understanding of history be thought to attribute injustice to God, the Bible also recognizes more immediate causes for things that happen. Such immediate causes could be the natural operating conditions of global life (severe weather, earth tremors, the cycles of living creatures such as locusts) with which God would not interfere without disrupting the stability of His creation. Or they might be the cultural effects of human disregard of God's directives for conduct and worship (e.g., social disintegration and inequality, violence, crime, international conflict). For Joel, both of these immediate causes combined to present a foretaste of divine judgment, which only God's gracious purpose in the ultimate establishment of His kingdom can override.

Amos Articles

Does the Design Argument Show There Is a God?

by William A. Dembski

Suppose you take a tour of the Louvre, that great museum in Paris housing one of the finest art collections in the world. As you walk through the museum, you come across a painting by someone named Leonardo da Vinci—the Mona Lisa. Suppose this is your first exposure to da Vinci; you hadn't heard of him or seen the Mona Lisa before. What could you conclude? Certainly you could conclude that da Vinci was a consummate painter. Nevertheless, just from the Mona Lisa you couldn't conclude that da Vinci was also a consummate engineer, musician, scientist, and inventor, whose ideas were centuries ahead of their time.

The design argument is like this. It looks at certain features of the natural world and concludes that they exhibit evidence of a designing intelligence. But just as the Mona Lisa can tell us only so much about its creator (da Vinci), so the natural world can tell us only so much about its Creator (God). The design argument allows us reliably to conclude that a designing intelligence is behind the order and complexity of the natural world. But it cannot speak to the underlying nature of this designing intelligence (for instance, whether this intelligence is the transcendent, interpersonal, triune God of Christianity). Nor can it speak to the actions of that designing intelligence in human history. In particular, the design argument is silent about the revelation of Christ in Scripture. It follows that the design argument cannot "prove the Gospel" or "compel someone into the kingdom."

Christian theologians have long recognized that the design argument is a modest argument. Even so, it is a powerful argument. Perhaps the best-known design argument is William Paley's. According to Paley, if we find a watch in a field (and thus lack all knowledge of how it arose), the adaptation of the watch's parts to telling time ensures that it is the product of an intelligence. So too, according to Paley, the marvelous adaptations of means to ends in organisms (such as the human eye with its ability to confer sight) ensure that organisms are the product of an intelligence. The theory of intelligent design—or ID as it is commonly abbreviated—updates Paley's argument in light of contemporary information theory and molecular biology, bringing the design argument squarely within science.

The implications of ID for the Christian faith are profound and revolutionary. The rise of modern science led to a vigorous attack on orthodox Christian theology. The high point of this attack came with Darwin's theory of evolution. Orthodox Christian theology has always been committed to the proposition that God by wisdom created the world. A clear implication of this proposition is that the design of the world is real. The central claim of Darwin's theory is that an unguided material process (random variation and natural selection) could account for the emergence of all biological complexity and order. In other words, Darwin appeared to show that the design of the world was unreal—that science had dispensed with any need for design. By showing that design is indispensable to our scientific understanding of the natural world, ID is breathing new life into the design argument and at the same time overturning the widespread misconception that science has disproved the Christian faith.

Introduction to Amos

AUTHOR

The prophet Amos was from Tekoa, a town in the Judean hills southeast of Bethlehem (1:1). When God encountered him, he was a "herdsman" (cattle breeder) who "took care of sycamore figs" (7:14). God called him to go to the northern kingdom of Israel and speak a message. His activities of dealing in sheep and sycamore figs evidently led him to travel a lot, and it was not unusual that he traveled to Samaria and Bethel in the north. Amos wanted his readers to know that he did not seek the calling of a prophet, nor did he seek to gain financially from his calling. He simply received a message from the Lord and delivered it despite opposition from the king and the religious leaders (7:10-15).

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF AMOS

Amos prophesied in "the days of Uzziah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam son of Joash, king of Israel" (1:1). This would place his ministry between 767–753 B.C. But a historically verifiable earthquake happened two years after he began to preach, and so it is possible to place Amos's ministry more precisely between about 765–760 B.C.

Jeroboam II had a long reign and restored Israel's borders to Lebo-hamath in the north and to the Dead Sea in the south (2 Kg 14:25). The expansion was set against a background of bitter hostility between Israel and her northern neighbor, the Aramean (Syrian) kingdom of Damascus. The Arameans were kept busy with the ever-increasing incursions of the Assyrian Empire to the west, enabling Jeroboam II to succeed in his military efforts. Peace between Israel and Judah led to great prosperity and unhindered commerce along the major trade routes through the two countries.

THE MEANING OF AMOS'S MESSAGE

Amos told the northern kingdom of Israel that God was about to bring it to an end. He showed that Israel's outward displays of worship could not compensate for a lack of the compassion and humanity that the covenant with Moses demanded. Just because the Israelites had been chosen by God did not mean they could ignore the conditions of the covenant handed down to them by Moses.

Would God abandon His eternal covenant with His people? Amos responded with a decisive no! The Lord had always been full of compassion and mercy in His dealings with Israel, and past judgments were intended to bring the people back to their God. Although there would be no escape from complete destruction, Amos held out hope for a restoration of Israel in a new Davidic era. A righteous remnant would always exist to inherit the promises of the messianic kingdom.

Amos preached against injustice and oppression, anticipating themes that are in the NT (e.g., Lk 1:52-53; 4:16-21; 18:22; 19:8-9; Jms 5:1-6). He also anticipated the teaching of Jesus Christ when He condemned worship that considers only outward form and not acts of love and compassion in the life of the worshiper (see Mt 5:23; Jn 15).

The book of Amos provokes questions about the relationship between private morality and public morality. It reacts not merely against hardhearted individuals but also against corrupt social structures. Amos invites the reader to look for general principles that could be applied to any governmental system. For example, Amos showed that God is concerned that a government provide channels available for addressing issues of justice for all its citizens (2:6-8; 5:24; 8:4-6).

Amos revealed that the Lord is sovereign over the nations of the earth, expecting righteousness from all peoples, especially Israel and Judah. That perspective sees that the Lord created the earth and all its inhabitants. Creation theology permeates the book and will have decided consequences for those who seek to understand their relationship to the world.

What the Lord expected of Israel is not so far removed from what He expects of His people today. We should glean from Amos issues that are universal in scope. The book of Amos has much to say to the church about requirements for justice among Christians as well as about a sense of compassion and generosity in one's dealings with society in general.

Amos Study Notes

3:1-8 This passage presents the general "principles" of OT prophecy. (1) The prophet was the Lord's spokesman, declaring what "the LORD has spoken" (v. 1). (2) The prophet took his stand on Yahweh's covenant with Israel—"I have known only you" (v. 2). The Lord's choice of Israel was confirmed in His deliverance of His people from slavery in Egypt. (3) As a result of the people's faithlessness, the Lord was about to inflict upon them the consequences of their disobedience (v. 2). (4) Whatever occurs in the arena of history is the Lord's doing (v. 6). (5) The prophet understood these things because the counsel of God had been revealed to him (v. 7), and he was, in effect, a divinely appointed prosecutor. (6) The prophet was under compulsion to speak once he had heard from the Lord.

5:18-24 Amos says that the "Day of the LORD," for which the people longed, would not be a day of gladness and "light" but of treacherous "darkness" and "gloom" (v. 20). The people's desire for the Day and the context, which refers to feasts and worship assemblies (vv. 21-22), suggest that the prophet was referring not only to the final day of judgment but also to a popular festival observance. Scholars have suggested that the "Day of the LORD," or "Yahweh's Day," may have been the annual festival of the new year, which, because it celebrated the kingship of the Lord, was associated with His role as Judge of the people. (Commentators who hold this view find extensive evidence for it in the psalms.)

If a particular worship festival was not in view, it is difficult to see why the prophet would move immediately from a terrifying description of the Day to an indictment of the community's hypocritical worship. Amos preached during the prosperous reign of Jeroboam II of Israel, but the national prosperity was limited to the wealthier families and came at the expense of the poor who were victims of injustice (5:10-13). It was this inequity that rendered the people's worship repulsive to the Lord, for it violated His covenant in which justice and fairness for all were supposed to prevail.

5:25 The Lord's rhetorical question about Israel's offering sacrifices in the wilderness expected the answer, "No, we did not." This answer would fit the context in which the Lord found the many sacrifices of the people offensive because of the injustice the nation had come to tolerate. But this appears to contradict passages that show that Israel did offer sacrifices during the wilderness wanderings (Ex 24:4-8; Nm 7). One suggestion is that Israel did not sustain her relationship with the Lord by regularly offering these sacrifices. But Scripture nowhere else indicates that the Israelites did not offer sacrifices in the wilderness, and the presence of the tabernacle suggests that they did so frequently. Another solution places the main emphasis of the passage with to Me, so that the Lord was saying, "It was not to Me that you offered sacrifices." The reference to false gods in the following verse (Sukkuth and Kaiwan, v. 26) would support this view.

Either Israel's worship in the wilderness had been insincere, or it had consisted of idolatrous practices. If the Lord expected the answer yes to His rhetorical question, the meaning of His statement would be, "Indeed you did offer sacrifices and grain offerings in the wilderness, but now you will take up your idols, since you have rejected Me, and I will send you into exile."

7:10-15 Amos, a native of Tekoa in Judah, was told to prophesy in the northern kingdom of Israel (v. 15) as well as in Judah. For this purpose he went to Bethel, one of the two sanctuaries set up by Jeroboam I as alternatives to Jerusalem when he led the northern tribes in revolt against Solomon's successor Rehoboam (1 Kg 12:26-30). Amaziah, the priest at Bethel, told him, "Go away, you seer!" (v. 12). A "seer" (Hb hozeh) was the earlier term for a prophet (see 1 Sm 9:9), a sort of technical functionary who could solve problems such as locating a lost herd of donkeys (1 Sm 9:3). To call a man who was the proclaimer of the Lord's word a mere "seer" was to insult him. Amos's words in reply, lo' 'ani navi', are usually rendered "I was not a prophet," but they can also be translated as protest against Amaziah's insult: "No! I am a prophet!" Amos's following words, that he was not "the son of a prophet," can also be understood to mean that, though he was a prophet, he was not a member of a guild or community of prophets. That is, he was not a "professional prophet" but one the Lord had specially called from another line of work as an herdsman and caretaker of sycamore figs (vv. 14-15). Amaziah's response to Amos further showed his disdain for the Lord, in that he referred to the sanctuary at Bethel as "the king's sanctuary and a royal temple"—not a temple of Yahweh.

7:17 After Amaziah, the priest of Bethel acted to curtail Amos's mission in Israel, Amos prophesied not only that Amaziah would die in exile but also that his sons and daughters would be killed and that his wife would become a "prostitute in the city." Why would God punish the priest's innocent wife and children when Amaziah was the guilty one? The prophets viewed the Assyrian advance into the region as the instrument of the Lord's judgment upon Israel's disobedience. That disobedience was evident not only in the social inequalities that had developed between rich and poor, but also in the false religion that the nation tolerated. The temple at Bethel, like that of Dan, had been established as a rival to the Solomonic temple in Jerusalem in the kingdom of Judah (1 Kg 12:26-30). Amos, a Judean, viewed these sanctuaries as sites of false worship, together with other local sanctuaries where sacrifices were conducted. To conduct worship at these locations was an act of rebellion against the Lord (4:4-5). As priest of Bethel, Amaziah epitomized this condemned religious system, and because Bethel was "the king's sanctuary" (v.

13), he represented the entire nation of Israel. The invasion of the Assyrians would be marked by great cruelty; all Israel's inhabitants would suffer, including Amaziah's children and his wife. When the Assyrians carried Amaziah into exile, along with other Israelite leaders, his wife would have no source of support and might well be forced into prostitution for a livelihood. Regardless of their personal guilt or innocence, the members of Amaziah's family would face the dire consequences of the judgment to come.

9:7-12 The Lord's choice of the nation was evident in His delivering them from Egyptian slavery in the exodus. But the Israelites had become complacent about their standing with the Lord (v. 10); they had forgotten that His calling laid upon them a special obligation of obedience (see 3:2). In response, Amos reminded them that the Lord had a plan for all the world's peoples, including the Cushites (Ethiopians), the Philistines, and the Arameans (Syrians). Because of Israel's sin, the "house of Israel" (especially the northern kingdom) would be shaken and the disobedient would meet with the Lord's judgment. But Amos looked ahead to the day when the Davidic dynasty, which had lost control of the northern tribal areas ("the fallen booth of David," v. 11) would be restored and would, in fact, receive "all the nations that are called by My name" (v. 12). According to James, leader of the early church in Jerusalem, this prophecy was fulfilled when the Gentiles began to turn to Jesus Christ (Ac 15:13-18), the "descendant of David" (Rm 1:3).

Introduction to Obadiah

AUTHOR

Obadiah is the shortest book of the Minor Prophets. No other source mentions Obadiah, although the name is a common one in the OT. Meaning "servant of Yahweh," it reflects his parents' faith and spiritual ambitions for their child. The title, "The vision of Obadiah," turns attention to the divine author, "vision" being a technical term for a prophetic revelation received from God.

Obadiah had angry, bitter words for Edom, a nation that no longer exists in our day. Why would God inspire a prophet to write even a short book with its main theme about such an obscure nation? Obadiah was outraged about a time when the Edomites should have come to Judah's aid as allies in an alien attack but instead took advantage of the situation.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF OBADIAH

At first glance it would seem that Obadiah has his chronology mixed up. He warned the Edomites not to carry out their (future) treachery against Judah (vv. 10-14), yet right after that warning, he pronounced judgment for what Edom (and other nations) had already done to Jerusalem. Why warn Edom not to do something and then announce that they had already done it? Possibly Obadiah penned the warning before the attack took place and then wrote the announcement of judgment later. However, it is more likely that he stated the warnings in this way for rhetorical effect. Obadiah portrayed Edom's past transgressions against Jerusalem far more vividly by placing himself at the scene and demanding, as it were, that the Edomites cease their wicked behavior. Indeed, this was a common literary technique employed elsewhere in the prophetic material (see Is 14:29; Lm 4:21; Hs 9:1; Am 3:9; Mc 7:8; Nah 2:1).

When did Edom betray the people of Jerusalem (vv. 13-14)? There are two possibilities.

A first possibility is that in the mid-ninth century B.C., Edom revolted from Judah (2 Kg 8:20-21; 2 Ch 21:8-10). Later the Philistines and Arabs invaded Judah and "carried off all the possessions found in the king's palace and also his sons and wives; not a son was left to [Jehoram] except Jehoahaz, his youngest son" (2 Ch 21:17). However, despite this raid, Jehoahaz (Ahaziah) became king after his father died, and Judah remained independent. The text of the books of Chronicles is silent about any Edomite role in this raid.

A second possibility is the invasion of the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar in 587 B.C. In this catastrophic event, the Babylonians captured Jerusalem and burned the temple. This would therefore seem to be the most likely context for the book of Obadiah. The Edomites should have been allies of Judah (Jr 27:1-11), but they sided with the Babylonians (Ps 137:7; Ezk 25:12; 35:15).

The book of Obadiah has some close similarities with Jeremiah 49:7-16. Some think these similarities show that Jeremiah must have been familiar with Obadiah's book. If so, then Obadiah was written before 587 B.C. Historically that seems improbable because there is no sense either in Obadiah or elsewhere in the OT that the people of Jerusalem knew in advance that the Edomites would betray them. It is difficult to compare two related passages of unknown date and decide which one was written first. Given that some prophets in Israel (e.g., Elijah and Elisha) did not record their sermons in book form, it is possible that Obadiah and Jeremiah could have both relied on earlier traditional language, reshaping their own unique prophecies under the inspiration of the Spirit of God.

Obadiah's description is so vivid that he likely wrote his book not long after the fall of Jerusalem. He also predicted the fall of Edom as a future event, so he must have written before the late sixth century B.C., when Edom was destroyed. Taking all the evidence into account, a likely date for Obadiah to have written the book would be between 585 and 550 B.C.

THE MEANING AND SIGNIFICANCE OF OBADIAH'S MESSAGE

Edom represents all those who oppose the purposes of the Lord (cp. Jdg 5:4; Is 63:1-6). The perspective shifts at Obadiah 15-21 from Edom alone to Edom and all the nations. Edom's treachery and overconfidence made it a perfect example for Obadiah. Whatever Obadiah said about Edom applies equally well to any nation that sets itself against the Lord and His people. The Lord's sovereignty over the nations is evident throughout the book. He summoned them to assemble against Edom (v. 1), He challenged Edom's haughty attitude (vv. 2-4), He threatened to cut off all hope of rescue (vv. 8-9), and He promised a day when He would set all things right, restoring Israel and Judah to their former territories (vv. 15-21).

Obadiah, along with many other prophets, foresaw that the messianic kingdom would be established on the earth, with Mount Zion at the center. The people of Israel, whether of the southern or northern tribes, would return to the land and join together to win back their territory with the Lord's aid. Then they would rule over the rest of the nations.

In Obadiah's contrasting of the destiny of the people of God and that of the enemies of God, he reminds us of the severity of the sins of arrogance, pride, and betrayal. God will always judge the proud, arrogant ones, and those who betray another will themselves be betrayed.

Obadiah pointedly proclaimed that good will triumph at the end of the day, but it is God's goodness that triumphs, not mankind's. Throughout the book of Obadiah, God is the central figure. God defines the rules, chooses His own people, and dispenses judgment. He is in control of history. Surely the one who rules the nations also is able to care for His people.

Obadiah Study Notes

10-14 God used pagan nations, Assyria and Babylon, to discipline His people Israel (722 B.C.) and Judah (586 B.C.). As Babylon made its third and most devastating invasion of Judah, their neighbors, the Edomites, helped the Babylonians capture the king of Judah. The Babylonians rewarded Edom by inviting them to join in the plunder of Jerusalem. This was especially painful to the residents of Judah since the Edomites were heirs of Abraham and Isaac through Esau. The Lord was not pleased with the Edomites' attitudes or actions, and raised up Obadiah to prophesy against them. Obadiah charged Edom with one of the oldest crimes on earth—fratricide, or brother turning against brother (Gn 4:1-15). Both human decency and the Mosaic law called for the Edomites to help their kinsmen instead of gloating over them and adding to their pain.

Introduction to Jonah

AUTHOR

Jonah ben Amittai was a prophet of Israel from Gath Hepher, a village near Nazareth. He prophesied during the time of Jeroboam II (793–753 B.C.). God had earlier given Jonah the privilege of delivering the good news that Israel would experience a time of safety and prosperity (2 Kg 14:25). According to the book of Jonah God also used him against his will to deliver a warning to the pagans in Nineveh.

Jonah is the only prophetic book that consists entirely of an account of what happened to the prophet. Indeed, the prophetic message is primarily told through both the story and the dialogue between God and Jonah.

IS THE STORY OF JONAH FACT OR FICTION?

Is the book of Jonah historical narrative or fictional narrative? Biography or autobiography in the Prophets can either give historical information or illustrate the message. For example, Hosea's marriage to Gomer typified God's relationship with Israel. The events of the book of Jonah illustrate, or in this case even comprise, the message of the book. That the book of Jonah teaches a lesson through what happened does not rule out its historicity any more than the lesson of Hosea's marriage rules out the historicity of Hosea's book. However, the style in Jonah is somewhat different from other Minor Prophets.

Various suggestions of a non-historical genre have been made for Jonah: a parable; an allegory; a midrash (a preaching commentary on a portion of Scripture); a short story; a satire. The supernatural elements are the main reason that some object to viewing Jonah as historical. Also there are elements of the account that seem unusual or humorous, such as the king's decree that the animals should participate in the repentance (3:7-8) or Jonah's odd behavior as a prophet of God.

While they are certainly intriguing, none of these reasons automatically rules out the historicity of this book. Moreover, two things tip the balance in favor of Jonah as history. First, the form of the book does not fit easily into any of the suggested fictional categories; everything about its form suggests a historical work. Second, the use Jesus made of the account of Jonah implies that He considered the book historical (Mt 12:39-41; 16:4; Lk 11:29-30,32).

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF JONAH

The reign of Jeroboam II allows us to date Jonah somewhere between 793–753 B.C., although his mission could have occurred after Jeroboam died. The Assyrians, not unexpectedly, left no known record about the repentance of the Ninevites. Assyria was in a weakened condition in the first half of the eighth century, and though Nineveh did not become the official capital until Sennacherib (705–682 B.C.); there is evidence that it served at least as a part-time royal residence during the era of Jeroboam II.

It is significant for the meaning of the story to know that the Assyrians were feared throughout the ancient Near East and threatened the very existence of Israel shortly after the time of Jonah. In their inscriptions the Assyrians boast of their conquests and of their cruel treatment of prisoners of war.

THE MEANING OF THE BOOK OF JONAH

To some extent it is possible to interpret Jonah in more than one way because the meaning derives from narrative rather than from explicit statements. Nevertheless, there are some clues in the story that should help. Here are two.

The first clue involves the intended audience of the book. It would have to have been written to Israel or Judah, not Assyria. So how would an Israelite have reacted to this book? Other prophets complained that Israel failed to respond to their messages, but the Ninevites responded immediately to Jonah's simple statement, "In 40 days Nineveh will be overthrown!" (3:4). Jonah's story would have been a rebuke to the Israelites and an exhortation for them to likewise repent.

A second clue is found in the reason that Jonah gave God for why he fled. He knew that God was merciful and would forgive the Ninevites, not destroy them. Jonah represented Israel's provincial attitude that the Lord was unconcerned about those outside Israel. The book of Jonah tried to bring a corrective to that.

If we reflect on how we might be like Jonah, some of our incorrect attitudes may come to the surface. Are we concerned only about ourselves in our faith? Is ministry important only if it has some relationship to us personally? To our racial or ethnic group? Are there groups that we would rather hate than love? Have we opened our lives completely to God's grace, compassion, and love if we are unwilling to love those who have offended us deeply?

Jesus' parable of the unforgiving servant (Mt 18:23-35) makes a nice parallel to the message of Jonah. Indeed, a theme that runs from Deuteronomy (6:4-5), through all the Prophets, and on into the NT is that God wants His people to love Him wholly and to love their neighbor as themselves (see Mc 6:8; Lk 10:25-37; Jms 2:8; 1 Jn 4:7-21). The book of Jonah conveys this message in a unique way.

Jonah Study Notes

1:3 It may seem unusual that a prophet of God, called to be His spokesman, would ever presume to run away from the Lord. The story of Jonah shows that the prophet had a good deal to learn about the extent of the Lord's mercy; his narrow view of that mercy may be a clue to why he thought he could escape God. Perhaps he did not expect His presence to be easily encountered outside the land of Israel. God "made the sea and the dry land" (v. 9), but would He really dwell among people who were outside His covenant with Israel?

1:17 Was Jonah swallowed by a fish or a whale? Traditionally dag gadol has been translated "a whale" (e.g., Mt 12:40 KJV). Ancient taxonomy of the animal kingdom did not follow the modern Linnaean system, so perhaps any swimming sea creature might be considered a "fish." The author of Jnh was not concerned with phylogenic distinctions but with the Lord's involvement in Jonah's life. When Jesus speaks of the "great fish" (Mt 12:40), the text uses the same word found in the Greek OT at Jnh 1:17. If Jesus was speaking Aramaic, or possibly Hebrew, when He made His pronouncement, Matthew—or the source he was using—simply chose the Greek word already available to render Jesus' words into Greek. Whether it was a fish or a whale in which Jonah was kept alive is less important than the fact that God provided a miraculous means to redirect the wayward prophet to his original task, preaching repentance to Nineveh. God's plans will not be thwarted by the schemes disobedient people devise to get around them.

3:10 Jonah announced that "in 40 days Nineveh will be overthrown" (v. 4), but God did not overthrow Nineveh in 40 days. He "relented" in response to the repentance of the Ninevites. Since Jonah prophesied something that failed to occur, did this make him a false prophet (see Dt 18:21-22)?

Some have suggested the solution lies in the ambiguous nature of the Hebrew word translated "overthrown." While the verb could have that meaning, it can also have the sense of "turn around" or "be changed" (see Ezk 4:8; Hs 11:8). Nineveh would be either destroyed or changed, and when the people repented it indeed was changed. An objection to this view is that the Ninevites understood the message as a threat of destruction. Further, according to verse 10, "God relented from the disaster He had threatened to do to them."

A better solution considers the nature of a prophecy of judgment. If God was concerned enough about Nineveh—capital city of the feared Assyrian Empire—to send Jonah to preach repentance, such a message must be understood as a warning. Jonah's prophecy to the Ninevites was therefore conditional, not absolute. If the people repented, the Lord might not bring the judgment. Jonah recognized this even before he gave the message; he fled from the Lord initially because he knew that God might relent (4:2).

Micah Articles

What Does the Hebrew Bible Say About the Coming Messiah?

by Michael Rydelnik

How can someone be convinced that Jesus truly is who He claimed to be—the Messiah of Israel and the world? One of the ways Jesus Himself proved this was by citing the Hebrew Bible's prophecies of the Messiah and how He fulfilled them. For example, Jesus said, "These are My words that I spoke to you while I was still with you—that everything written about Me in the Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms must be fulfilled" (Lk 24:44).

So, to what prophecies was He referring? Probably not merely to individual messianic texts but to the whole Hebrew Bible. Even so, Jesus fulfilled numerous specific predictions about the coming of the Messiah. In fact, the entire life of the Messiah can be found in the Hebrew Scriptures, demonstrating that Jesus is actually the Promised One.

Messiah's Birth

The Hebrew Bible contains several predictions of the Messiah's birth. Micah foretold that the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem when he wrote, "Bethlehem Ephrathah, you are small among the clans of Judah; One will come from you to be ruler over Israel for Me" (Mc 5:2).

Also, Genesis 49:10 predicted that the Messiah would come by the first century A.D. It says, "The scepter will not depart from Judah, or the staff from between his feet, until He whose right it is comes and the obedience of the peoples belongs to Him." Besides plainly stating that the messianic King would come from the line of Judah, additionally it says that He would come before the "scepter" and "staff" depart from Judah. The word "scepter" in Hebrew, as used here, refers to tribal identity. The word "staff" means a judge's staff and refers to judicial authority. The prediction is that the Messiah would come before Judah would lose its tribal identity (lost in A.D. 70 with the destruction of the temple) and judicial authority (lost in A.D. 6 or 7 when the Romans replaced Herod Archelaus with a Roman governor). Based on these two elements, the Messiah needed to come by the first century.

Additionally, Isaiah predicted that the Messiah would be born of a virgin. King Ahaz and Judah were under a threat from two northern kingdoms that wanted to remove the Davidic king and thereby jeopardize the messianic promise. Isaiah gave two predictions, one of which was a long-term prophecy assuring the people of the enduring nature of the Davidic house until the coming of the Messiah (Is 7:13-15). Isaiah wrote, "The Lord Himself will give you a sign: The virgin will conceive, have a son, and name him Immanuel." The sign of hope would be the Messiah's supernatural birth by a virgin in the distant future.

Taking this all together, the Hebrew Bible predicted that the Messiah would be born of a virgin in Bethlehem by the first century.

Messiah's Nature

Although some have thought that Messiah would just be a glorious king, the Scriptures foretold that He would have a unique nature. For example, the same prophecy that predicted that the Messiah would come from Bethlehem (Mc 5:2) also said that His origin would be "from antiquity, from eternity," indicating His eternal nature.

Isaiah also foresaw that the Messiah would have a divine nature. In a birth announcement, Isaiah gave the royal names of the future messianic king: "Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Eternal Father, Prince of Peace" (Is 9:6). These glorious titles of deity indicate that the Messiah would be God Himself.

Messiah's Life

Isaiah foretold the characteristics of the Messiah's life. In the messianic age, "the eyes of the blind will be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Then the lame will leap like a deer, and the tongue of the mute will sing for joy" (Is 35:5-6). So when the Messiah would make His appearance, He was to be a miracle worker. Isaiah also predicted that the Messiah's teaching would "bring good news to the poor . . .
[and] heal the brokenhearted" (Is 61:1). Despite these many signs, Isaiah foretold that the Messiah would also be "despised and rejected by men" and that His own people would confess that "we didn't value Him" (Is 53:3).

Messiah's Death

Daniel 9:26-27 predicted the time of the Messiah's death. He would be "cut off" before A.D. 70, when the Romans would "destroy the city [Jerusalem] and the sanctuary [the temple]."

King David foretold that the Messiah would die by crucifixion, saying, "They pierced my hands and my feet" (Ps 22:16). So David predicted the Messiah's crucifixion more than 300 years before that manner of execution was known.

More significant than the time or manner of His death, Isaiah predicted that the Messiah's death would be as a substitution for humanity's sin. The Servant of the Lord would be "pierced because of our transgressions, crushed because of our iniquities" (Is 53:5). The Lord would punish Him "for the iniquity of us all" (Is 53:6). The Servant would have "submitted Himself to death," and as a result, "He bore the sin of many" (Is 53:12).

Messiah's Resurrection

The prophets not only foretold the Messiah's death, they anticipated His resurrection as well. In Isaiah 52:13–53:12, after describing the Messiah's substitutionary death, Isaiah promised that the Lord would "prolong His days" (Is 53:10). David also expressed his own confidence that God would "not abandon [him] to Sheol" because the Messiah, God's "Faithful One," would not "see the Pit" (Ps 16:10).

Messiah's Return

The Hebrew Scriptures present the Messiah in two ways: as a Suffering Servant and as a victorious and righteous King. Although this has confused many, the difficulty is resolved by recognizing that the prophets anticipated two appearances of the Messiah. First, He would come as an atoning sacrifice for sin. Second, He would come to establish His righteous kingdom.

One of the passages that links the two comings is Zechariah 12:10. It speaks of the Messiah coming to deliver Israel at the last battle and then "they will look at Me whom they pierced." These verses depict the Messiah's second coming as the victorious king but also recognize His first appearance as the Pierced One.

Mathematician Peter W. Stoner calculated the probability of one person fulfilling not all the messianic predictions of the Bible, or even the ones mentioned in this article, but just eight messianic predictions. He found that the probability would be 1 in 10^{17} or 1 in 100,000,000,000,000,000. The likelihood of this occurring is comparable to covering Texas with 10^{17} silver dollars, marking only one of them, stirring the mass of dollars, and then having a blindfolded man randomly pick up the marked silver dollar. This is the likelihood of Jesus of Nazareth randomly fulfilling only eight of the Messianic predictions of the Hebrew Bible.

Introduction to Micah

AUTHOR

Micah was an eighth century B.C. prophet who came from Moresheth-gath (1:14). This village was located about 25 miles southwest of Jerusalem in the tribe of Judah. Micah, however, may have lived in Jerusalem during his ministry. He worked in the reigns of Jotham (750–732 B.C.), Ahaz (735–715 B.C.), and Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.) who were kings of Judah. The identification of these kings does not mean that he was active from 750–686 but that his ministry spanned parts of each reign. Since he predicted the fall of Samaria (722 B.C.), the bulk of his ministry probably took place between about 750 and 725 B.C. Jeremiah 26:17-18 refers to Micah as prophesying during the time of Hezekiah. Determining exact dates, however, for each of the prophecies contained in the book is difficult. Micah was a contemporary of Isaiah, Hosea, and possibly Amos. His prophecies addressed Samaria and Jerusalem. Samaria was the capital of the northern kingdom (Israel) and Jerusalem of the southern kingdom (Judah). Even though Micah ministered in Judah, some of his messages were directed toward Israel.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF MICAH

Early in Micah's time the kingdom of Judah under Jotham was strong, but there were signs of a need for religious reforms, a need that became more evident during the reign of Jotham's son Ahaz. Conditions in Judah deteriorated considerably during Ahaz's reign, both religiously and politically.

It is surprising that a wicked king like Ahaz would have a son, Hezekiah, who would turn the nation back to serving the Lord. Perhaps Micah and Isaiah had some influence on the young prince even before he became sole ruler when his father died. Hezekiah, unlike his predecessors, tore down the high places and other symbols of idolatry (2 Kg 18:4). Unfortunately, the religious reformation did not reach deeply into the hearts of the people, and Hezekiah's own son, Manasseh, quickly reversed all the good his father had done.

THE MEANING OF MICAH'S MESSAGE

Micah's book has two cycles that describe God's judgment of sin followed by a future restoration. The first cycle focuses more specifically on Samaria (Israel) and Judah, while the second cycle addresses the people of the Lord more generally. The first cycle is notable for its prediction of the birthplace of the Messiah (5:2), while the great statement about mankind's responsibility before God occurs in the second cycle (6:8).

Micah had a strong sense of the need for justice in society, whether through the proper administration of justice in the courts (3:11; 7:3), through fairness in the marketplace (6:10-11), or through dealing with authority and power in a responsible manner (2:1-2,8-9; 3:1-3,9-10; 6:12; 7:2-6). A person's relationship with God is primary and determines all others (6:8). Since justice and mercy are the Lord's requirements, "to walk humbly with" Him must entail fair dealings with others. And what is fair should be measured only against the standard that God has already showed mankind to be "good." The issue of social justice brings Micah alive as a prophet who has much to say to all generations.

Another key theme in Micah is the proper worship of the Lord. Like Amos, Micah deplored a religious system that had much ritual but little repentance. He admonished people to commit themselves totally to the Lord. This meant "to walk humbly with" God, to forgo the worship of other gods (1:6-7; 5:13), and to forgo anything that might become a source of confidence for the believer other than the Lord (5:10-12).

Even though Micah spent a lot of time preaching about judgment to come (also a topic of present-day relevance), he was above all a prophet of hope for the future. God would bring a ruler who would allow the people to live in peace (5:1-5). Micah gave many details about the coming kingdom of God and its blessings for the entire world. In the final chapter of his book, Micah expressed trust that the Lord will accomplish His purposes in the world even when society is filled with corruption and violence. Matthew saw in Micah's hope for a new ruler a description of Christ (Mt 2:6).

Micah Study Notes

4:1-5 This passage virtually duplicates Is 2:1-5. Either one prophet borrowed from the other—not an unusual practice, if they were associated in their ministries—or the Lord gave the same message separately to each. The passages are not exactly the same. The major difference is that, whereas Isaiah ended the section with "House of Jacob, come and let us walk in the LORD's light" (Is 2:5), Micah inserted additional material before ending similarly with "we will walk in the name of Yahweh our God forever and ever" (Mc 4:5). Isaiah referred to his having disciples (Is 8:16), and perhaps Micah was one of them, amplifying his teacher's prophecy to encourage devotion to Israel's "walk," or its life in covenant with the Lord. The presence of duplicate, or near-duplicate, passages in Scripture only strengthens its impact as the word of God; when He speaks, it does not really matter who hears from Him and passes on His message to others.

5:2 Ephrathah was a clan that was part of the tribe of Judah (Ru 1:2; 4:11; 1 Sm 17:12); it may have received its name from Caleb's second wife (1 Ch 2:19). Bethlehem was the main town in Ephrathah's small territory, and the two became associated in order to distinguish the place from another Bethlehem in the north. Bethlehem was David's hometown (1 Sm 16:4-13), and therefore Micah spoke of a coming ruler who would be in David's line. This ruler's "origin is from antiquity, from eternity." Thus, it is likely that this prophecy does refer to the Messiah's origins or descent from David and to His birthplace in Bethlehem. The name Bethlehem means "house of bread," a fitting name for the birthplace of Him who said, "I am the bread of life" (Jn 6:48).

5:3 The woman who gives birth most probably refers to the mother of the Messiah. Micah called Israel without a king "like" a woman "in labor" (4:9), but here he distinguished between Israel and the woman and had just referred to the birth of the Messiah.

5:4-6 These verses await fulfillment at the second coming of Christ. The mention of Assyria seems at first glance to shift the focus back to Micah's own day. The Lord did save Jerusalem from the Assyrian Sennacherib, but the end of verse 6 says that the Messiah ("He") will deliver the nation from Assyria. Micah mentioned "the land of Nimrod" in addition to Assyria, a designation that meant he had something broader than just Assyria in mind. In Genesis, Nimrod was viewed as the founder of both Babylonia and Assyria (Gn 10:8-12). Micah viewed Assyria, the major world power of his day, as symbolic of all the kingdoms of the world (see Zch 10:11). Even so, the Messiah will deliver Israel in the last days from all the powers that come against it.

Introduction to Nahum

AUTHOR

Nahum was a Hebrew prophet about whom very little is known. He is called an Elkoshite (1:1), but the location of Elkosh is unknown. The date of the prophet's ministry can be placed between 700–600 B.C. by two events mentioned in his book. Nahum 3:8 refers to the destruction of the Egyptian capital, No-amon or Thebes, in 663 B.C. and indicates that the prophet was active after this time. In chapter 2 he looked forward to the destruction of Nineveh which took place in 612 B.C. Nahum, therefore, prophesied after 650 B.C., probably close to the time of the fall of Nineveh.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF NAHUM

The Assyrians practiced cruel violence against other nations, all in the interest of financial gain and power. They brought about the destruction of Samaria, the capital of Israel, and they invaded Judah in the days of Hezekiah. They practiced a form of empire building through demanding yearly payments of tribute, followed by invasion if the tribute was not paid. The Assyrian king would then set up a puppet king over the rebellious nation. If rebellion continued, the nation would be incorporated directly into the empire. Scholars refer to this period as the neo-Assyrian period, and the empire extended to Babylonia in the south, to Syria-Palestine in the northwest, to Egypt in the southwest, and to the area of Turkey in the north.

THE MEANING OF NAHUM'S MESSAGE

Nahum summarized the message of his book in his opening statement about the awesome power of God in wrath and judgment. God is good, but His goodness includes both His love for those who place their trust in Him and His justice for those who set themselves against Him. Nineveh, as the capital of the cruel and violent Assyrian Empire, was ripe for judgment. Justice demanded that the Lord right the situation. That is what Nahum meant when he declared that the Lord "takes vengeance and is fierce in wrath" (1:2).

How difficult it is to watch what is happening in the world today! Terrorists seem to strike all over the globe; dictators oppress their people through murder and brute force; wars break out all the time and never seem to fully solve anything. Nahum assures us that none who do evil can expect to escape divine justice. The desire for justice is inborn to the human psyche, so it is encouraging to know that in the end evil will be defeated. Nahum also warns us to be sure that we are among those who seek refuge in God and not among those who fight against Him. Divine judgment is a sword that cannot be deflected by hypocrisy.

Nahum Study Notes

1:2-6 Even Christians who are firmly convinced of the authority and inspiration of the Scriptures tend to minimize, or explain away, descriptions of the wrath and vengeance of God such as Nahum presented here. While it may not be appropriate to use such passages when first approaching people with a view to persuading them of the truth of the Bible, eventually there comes a time when we cannot avoid the question of how God's wrath and vengeance are related to His love. Pursuing these connections requires thought, courage, and a willingness to come to know God as He is and not as we might wish Him to be. Conversion to the faith of Christ is not simply a matter of "asking Jesus to come into your heart." It involves a metanoia (the NT word for repentance), which means, literally, a "change of mind." In other words, becoming a believer involves adopting a new worldview, or perspective on reality. The modern Western world view has blurred distinctions between right and wrong, and within such a perspective there is no place for the wrath and judgment of God. But when one's perspective changes, and it becomes evident that God is a moral force to be reckoned with, then it becomes equally apparent that serious consequences ensue for those who attempt to live without regard for His plan for human life (see Rm 1:16-32).

Introduction to Habakkuk

AUTHOR

Habakkuk was a prophet of the late seventh century B.C., contemporary to Jeremiah. One explanation has his name based on a root meaning "to embrace." The Greek OT spelling "Hambakoum" suggests a root meaning "plant" or "vegetable." Other than his work as a prophet, nothing for certain of a personal nature is known about Habakkuk. Tradition makes him a priest of the tribe of Levi. The apocryphal work, Bel and the Dragon, tells a story about Habakkuk being taken to Babylon by an angel to feed Daniel while he was in the lions' den. Habakkuk must have prophesied shortly before the Babylonians brought Judah under their control. The Babylonians were already notable as a force that other nations feared (1:7), but they had not yet made Judah a vassal of their empire. Since the first foray of Nebuchadnezzar into Judah took place in 605 B.C. (Dn 1:1-2), Habakkuk must have prophesied before then. He made no reference to the Assyrians, so it is likely that he preached after the fall of Nineveh in 612 B.C.

Habakkuk was concerned about divine justice but faced a dilemma. God was prepared to judge the violence in the southern kingdom of Judah through the Babylonians, but what about the Babylonians? Weren't they even more violent and wicked than the Judeans? Habakkuk was not afraid to question the purposes of God and to "watch to see" how God would respond (2:1).

Habakkuk's book contains an "oracle" (1:1) and a "prayer" (3:1). In the oracle Habakkuk pronounced judgment against both the wicked in Judah and the Babylonians. The prayer is called Shigionoth, a reference to a tune for singing or to the style in which it was composed (see Ps 7). Other musical terms in Habakkuk's prayer include Selah (3:3,9,13) and a comment about "stringed instruments" (3:19). The prayer also has a dedication to "the choir director" (3:19). Clearly the third chapter was meant for liturgical worship with instrumental music.

THE MEANING OF HABAKKUK'S MESSAGE

Habakkuk 2:4 summarizes the prophet's message from the Lord: "Look, his ego is inflated; he is without integrity. But the righteous one will live by his faith." In other words, those who trust in themselves and have no concern for others will perish in divine judgment, but those who trust in the Lord and obey His laws will live. While this verse does not explicitly mention judgment, the rest of the chapter develops the consequences of the sin of pride (2:6-20). Also, the chapter lays out what it means to be righteous. The righteous person is not a drunkard, is not deeply in debt, is not given to violence, is not a robber, is not sexually immoral, and is not an idolater. Instead, the righteous person trusts completely in the Lord, pleading for mercy and waiting patiently for Him to bring about salvation in the day of judgment.

The prayer of chapter 3 describes the awesome character of God as Judge in powerful and moving imagery. The closing lines where Habakkuk speaks of his resolve to wait patiently for the Lord despite all the signs of disaster around him are a classic expression of faith and are much quoted.

Habakkuk Study Notes

2:2-5 The Lord commanded Habakkuk to write the vision He was giving him clearly—literally, "so that he may run who reads it." This could be taken in two ways: either the tablets were to be written in letters large enough that a person running by would not have to stop to read them, or that the message was so clear that a messenger could run with it. This message was for all God's people distressed by arrogant oppressors, whether aggressive foreign nations ("the Chaldeans," 1:6) or treacherous and greedy members of Habakkuk's own community (1:13). Its essence was "Trust, and you will be able to live!" This was the ultimate answer to both of the prophet's complaints. God is going to deal with wickedness among His people in His own good time, as He is also going to deal with wickedness generally (Gn 3:15). Even when appearances and human reasoning contradict what God has said, His people can trust His word given through the prophetic vision.

2:4 The translation "faith" in this verse is much debated; some prefer to use the word "faithfulness" instead. The Hebrew word is 'emunah, the root of our word "amen," and it signifies reliability and steadfastness. Ultimately it is a word that signifies loyalty to the Lord's covenant. Thus there is not a great deal of difference between faith, faithfulness, and steadfast allegiance to God. The person who has true faith in God will remain faithful despite outward circumstances (3:16-19), and the faithful person will not endure without faith in God (see Heb 10:36-39).

Paul quoted verse 4 to support his argument that the gospel is "God's power for salvation to everyone who believes" because "the righteous will live by faith" (Rm 1:16-17). Those who trust in what God has done through Jesus Christ—not simply as a matter of intellectual belief but as a matter of life commitment—will be saved, or delivered, from the consequences of sin and the effects of God's wrath. Paul made an even stronger argument from Hab 2:4 in his letter to the Galatians, asserting that salvation is through faith, not through "the law" (of Moses; Gl 3:11). Habakkuk did not directly contrast righteousness based on keeping the law with righteousness based on faith; to a prophet of Israel there would have been no difference between these concepts, since the law itself was an act of God's grace (Dt 7:6-11). But he did make faith the key element for survival when the Lord brings disaster. Habakkuk's statement should be viewed in light of earlier prophets who stressed that offering sacrifices according to the requirements of the law was useless when a genuine commitment to live according to God's standards of justice and mercy was lacking.

3:16-19 At the end of his book, Habakkuk reiterated his determination to continue to trust God even when conditions of physical survival would become almost insurmountable. Nothing would deter him from his first obligation as a worshiper of Yahweh, to "triumph" and "rejoice" in Him. The "salvation" (v. 18) Habakkuk mentioned, in other words, is not dependent on people or circumstances but on God, who supplies "strength" (v. 19). That was Paul's point: Salvation is through faith and therefore dependent on God alone, not on what people strive to do by their own means nor upon the outward circumstances of life. One can hear the echo of Habakkuk in Paul's admonition, "Rejoice in the Lord always. I will say it again: Rejoice!" (Php 4:4).

3:19 The final line of Habakkuk is an instruction for musical performance, similar to what is found in the superscriptions of many of the psalms. This would indicate that his prophecy, or a portion of it, was intended for use in worship.

Introduction to Zephaniah

AUTHOR

Zephaniah received his prophetic message from the Lord during the reign of Josiah, king of Judah (640–609 B.C.). Possibly Zephaniah's great-great-grandfather was the famous Hezekiah, the reformer king of Judah (1:1). Hezekiah and Josiah were the two kings of Judah who made the greatest effort to purify worship from its pagan elements, making it conform to the law of Moses. However, Zephaniah denounced the mixing of pagan worship with true worship that still existed in Judah, showing that even the efforts of these two great reformers were not enough to make a lasting impression on the nation.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF ZEPHANIAH

Josiah carried out a religious reform that was unmatched in the history of Israel since the days of Hezekiah. Just as Hezekiah's righteous reign was followed by the evil reign of his son Manasseh, so Josiah's reforms were soon undone by his sons Jehoahaz (2 Kg 23:29-33) and Jehoiakim (2 Kg 23:34–24:1) and Zedekiah (successor to Jehoiakim's son; 2 Kg 24:18). The wickedness in Judah was so great that even Josiah could not affect lasting reform.

Zephaniah denounced the way the Judeans mixed the worship of the Lord with the worship of idols (1:4-5,9), and he criticized the religious and political leaders in Jerusalem (3:1-4). Josiah started his religious reforms early in his reign (2 Ch 34:3-7), but he carried out his major reforms only after Hilkiah the high priest discovered the book of the law in the temple in the eighteenth year of his reign (2 Kg 23; 2 Ch 34:8-33). It seems likely that Zephaniah delivered his messages prior to 622 B.C., Josiah's eighteenth year. Zephaniah also predicted the destruction of Assyria and the fall of Nineveh, so he must have prophesied prior to 612 B.C., when Nineveh fell.

THE MEANING OF ZEPHANIAH'S MESSAGE

Like Joel, Zephaniah talked at length about the "Day of the LORD," and there are some striking similarities in wording between the two books (cp. 1:14-16 with Jl 1:15; 2:1,30-31). The day of the Lord, said Zephaniah, would have severe consequences for the sinners in Judah, and Zephaniah exhorted the people to repent by seeking the Lord in humility (2:1-3).

Not only would the Lord judge Judah, but He would also destroy Judah's neighbors (2:4-11) as well as all the nations of the world (3:8). Zephaniah tied together the theme of judgment on Judah and the nations by focusing on the cities of Nineveh and Jerusalem (2:13–3:7).

Following worldwide judgment, there would be a new era of blessing for the nations and for Israel. Zephaniah's picture of the people's new relationship with the Lord is one of the most beautiful in all of Scripture: "[God] will rejoice over you with gladness" (3:17).

From Zephaniah we learn that God cannot tolerate the worship of other gods alongside Him, nor can He tolerate violence, fraud, complacency, haughtiness, lying, or deceit. God has absolute power to judge and destroy because He created all things, but He does not use this power in an arbitrary way; He uses it to respond to evil and injustice or to idolatry and false worship. We also learn from Zephaniah that God responds to true and sincere repentance. God loves His people who serve Him humbly.

Zephaniah Study Notes

2:1-3 Faith in God involves the intellect but so much more. The mind that acknowledges God sees His high standards and becomes aware of the distance between the actions of human beings and God's requirements. In this section, the prophet called on Israel to "seek the LORD." This could refer to desiring to "inquire of Him" (1:6) or to turning to Him in repentance. These actions are the opposite of indifference to the Lord and abandoning Him.

3:14-20 Zephaniah looked ahead to the day of the Lord's deliverance in language that had a historical application—apparently the return of Judah and Jerusalem from exile (v. 20)—and also to the coming of the kingdom of God, when the Lord would dwell amidst His people (v. 15; cp. Rv 21:3). The prophet summoned the people to "be glad and rejoice with all your heart," indeed, to join the Lord in His own rejoicing (v. 17). His poetic language depicts the Lord as a warrior, whose "shouts for joy" mark the festive celebration of victory in battle (see Ps 118:24, where the same Hb root smh is used).

Introduction to Haggai

AUTHOR

Haggai was one of the "postexilic" (sixth-century) prophets. His name probably means that he was born on one of the Jewish feast days. He and the prophet Zechariah roused the people of Judah to finish the temple under Zerubbabel's leadership. Haggai focused much of his preaching on the temple but also made important predictions about what God planned for the future of His people.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF HAGGAI

Haggai's book has five messages, each provided with a heading that gives an exact date based on the second year of the Persian king Darius I (Hystaspes), 520 B.C. (see Zch 1:1,7).

After Cyrus the Great, king of Persia, defeated the Babylonians, he decreed that various peoples who had been taken captive to Babylonia were free to return to their ancestral homes and reestablish their religion. His original decree still exists today as an artifact in the British Museum, the so-called Cyrus Cylinder. This decree also applied to the Judeans in Babylonia, and a contingent of them returned to the land and brought with them the temple vessels that had been taken to Babylon (Ezr 1:1-11).

Once back in Jerusalem, the people erected an altar on the temple site and reinstated offerings to the Lord. Within a year they were able to lay a foundation for the temple (Ezr 2:68–3:13). After some political opposition from "the enemies of Judah and Benjamin," the work ceased and was not reinstated until the time of Haggai and Zechariah (Ezr 4:1-5,24; 5:1-2). Haggai and Zechariah wrote as though the building was founded for the first time by Zerubbabel in their day (Hg 2:18; Zch 4:9). The project had been neglected so long that it was necessary to start over from the foundation up. Eventually the people did rebuild the temple (Ezr 6:1-18).

THE MEANING OF HAGGAI'S MESSAGE

Haggai and Zechariah were called to bring the people back to proper worship of the Lord. The first priority was to get the temple rebuilt, but the people did not share this priority. So Haggai pointed out that some difficulties the Judeans faced in meeting their basic needs were due to their neglect of the Lord and His house. The solution was to collect the necessary materials and start the work, and that is exactly what the people did. Under the leadership of Zerubbabel their governor and Joshua the high priest, "they began work on the house of Yahweh of Hosts, their God" (1:14).

Haggai then exhorted the people to continue their work in light of the Lord's abiding presence among them (2:1-9). The temple in its initial stage might not have seemed like much, but the Lord would be with His people just as He had been with their ancestors when they came out of Egypt. The Lord would fill the new house with His glory and grant the blessing of peace to His chosen people.

Haggai reiterated the relationship between material blessing and proper worship of the Lord (2:10-19). Holiness cannot be transferred from one object to another, but uncleanness can. When the people neglected the temple, their disobedience was transferred to the sacrifices they brought to the altar (see Ezr 3:3). The Lord could not accept those sacrifices, so their land had been plagued rather than blessed. Now that they were obeying the Lord's prompting to rebuild the temple, they could expect that the Lord would accept their offerings and once again bless their land (Hg 2:18-19).

As Haggai dealt with the coming material blessings on Judah, he looked ahead to a time when the Lord would "fill this house with glory" (2:7). At that time the "glory of this house" would be "greater than the first" (2:9). This prophecy points to the coming of the Messiah, whose presence in the temple would represent the glory or the presence of the Lord.

Haggai stressed the messianic theme with the Lord's promise to make Zerubbabel "like My signet ring" when heaven and earth are shaken and the kingdoms of the earth overthrown (2:21-23). Zerubbabel, as a descendant of David, symbolized the continuation of the line of David even though he was no more than "governor of Judah," not a king. That line would continue down to the Messiah Himself, Jesus Christ. God would accomplish everything: the shaking, the overthrow, and the elevating of Zerubbabel. In this sense Zerubbabel prefigured the Messiah.

An important lesson from Haggai is that the Lord should always take first priority in life. We cannot expect that He will hear our prayers and bless us if we do not make obedience to Him of first importance.

Also, there is continuity in the way the Lord works with His people throughout history. We can be confident of His abiding presence because He has always been present with His people. He has not forgotten His promise: "I am with you always, to the end of the age" (Mt 28:20).

Another principle from Haggai is that we can know that history is working toward the goal of the messianic kingdom. Christians await the second coming of Christ to usher in that kingdom, guaranteed to them by the promise of the Lord Himself (1 Co 15:20-28; 1 Th 5:9-11).

Haggai Study Notes

1:1-15 To acknowledge the Lord as God has implications for ordinary decisions of life. It is to live before One who is all knowing, all-powerful, and who has an agenda. He has a plan that impinges on the details of our life. The people who had returned from Babylon through God's grace and leadership soon tried to put Him at the edge of their awareness. They had their own agenda, building comfortable homes for themselves while God's house lay in ruins (v. 4). Through Haggai's preaching, the people were moved to respond to the Lord's command to build His house for His glory.

1:5-8 For the prophets before the Babylonian exile, the major issues were the people's tendency to worship false gods and the social injustice that created severe inequalities between rich and poor. For prophets whose message focused on the postexilic Judean community, the issue was different. The great need was the restoration of the institutions of Israelite worship centering in the sanctuary. Ezekiel drew up a blueprint for the restored temple and its ceremonies (Ezk 40–47); Malachi called for the purification of the priesthood (Mal 3:1-4) and faithfulness in the tithe (Mal 3:8-10). Zechariah, likewise, was concerned with the honor of the priesthood (Zch 3:1-5). Haggai also turned to this emphasis on worship. It was because the people had neglected their responsibilities, including the rebuilding of the Lord's house, that their efforts to prosper came to nothing. His message was a precursor to Jesus' teaching, "with the measure you use, it will be measured to you" (Mt 7:2). One cannot open the hand to receive while clutching what he already has.

2:2 Zerubbabel, governor of the community of returned exiles, was a descendant of David (Mt 1:6-13; Lk 3:27-31). But the Lord's promise to David that his dynasty would endure (2 Sm 7:12-16) was not fulfilled in Zerubbabel; the family dropped into obscurity after his time. The fulfillment awaited the appearance of Jesus, "a descendant of David according to the flesh" (Rm 1:3).

Zechariah Articles

How Should a Christian Understand Postmodernism?

by Douglas R. Groothuis

The term postmodernism means many different things. However, postmodernist philosophy, generally understood, claims to leave behind modernist (or Enlightenment) commitments to the objectivity of truth, the universality of reason, and the inevitability of progress. Instead of attempting to fashion a rational worldview, postmodernism opts for lesser goals by cobbling together various ideas, practices, and goals for pragmatic purposes. As postmodernist Walter Truett Anderson puts it, "Truth isn't what it used to be." Postmodernism embraces a cluster of ideas, most of which contradict the Christian understanding of truth, authority, and rationality. (One positive note is that postmodernism tends to deflate overly optimistic accounts of human reason and progress based solely on human ability.)

Postmodernists claim that any comprehensive and authoritative worldview is forever out of reach and that to claim otherwise is an arrogant pretext for dominating those with whom one disagrees. For example, claims for the objective truth of the Christian worldview are unwarranted and lead to the oppression of non-Christians. Such "metanarratives" (Jean-Francois Lyotard), or stories used to describe reality as a whole, must be abandoned. No worldview holds any objective or rational authority over any other.

Thinkers such as Jacques Derrida "deconstruct" texts in order to abolish their authority. Texts do not possess any knowable or rational meaning established by the author and discernible by the informed reader. Their meaning is variable and open-ended. The text has no authority. The reader contributes decisively to the meanings (plural) of texts. Thus deconstruction undermines the truthfulness of any text (including the Bible) since no text contains a single meaning that may correspond with objective facts. (Ironically, deconstructionists decry "misinterpretations" of their own writings.)

For postmodernists, "truth" is fundamentally a social, linguistic construction devised for a certain purpose. Various cultures have their own "maps," which describe reality differently. However, we cannot determine which "map" connects more closely with reality, since we cannot press beyond our own cultural conditioning. There is no objective reality apart from our languages and concepts. Various communities determine their own truths. There is no God's-eye view of anything and thus no objective truth. As Friedrich Nietzsche declared, "There is no truth, only interpretation."

Against these claims, Scripture claims to be an objectively true revelation from God, authoritative on whatever it speaks (Rm 3:4; 2 Tm 3:15-17). Only God knows reality comprehensively, but humans may attain to partial knowledge by attending to God's revelation and by using their minds in wise ways. The Bible—and most philosophers—claim that a true statement is one that corresponds with reality. Social customs or personal opinions do not create truth; hence the Bible's condemnation of idols as false gods. The statement "Jesus is Lord" does not merely express the cultural language and tradition of Christians. It is a truth claim about objective realities. Moreover, good apologetic arguments may rationally verify the objective truth of this statement.

Postmodernist claims are logically flawed. First, their pronouncements on truth contradict themselves. Their statements claim to be applicable to reality itself, not merely to one's culture. Yet this is just what postmodernists claim cannot be done. In rejecting all objective authority, they end up asserting their own authority and their own metanarrative. This is contradictory and false. Second, sane people judge certain acts—such as the terrorist attacks on America on September 11, 2001—as objectively evil and not as merely relative social constructions. If this is so, the postmodern view of constructed morality cannot be defended. Postmodernism emphasizes the diversity of truth claims, particularly in pluralistic settings, but it provides no method to test these claims against reality.

Instead, it succumbs to a kind of intellectual indifference—the enemy of moral progress and spiritual virtue.

Although no major religion adheres to the postmodern view of truth, this mindset has affected how many people view spirituality, particularly in nations with significant religious freedom. Many think that religion is a matter of choice, taste, and preference. One seeks a designer religion that suits one's taste, or one is born into a religion that defines who one is. One may even mix and match elements from several religions. Debating whether a religion is true or false is pointless. All are "true" in the postmodern sense because they give meaning to people's lives. This perspective contradicts the Christian's apologetic duty to address the falsity and rational inadequacy of alternative religions in order to present Christianity as true, rational, and pertinent (2 Co 10:3-5).

Notable Christian Apologist: Origen

by Ted Cabal

Origen (A.D. 185–254) was born in Alexandria, Egypt, to Christian parents. Devout in the extreme, Origen devoted his life to Christian scholarship. Seeking to be totally faithful to the Bible and arguing for its complete inspiration, he worked diligently as a biblical scholar. As a philosophical theologian, however, he sometimes was led astray by his speculations (e.g., believing that God's conquering love will lead to universal salvation). Late in life Origen suffered torture during the reign of the emperor Decius and died a few years later.

Origen produced perhaps the greatest Christian apologetic work of the first few centuries, Against Celsus. Celsus, a pagan philosopher, argued that the OT did not predict events in the life of Jesus. The alleged fulfillments should be understood as nothing more than fabrications. Jesus' miracles also could be accounted for either as being legends or, worse, as being due to sorcery. The supposed resurrection was a fiction dependent on pagan mythology. And hints of truth or wisdom found in the Bible were borrowed from Greek philosophy.

This influential work of Celsus demanded a response, and Origen brilliantly refuted it point by point. He carefully demonstrated that OT prophecies concerning Christ were not manufactured, and he noted that miracles, in some measure, were still seen in the lives of those following Christ. Origen carefully displayed the evidence for the literal resurrection of Jesus through the confirmations of skeptics such as Thomas and Paul. And Origen, through a comparison of pagan mythology with the Bible, demonstrated not only the independence of the scriptural narratives of miracles and resurrection but also their superiority as truth.

Introduction to Zechariah

AUTHOR

Zechariah is the eleventh of the so-called Minor Prophets. Like Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Zechariah was a priest as well as a prophet. This is fitting since the book largely concerns the temple and priesthood and the purification of the people. Zechariah's grandfather Iddo was a priest who returned from exile with Zerubbabel (Neh 12:4), making it likely that Zechariah was Haggai's younger colleague. Whereas Haggai's focus was on the rebuilding of the temple and the reinstitution of the sacrificial system, Zechariah's was on the people's spiritual transformation.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF ZECHARIAH

Zechariah's book contains three exact dates. The first two (1:1,7) pertain to the second year of Darius (Hystaspes), or 520 B.C., and they correlate with the prophecies of Haggai (see the Introduction to Haggai). The third date (7:1) is from Darius's fourth year and marks the arrival of a delegation that came to worship the Lord and to ask about keeping a fast that commemorated the fall of Jerusalem.

While chapters 1–8 deal with the rebuilding of the temple, the priesthood, and the future of Jerusalem, chapters 9–14 deal mostly with the distant future and the coming messianic kingdom. Because of this division, some have thought that these later chapters were written by another author. However, it is just as likely that the social and political climate had changed in the country, and Zechariah's prophecies changed as a result. In this case it may be that these messianic prophecies were delivered sometime around 500 B.C.

THE MEANING OF ZECHARIAH'S MESSAGE

Zechariah stressed the presence of the Lord with His people (1:16; 9:9-10; 14:4,9) and also the necessity to obey the Lord, especially in matters of justice, mercy, compassion, and truthfulness. He was concerned that the returned exiles not repeat the mistakes of their forefathers whose disobedience had brought upon them the Lord's judgment (1:1-6).

Zechariah's eight night visions focus attention both on the Lord's purposes for His people in Judah and Jerusalem and on His purposes for the nations. The colored horses in the first and last visions represent different aspects of judgment that the Lord intends to carry out on the nations. The central visions speak of how the Lord is prepared to restore His relationship with the people of Judah and Jerusalem. Steps toward that restoration include reinstating the priesthood, rebuilding the temple, and cleansing the land of iniquity.

Zechariah, like Haggai, addresses not only the present condition of the land but also its future. Some aspects of the visions relate to the future messianic kingdom, especially in the promise of the coming Messiah (3:8-10). Zechariah taught that the Messiah would combine the offices of priest and king in one person (3:8; 6:12-13) and that He would be the Lord Himself (12:10; 13:7). Zechariah clearly stated that Yahweh will be "king over all the earth" (14:9; cp. 2:10-12; 8:20-23) but also said that the Lord's messianic representative will be "King" (9:9-10; cp. 3:8; 6:12-13; 11:4; 13:7). Zechariah also foreshadows the work of Jesus Christ on the cross by emphasizing the rejection of God's representative (11:4-13) and the subsequent need for cleansing in the land (12:10–13:1).

The Lord abides among His people and desires to bless them, but they continue to disobey Him and go their own way. That is the tension that Zechariah (in common with many of the other prophets) raised. And that is a tension that is still with us in the church. Zechariah's book is needed to direct our thoughts to the Lord's plan for blessing and also for cleansing.

It is also an encouragement for the believer, as well as a sign to the unbeliever, to realize how much about the ministry and life of Jesus Christ was seen ahead of time in the OT prophets. In this regard Zechariah stands alongside Isaiah and the Psalms as books with a wealth of messianic teaching.

Zechariah Study Notes

1:1 The heading to Zechariah's book identifies him as the son of Berechiah and grandson of Iddo, whereas Ezr 5:1 and 6:14 call him the son of Iddo (see Neh 12:16). As there is no special word for "grandson" in Hebrew or Aramaic, the word for "son" is sometimes used in its place (cp. Gn 29:5 with 28:5; 1 Kg 19:16 with 2 Kg 9:2). Evidently Iddo was better known than Berechiah.

3:1–4:14 This section is concerned with Joshua, the high priest of the returned Judean community, and Zerubbabel, the governor who was a descendant of David (Mt 1:6-13; Lk 3:27-31). Together, they were "the two anointed ones . . . who stand by the Lord of the whole earth" (4:14). Under the difficult conditions encountered by the returned exiles, the Lord sent Zechariah a vision of encouragement for these two men. But the vision looked ahead to Christ, the "anointed" (Messiah), who fulfills in Himself both roles: high priest (Heb 4:14) and Davidic ruler (Rm 1:3; Rv 22:16). Interestingly, Joshua was one of at least 17 men mentioned in the Bible whose name is Joshua (or a variant of it), including Jesus Himself.

9:9-10 Matthew quoted Zechariah's prophecy of a coming king when describing Jesus' entry into Jerusalem (Mt 21:4-5; cp. Jn 12:14-15). Verse 9 applied to Jesus' actions at that time, but verse 10 referred to the end of warfare against Ephraim (i.e., Israel) and Jerusalem, and peace among nations. These things did not occur before Jesus' crucifixion, and in fact warfare against Jerusalem took place when the Jews revolted against Rome in A.D. 66–70. Obviously, such warfare has not ended in our time.

Like many messianic prophecies in the OT, verses 9-10 appear to combine more than one appearance of the Messiah. That is, it did not distinguish between Christ's first coming and triumphal entry into Jerusalem and His second coming when He will establish His kingdom on earth. Other places in Zch predict things that would happen to Jesus Christ either in His first coming (11:4-14) or in His second coming (14:4).

Malachi Articles

Does the Bible Teach That Everyone Will Be Saved?

by Gregory Alan Thornbury

The Bible plainly teaches that only those who personally, consciously, and explicitly confess Jesus Christ as Lord possess eternal life. All others will face the holy and just wrath of God in hell throughout eternity.

Throughout the NT, the biblical writers uniformly describe a coming fixed and final divine judgment. Revelation 20:11-15 describes this scene in which all persons, both living and dead, will stand before God to be "judged according to their works." John wrote, "Anyone not found written in the book of life was thrown into the lake of fire." The "book of life" lists all those who have believed and obeyed Jesus Christ.

Jesus Himself said, "I will give to the thirsty from the spring of living water as a gift . . . But the . . . unbelievers . . . their share will be in the lake that burns with fire and sulfur, which is the second death" (Rv 21:6-8). This passage reveals central truths concerning who will be saved. Redemption comes by grace through faith in Christ, apart from individual merit. Those who have not believed are deemed "unbelievers" and will receive a just and endless punishment in hell.

During His earthly ministry, Jesus talked more often about final judgment than He did about heaven (see, for example, Mt 25:41; Lk 16:23-31). He also warned anyone who rejected Him, "Just as the weeds are gathered and burned in the fire, so it will be at the end of the age" (Mt 13:40). Throughout the NT, the apostles consistently echoed their Lord's theme (see 2 Th 1:5-9; Heb 9:27; 2 Pt 3:7).

Despite repeated scriptural emphasis to the contrary, universalists commonly raise three objections to the exclusivity of the gospel.

All religions are equally true; therefore everyone will be saved. This claim is easily disproved. For example, a Hindu might say all religions lead to God, while a Christian asserts that Jesus is the only way to the Father. In order to stay true to his conviction, the Hindu must say that the Christian's exclusive claim is wrong. But once he has said this, he has violated his dictum that all religions are equally valid. The two beliefs cannot both be right. Therefore it cannot be concluded on this basis that all persons will be saved.

God will give all human beings an opportunity to accept the gospel after death. Despite a lack of biblical evidence in its favor, this view teaches that God will offer a final chance for people to repent after death and before the judgment. On the contrary, the Scriptures clearly indicate that once a man dies, it is too late for him to repent and turn to God (see Mt 25:35-46; Lk 16:19-31). "It is appointed for people to die once—and after this, judgment" (Heb 9:27).

What about the "man on the island" who has never heard the gospel? It would not be fair for God to send such a person to hell for not believing in Jesus. This argument from emotion is often heard and particularly dangerous. If it is true that God is obligated to save everyone who has not heard the gospel, then we might be better advised to recall all missionaries and stop proclaiming the gospel. Of course, the Bible does not countenance such a God-dishonoring approach. The "man on the island," like all people, is in desperate need of the good news about the forgiveness of sins through Jesus Christ.

Introduction to Malachi

AUTHOR

The prophet Malachi's name means "my messenger," and some have wondered whether that was his real name or a title. For example, "My messenger" in 3:1 has the same Hebrew form as the name Malachi. Additionally, the phrases "the messenger of the LORD of Hosts" (2:7) and "the Messenger of the covenant" (3:1) are related to Malachi's name. The emphasis of the book is clearly on the message rather than the messenger, since 47 of the book's 55 verses are personal addresses from the Lord. An ancient Jewish tradition identifies Malachi with Ezra, but this seems improbable. Since all the other writing prophets are named in the heading to their book, it seems best to take Malachi as the prophet's name.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF MALACHI

Malachi could have written his book anytime between about 500–400 B.C. The earlier date is the approximate time for the fall of Edom (Esau), which Malachi referred to as in the past (1:2-4). The later date is about the time that Nehemiah's ministry ended and when the last part of the OT was written. Certain issues that Malachi treated were also treated by Ezra and Nehemiah, leading to the conclusion that Malachi was likely written between 450–400 B.C. These include the problems of mixed marriages (Ezr 9–10; Neh 10:30; 13:23-27; Mal 2:11), corrupt priests (Neh 13:4-9; Mal 1:6–2:9), and the failure of people to pay their tithes (Neh 13:10-13; Mal 3:5-10).

THE MEANING OF MALACHI'S MESSAGE

Malachi contrasted the faithfulness of the Lord with the faithlessness of Israel. The Lord had always loved Israel, still loved Israel, and would always love His people. In return, the Lord expected the honor due to a father from a child or the respect due to a master from a slave. The Israelites had failed to honor God, choosing instead to participate in disrespectful worship practices and to oppress their fellow Israelites. The Lord would deal with these issues by judging the guilty and blessing the repentant. He would purify His people, removing those who persisted in disobedience and leaving behind a righteous remnant.

While animal sacrifices and tithes are concerns more of the OT than of the NT, the principle of bringing the best to the Lord still abides. Honor and respect are still due the Lord, and He still desires that those who worship Him do so by dedicating themselves entirely to Him. The tithe was a way to carry out in an economic way the wholehearted love of God and the love of neighbor as oneself (Lv 19:18; Dt 6:4-9). Believers today would do well to consider all they have as a stewardship responsibility from the Lord, asking Him what He would have them do with what He has given.

Malachi Study Notes

1:2-5 Malachi begins with a reference to the long-standing tension between Israel and Edom, the descendants of Jacob's brother Esau who despised his birthright and held the promises of God in contempt (Gn 25:29-34). Moses admonished the Israelites, "Do not despise an Edomite" (Dt 23:7) because Esau was the brother of Jacob. But the Edomites continued to believe the Israelites had taken the land of Canaan by deception. They cooperated with the Assyrian invasion of Judah, and when the Judeans were taken into exile they claimed the land for themselves. For these reasons they came under the Lord's judgment (see Ezk 35:5-15; 36:1-15). When the Judean exiles returned to the region of Jerusalem the Edomites further opposed them. In this situation Malachi heard the Lord saying, "I loved Jacob, but I hated Esau" (vv. 2-3).

The word "hate" in the Bible does not always carry the same sense of antipathy and disgust associated with the English expression; it can mean simply to favor someone else with special privilege or devotion. In that sense, the Lord's "hatred" of Esau was only the other side of His loyalty to His covenant with Israel. Paul quoted verses 2-3 with that meaning in Rm 9:13 as an illustration of the Lord's mercy and compassion on whomever He chooses to bestow them (Rm 9:15). Nevertheless, in the circumstances of the Jews' return from exile, the hostility of the Edomites seems to have reached another level, provoking Malachi to call them "the people the LORD has cursed forever" (v. 4).

2:10-16 What Malachi taught about divorce must be understood in its historical context. The challenge facing the Judean community after the return from exile was the reestablishment of its religious institutions (see Hg 1:5-8). But Judean men were marrying women from other ethnic groups in the region who worshiped pagan gods (vv. 11-12)—in some cases, at least, divorcing their Judean wives ("the wife of your youth," v. 14) to do so. Marriage to unbelievers diluted their commitment to the faith of Israel and resulted in children who were not the "godly offspring" the Lord desired (v. 15). The prophet's overriding concern was not marriage, as such, but the effect of an unwise mixed marriage on a man's relationship to the Lord, and the impact of many such unions on the solidarity and stability of the covenant community.

Malachi admonished the men of Judah to honor the commitment they had made to the wife they married under the Lord's covenant, and not to "act treacherously" (v. 15) against her. To divorce her to marry a pagan woman would be to break faith with the Lord, as well as with her. The Lord finds such an action detestable. Malachi appealed not only to the covenant but also to the Lord's creation of man and woman, with "His life-breath" (v. 15), to become one flesh (Gn 2:7,21-23). As Creator, God is the Father of His people and desires covenantal loyalty within His family (Mal 2:10). (Apparently polygamy was not an option in Judah at this time, although earlier figures in OT history such as the Hebrew patriarchs, David and Solomon, had more than one wife. Either monogamous marriage had become the norm or, under the rigorous conditions of the earlier return from exile, men of ordinary means could not afford to practice polygamy.)

3:8-12 As it was for Haggai (see Hg 1:58), an issue for Malachi was the community's provision for its worship life. The people were not bringing in the tithe of their grain for the support of the priesthood and the temple ceremonies. In response, Malachi declared the word of the Lord: "Bring the full 10 percent into the storehouse" (v. 10). Interpreters do not all agree on the status of the tithe in Christian practice. Some see it as part of the law of Moses that has been superseded as a mandatory requirement in the new covenant of Jesus Christ. Others see it as a fundamental principle of faithful Christian living in the kingdom of God, comparable to the moral requirements of the Ten Commandments.

Most would agree on several points, however. (1) Thetithe of one's increase does not represent all that belongs to the Lord; it is emblematic of the fact that "everything in the heavens and on earth belongs to You"(1 Ch 29:11), and whatever a person has should be applied, in some way, to God's purposes. (2) The tithe supports the work of God through the church He has called to serve Him in the world. It is instrumental in making possible both the edification of believers and the outreach to unbelievers; without it, the church's mission and the extension of the kingdom of God would be hampered. (3) The practice of tithing, and of giving in general, prepares the believer to receive blessing from the Lord. The grasping hand is not open to what He seeks to give. On this last point, Malachi specifically urged the Judeans to "test Me in this way" (v. 10).

3:16-18 In the era of "postmodernism," the distinction between what is right and wrong is often minimized; what is wrong for one person, it is said, may be right for another, or what is right in one situation may be wrong in another. Such indifference to moral and ethical standards can even filter into the Christian community. Malachi spoke of a time when such indifference will no longer be the case, for those who "feared the LORD," at least, it would be clear what was righteous and what was wicked, and it would be evident who was truly serving God. Jesus Christ laid down a firm test of righteousness, or standing with God: "No one comes to the Father except through Me" (Jn 14:6). Whether or not a person is found "in Christ" (2 Co 5:17) would not be a matter of indifference; it would be a test on the order of that of which Malachi spoke.

4:2 Sometimes this verse is taken as a specific promise of the appearance of Jesus Christ. The KJV reads, "But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings." However, the Hebrew word for "sun" (shemesh) is feminine; a literal translation would be "and healing in her wings." In monuments from the ancient Near East, the sun is sometimes portrayed with wings. It is doubtful that this verse should be regarded as a messianic promise, in the narrow sense, although it does speak of the coming of that righteousness that marks the kingdom of God.

Matthew Articles

Does the New Testament Misquote the Old Testament?

by Paul Copan

Perhaps you've wondered why New Testament (NT) writers appear to take Old Testament (OT) verses out of context to make them fit their theology about Jesus' teaching or ministry. Critics cry foul and charge that such "fabricated predictions" referred to something other than a coming Messiah. For example, the context of Hosea 11:1 ("Out of Egypt I called My son") referred to Israel's exodus from Egypt, but Matthew 2:15 says that the "Son" was Jesus coming from Egypt. Isaiah 7:14 ("the virgin will conceive, have a son") directly concerned King Ahaz's time, when a "sign child" would be born within Isaiah's lifetime (7:15-16; 8:4), but Matthew 1:22-23 says Mary was the virgin fulfilling the Isaiah passage. Rachel's weeping in Jeremiah 31:15 probably referred to mourning over Judah being taken into exile (Babylon) in 586 B.C., but Matthew 2:18 speaks of weeping mothers after Herod's capricious decree to kill all boys under two in Bethlehem (where Rachel was buried).

Frequently critics—and Christians too—think prophecy means "prediction" and fulfillment means "realization of a prediction"; from this, critics conclude "fabricated predictions." However, this charge rests on a great mistake, and sometimes Christians become confused by it.

First, if the NT writers "plundered" the OT for proof texts, why, for instance, didn't Luke—who mentioned the virgin birth—quote Isaiah 7:14 (as Matthew did)? The same could be asked about other such passages.

Second, Jewish interpretation of the OT during Jesus' day viewed "fulfillment" more broadly, as more varied and nuanced. The literal approach was only one method.

Third—and most importantly—the word "fulfill" (ple-roo-) in the NT is used to portray Jesus as bringing to full fruition OT events or experiences (the exodus, covenant), personages (Jonah, Solomon, David), and institutions (temple, priesthood, sacrifices, holy days). "Fulfill" doesn't necessarily (or even primarily) refer to the mere fulfillment of a prediction. Rather, a theological point is being made: many OT events and institutions—usually related to Israel—foreshadow something greater in Christ and the new community He called together (e.g., Christ's calling 12 disciples, reminiscent of Israel's 12 tribes). Jesus is the true, beloved Son that Israel failed to be (Hs 11:1; cp. Mt 2:15; Lk. 3:22), the shepherd Israel's leaders weren't (Ezk. 34; cp. Jn 10:1-18), and the genuine ("true") fruit-bearing vine Israel wasn't (Ps 80:8,14; Is 5:1-7; cp. Jn 15:1-11). In His ministry, Jesus reenacted the history and experiences of Israel—but on a higher plane (e.g., 40 days of testing in the wilderness, giving a new "law" from a mountain in Matthew 5–7, being in the "belly" of the earth for "three days and three nights"). He took over Israel's destiny and role, bringing it to fulfillment. The Law of Moses has a handful of messianic predictions, but Jesus' fulfilling the Law (Mt 5:17; Lk 24:44) refers to His bringing it to completion.

Of course, there are predictions regarding the Messiah's birthplace (Mc 5; cp. Mt 2:5), the Messiah's death and atonement (Is 53), and a coming prophet and messenger (Dt 18; Mal 3). But fulfillment of the OT generally refers to the broader idea of perfectly embodying, typifying, epitomizing, or reaching a climax. For example, Jesus (citing Is 29:13) said to unbelieving Jews of His day, "Hypocrites! Isaiah prophesied correctly about you when he said: 'These people honor Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me' " (Mt 15:7-8, emphasis added). Of course, Isaiah didn't literally predict that Jesus would deal with hostile religious leaders; rather, Jesus was using the situation from Isaiah's time to epitomize, embody, and typify the same situation in His own day. This was typical of how Jews spoke of "fulfillment"—a this-is-that method called pesher: "This situation is a fulfillment or embodiment of that Scripture."

The NT writers weren't immoral or ignorant. They didn't illegitimately rip passages out of their context and deviously reduce them to messianic predictions. And they were well aware that OT writers (such as Hosea) were often commenting on events in Israel's past (such as the exodus in 11:1, "Out of Egypt I called My son") or events in their own day. But NT writers (and Jesus) interpreted the OT in a Christocentric manner: Jesus is the embodiment or completer of foreshadowed OT historical events, images, and personages. While fulfillment includes literal predictions of Christ and the new covenant, it goes far beyond to a richer theological embodiment of what the OT foreshadowed.

Does the Bible Contain Errors?

by Paul D. Feinberg

W"hy do you believe the Bible? It is an ancient book full of errors and contradictions." We have all heard this many times. However, most conservative evangelical Christians disagree with this claim. They hold to a doctrine called the inerrancy of Scripture.

The place to start our discussion is with a definition of inerrancy and error. By inerrancy, we mean that when all the facts are known, the Bible—in its original manuscripts and properly interpreted—will be shown to be true and never false in all that it affirms, whether related to doctrine, ethics, or the social, physical, or life sciences. Three matters in this definition are noteworthy. First, there is the recognition that we do not possess all the information to demonstrate the truth of the Bible. Much data has been lost due to the passing of time. It simply no longer exists. Other data await archaeological excavation. Second, inerrancy is defined in terms of truth that most philosophers today take to be a property of sentences, not words. This means that all the indicative sentences, or statements, of the Bible are true. Therefore, on this definition, an error in the Bible would require that it made a false statement. Finally, all information in the Bible, whatever the subject, is true. That is, it accurately records events and conversations, including the lies of men and Satan. It teaches truly about God, the human condition, and heaven and hell.

The belief in inerrancy rests on at least four lines of argument: the biblical, the historical, the epistemological, and the slippery slope arguments.

The biblical argument is drawn from what the Bible has to say about itself and is the most important. This argument may be formulated in a circular and a noncircular way. It is circular when one claims that the Bible says it is inspired and inerrant and that this is true because it is found in an inspired and inerrant Scripture. It is not circular when claims are made that are verifiable outside the document. This is possible because the Bible makes historical and geographical statements that are verifiable independently. Inerrancy follows from what the Bible has to say about its inspiration. It is the exhaled breath of God (2 Tm 3:16) and is the result of the Holy Spirit's guidance of human authors (2 Pt 1:21). It is a divine-human book. Moreover, the accreditation of a prophet in the OT requires nothing less than complete truthfulness (Dt 13:1-5; 18:20-22). Can God's written communication meet any less a standard? It should be noted that both these oral and written forms of communication involve the human element. This shows that human agency does not necessarily imply the presence of error. The Bible teaches its own authority as well. Matthew 5:17-20 teaches that heaven and earth will pass away before the smallest detail of the law fails to be fulfilled. John 10:34-35 teaches that Scripture cannot be broken. Furthermore, the way Scripture uses Scripture supports its inerrancy. At times arguments in Scripture rest on a single word (Ps 82:6; Jn 10:34-35), the tense of a verb (Mt 22:32), or the number of a noun (Gl 3:16). Finally, the character of God stands behind His word, and He cannot lie (Nm 23:19; 1 Sm 15:29; Ti 1:2; Heb 6:18).

A second argument is historical. While there have been those who disagree, inerrancy has been the normative Christian view throughout history. Augustine writes, "I have learned to yield this respect and honor only to the canonical books of Scripture: of these alone do I most firmly believe that the authors were completely free from error." Luther says, "Everyone, indeed, knows that at times they [the fathers] have erred as men will; therefore I am ready to trust them only when they prove their opinions from Scripture, which has never erred." John Wesley gave a similar opinion: "Nay, if there be any mistakes in the Bible, there may as well be a thousand. If there be one falsehood in that book, it did not come from the God of truth."

A third argument is epistemological (based on what and how we know something). A helpful way to formulate this argument is to recognize that if the Bible is not entirely true, then any of it may be false. This is particularly problematic when some of the most important information communicated is not verifiable through independent facts. It teaches about an invisible God, angels, and heaven. Inerrancy requires that those claims of the Bible that are testable will be shown to be true once all relevant information is available. Critics of the Bible's full truthfulness point out numerous alleged errors. But in these cases, the passage in question may have been misinterpreted by the critic or not all relevant facts are brought to light. During the twentieth century, numerous claims of the Bible, thought to be in error, were shown to be true in the light of more information. If that is so, why should anyone believe what is unverifiable? Only an inerrant Bible assures us that what we read is true.

The fourth argument is the slippery slope (not a fallacy in this case). The argument states that inerrancy is so fundamental that those admitting errors into the Bible will soon surrender other central doctrines like the deity of Christ and/or the substitutionary atonement. The denial of inerrancy leads to greater doctrinal error. This does not happen in every case, but it is demonstrable as a trend.

Each of these arguments has been criticized. However, a common and fundamental objection to them contends this doctrine is meaningless since it is true only of nonexistent autographs (the original manuscripts). But is it meaningless? Not if two conditions are met: (1) we possess a sufficient number of high-quality copies of the autographs, and (2) there is a sophisticated discipline of textual criticism to use these copies in determining what the original must have said. Both of these conditions are met in the case of the Bible.

The fundamental issue is the Bible's teaching of its own inerrancy. And for those who are skeptical, evidence from science, archaeology, and history has supported this claim over and over again.

Who Are You to Judge Others?

by Paul Copan

Hands down, Matthew 7:1 is the most frequently quoted Bible verse today: "Do not judge, so that you won't be judged." It's been twisted to mean we can't say someone's action or lifestyle is wrong. However, when someone says, "Don't judge," he's judging you for judging someone else. You've done wrong by saying someone else has done wrong! Clearly, we can't escape making moral judgments. Furthermore, in the same context of the oft-quoted verse, Jesus made a moral judgment about certain persons, using metaphors about "dogs" and "pigs" (Mt 7:6), stressing that we shouldn't continue to present God's grace to those who persistently scoff and ridicule. At some point we must shake the dust off our feet and move on to the more receptive (Mt 10:14; Ac 13:51). On the other hand, Jesus commanded, "Stop judging according to outward appearances; rather judge according to righteous judgment" (Jn 7:24, emphasis added).

How do we resolve the apparent tension? By taking note of the spirit in which we make judgments. Do we think we're superior (the attitude Jesus condemned), or are we assessing actions or attitudes with a spirit of humility and concern, recognizing our own weaknesses (1 Co 10:13; Gl 6:1)? In Matthew 7:5, Jesus told us first to examine ourselves (removing the log from our own eye), then we can help our brother or sister (taking the speck out of his or her eye). So there is a problem to be dealt with—but only after self-examination. The wrong kind of judging is condemning. The right kind of judging is properly evaluating moral (or doctrinal) matters with a humble, helpful attitude. (In 1 Co 5:5, "judging"—even excommunicating—is required in light of a church member's shameless sexual misconduct.) We should treat others the way we would want to be treated (cp. Mt 7:12), thinking, There—but for the grace of God—go I.

So when discussing judging with others, first clarify what you mean by the word "judge." This can serve as the context for clarifying right and wrong kinds of judgment. Further, we must take care to avoid the "Who am I to say So-and-So is wrong?" mentality. We can't shrink from making moral judgments, nor can we escape them—lest we declare it wrong to say another is wrong.

Are Biblical Miracles Imitations of Pagan Myths?

by Gary R. Habermas

Frequently the complaint is made that biblical miracles, especially those of Jesus, were motivated or even inspired by pagan accounts from the ancient world. We are told that healings, demon possession, virgin births, and resurrections were all common fare in ancient times. So the implication is that the Bible is no different from other religious documents. Perhaps Christians even plagiarized other accounts.

While it is true that a myriad of miracle stories adorned the ancient world, it does not follow that Scripture duplicated them. Although promoted in some popular circles, this assumption is mistaken on several levels.

It is true that some scholars emphasize the similarities between pagan and biblical miracle accounts. But we must also accent the more common (and profound) differences. For example, there is usually an immense philosophical gulf between the pagan and biblical backgrounds for their respective miracle accounts. The pagan mindset most commonly incorporated cyclical, repetitive patterns in nature, marked by the seasonal cycles. In contrast, the Jewish philosophy of history moved in linear patterns, from one event to the next, culminating in God's grand climax.

Further, these pagan stories often concern persons who never even lived in history, such as Hercules of ancient Greek mythology, while Jesus and other biblical miracle workers undoubtedly did. Moreover, scholars note that these pagan stories were never influential in Palestine, where a far different outlook prevailed.

Surprisingly, virtually no miracle stories in the ancient world are even candidates for inspiring Jesus' miracles. Few of these tales both predate the NT and closely approximate Jesus' miracles. So it is difficult to prove a parallel.

Regarding Jesus' resurrection, the inadequacy of this proposed solution grows even more apparent. Writings clearly claiming that prominent pagan heroes were resurrected postdate the NT accounts. Scholars know that some ancient religious teachings copied from Christianity, and Jesus' resurrection may be an example of what was copied!

So there are many reasons why the NT accounts were not derived from pagan texts. The most crucial response, stated simply, is that we have many reasons for believing that Jesus actually performed miracles during His ministry. Indeed, virtually all contemporary critical scholars agree that Jesus performed many acts that might be termed "miracles" or "exorcisms."

Most of all, there is an incredible amount of evidence arguing that Jesus was really raised from the dead. For instance, we have reliable reports from various authors regarding many who thought that they had actually seen the risen Jesus. The most crucial witness is Paul, an eyewitness who provided very early testimony. So we must not miss the clear point that a number of early, credible witnesses (including previous skeptics Paul and James) were proclaiming their conviction that they had seen the risen Jesus, for which they were willing to die. Far from being inspired by faraway tales, many died for their honest belief that they had really seen the risen Jesus. Pagan stories do not explain this conviction.

How Should We Treat New Challenges to the Christian Faith?

by Gary R. Habermas

It seems every year during the Easter season the popular press boldly announces new claims troubling to Christians. Stories emerge, often as if breaking news, promising exciting new evidence contrary to the Bible in the form of scholarly research, archaeological discovery, or scientific breakthrough.

In recent years believers have been challenged with questions such as: Was Jesus married to Mary Magdalene? Did Jesus father one or more children? Was Mary supposed to be the appointed leader of the church but was denied that right by the male leaders? Was Judas Iscariot not really the betrayer of Jesus, but Jesus' key disciple and hero? Were Jesus' bones really discovered in His family's burial tomb?

These tests to Christian faith arise in other formats, too. Novels, movies, chain e-mails, or casual talks with friends often present alleged reasons for believing the Bible wrong.

Perhaps the majority of Christians are not troubled, simply assuming that anti-biblical bias explains all such allegations. Others may react fearfully as if their faith were in danger of crumbling at any moment. But this reaction is almost never based on any thorough study of the claims themselves.

So how should Christians respond to ideas which, if they were true, might undermine our faith? Following are general suggestions we can utilize when evaluating disturbing challenges.

(1) Divorce our emotions from the challenge. We should immediately remind ourselves that the Bible has successfully withstood innumerable attacks over the centuries. Though many sensationalistic claims have been made against it, how many of them have ultimately proven the Bible wrong? That's right, none! So why spend painful emotional energy before the conflicting claims are sorted out? Typically these controversies are forgotten precisely because they are unable to withstand the scrutiny of scholarly examination.

Even if the claim initially appears substantial, there is still no reason to worry. Researchers have noted that this type of emotional response is linked not to the challenges but to the questions we ask ourselves at such moments: "Oh no, what if my faith is misplaced?" or "What if the Bible is wrong?" But though we rightly are passionate about God's Word, we should not succumb to troubling thoughts when others question its truth. Yes, a challenge has been proposed, so now we will study the specific claims being made.

(2) Assume the Bible is true. We should not adopt the critic's view that the Bible is guilty until proven innocent. Remembering how Scripture has withstood the test of time inspires us to develop our response with confidence and patience. Neither uncritical acceptance nor superficial rejection of an anti-biblical claim is worthy of those who know God does not lie. Presupposing the Bible's truthfulness enables the Christian to work toward an answer with persistence and the clarity of mind that stems from assurance.

(3) Carefully analyze each critical allegation against the Bible. Too many Christians attempt to counter critical views without having done their homework. Before we begin jousting with specific challenges, we need to understand the fundamental assumptions of the critic's worldview. Often just knowing the opponent's presuppositions helps us spot potential biases masquerading as scholarly research. Though we must still analyze the evidence, we need not accept pronouncements just because they are issued by an authority. If we know that Professor X discounts even the possibility of miracles, we may rightly assume that any relevant evidence for the miraculous did not factor into his reasoning.

A Christian respondent wisely focuses on those challenges which are stronger and more important. Questions on the periphery of the faith need not be treated with the same diligence as attacks on indispensable doctrines. Happily, our cardinal doctrines are also the best grounded, often established by multi-faceted evidence.

We should also understand and employ basic critical thinking skills. Some scholars exhibit an almost uncanny knack for dissecting opposing arguments and exposing their crucial weaknesses. This proficiency can be cultivated by asking certain essential questions. Is there an argument here based on evidence, or is someone simply making an assertion? If evidence is presented, how strongly does it actually support the critical claim? Are words being used for the purpose of explanation (cognitive meaning) or for persuasion (emotive meaning)? Are fallacies of reasoning employed (e.g., straw man: attacking something the Bible doesn't even say)?

(4) Get help from Christian scholars. The Lord has blessed the church with scholars devoted to working in the very disciplines so often employed to attack biblical Christianity. The works of outstanding evangelical biblical scholars, theologians, philosophers, scientists, and historians should be consulted. Often what the media presents as a daring new challenge to the Christian faith, we will find that experts have already thoroughly discredited.

(5) Be patient! Though we would like to have instant answers, they do not always come on our timetable. The wise Christian continues to assume the truthfulness of Scripture while awaiting solutions to problems. We happily confess we don't have all the answers (only God does!), even while we confidently await further substantiation of biblical veracity.

To sum up, controlling our emotions is a prerequisite for responding adequately to critical challenges. We also reject the notion that Christianity is guilty until proven innocent. Then, there are no substitutes for knowing not only our position but also the assumptions that may color the critic's allegations. We employ the basic tools involved in digesting and dissecting an argument. This provides the basis upon which we build our counter-challenge, aiming for the most crucial and vulnerable premises of our opponent's position. We thoughtfully utilize the labors of faithful Christian scholars. And we are patient when answers don't come quickly—because we know there are good answers.

Is the New Testament Trustworthy?

by Darrell L. Bock

Like any ancient book, the NT has a strange feel about it. It reports unusual events as well as strange customs. This naturally raises the question of whether we can trust what it tells us. These six statements of fact affirm that the NT can be trusted.

1. The books of the NT were recognized through a careful sifting process. The process stretched from the first to the fourth century. The catalysts for the formation of the NT were the use of Scripture in worship, the rise of false teaching (which necessitated identifying the authentic works), and persecution (which called for the burning of holy books—so one needed to know which those were!). The books included in the NT were those regarded as giving evidence of divine authority. Was it associated with an apostle? Was it in line with other authentic biblical books? Was it widely used and received? These were the questions used to identify the trustworthy and authoritative books of the NT.

2. The NT is based on reliable sources carefully used and faithfully transmitted. The Bible is both like other books and unlike them. Luke explained that he used sources (Lk 1:1-4). Jesus taught that the Spirit would help these apostles recall what Jesus taught them (Jn 14:25-26). To argue that the Bible is inspired by God does not dismiss the human elements that make up the book. What are the sources and how were they handled? The texts surrounding Jesus stress the role of eyewitnesses as the root of the tradition (see Lk 1:2). An apostolic association ensured the account's credibility.

The distance between event and recording is not great—less than a lifetime, a small distance of time by ancient standards. For example, the first-century Roman historians Livy and Dionysius of Halicarnassus were centuries removed from many of the events they chronicled. Judaism depended on the ability to pass things on with care from one generation to the next, recounting events with care. This does not exclude some variation, as is obvious by comparing the Gospel accounts or parallel accounts in 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, and 1 and 2 Chronicles. Judaism, and the Christianity that grew out of it, was a culture of memory. People memorized long liturgical prayers and more often than not worked from memory rather than from a written page. Anyone who has read a children's book again and again to his child knows that the mind is capable of absorbing vast amounts of wording and retaining it.

Finally the biblical text we have today basically reflects the text as it was originally produced. The NT has far better manuscript evidence than any other ancient document. Where most classical works, such as those of Plato, Herodotus, and Aristophanes, have from one to 20 manuscripts, the NT has about 5,400 Greek manuscripts that we can compare to determine the original wording, not to mention more than 8,000 ancient Latin manuscripts.

3. Assessing trustworthiness means understanding history's complexity. Differences in accounts do not necessarily equal contradiction, nor does subsequent reflection mean a denial of history. Events can be viewed from different angles or perspectives without forfeiting historicity. Thus the differences in the four Gospels enrich our appreciation of Jesus by giving us four perspectives on Him—Jesus in four dimensions, so to speak. Neither is reflection a denial of history. Sometimes the significance of a historical event, such as a football play, becomes clear only when we see successive events. History involves both what happened and its results. Trustworthiness simply affirms that the assessed account is an accurate portrayal of what took place and a credible explanation of what emerged, not that it is the only way the events in question were seen.

4. Trustworthiness demands not exhaustive but adequate knowledge of the topic. Sources are selective even when they are accurate. The Bible makes this point in John 21:25: "There are also many other things that Jesus did, which, if they were written one by one, I suppose not even the world itself could contain the books that would be written." When people call Scripture trustworthy, they are arguing that its testimony is not contrary to what happened and is sufficient to give us a meaningful understanding of God and His work for us (2 Tm 3:16-17). Speaking accurately is not the same as speaking exhaustively.

5. Archaeology teaches us to respect the content of Scripture. Archaeology seldom can prove that events took place. What it can show is that the details of an account, some of them incidental, fit the time and culture of the text. Archaeology also shows that we should be cautious in pointing out errors in the Bible merely because only the Bible attests to something.

For example, there was once debate about the description in John 5:2 of a pool with five porticoes in Jerusalem, called Bethesda or Bethsaida. Many questioned its existence despite its wide attestation in ancient tradition. Different spellings of the locale in the NT manuscript tradition added to the tendency by many to reject the claim. In 1871 a French architect, C. Mauss, was restoring an old church and found a cistern 30 meters away. Later excavations in 1957–1962 clarified that it consisted of two pools large enough to hold a sizable amount of water and people. Today virtually no one doubts the existence of John's pool.

6. The Bible's claim for miracles are plausible when one considers the response to resurrection claims. The events of the Gospels were recorded within the lifetime of several of those who claimed to have observed them. Perhaps the greatest evidence for the resurrection is the change and reaction of those who testified to it. The disciples openly admitted that they had no formal training and for a long period were shockingly inept at responding to Jesus. Yet they become courageous leaders. They stood firm in the face of the threat of death and rejection by the Jewish leaders who resisted them. This did not involve one or two people but a whole host of leaders who left their mark on history, notably the former chief persecutor of the church, Paul. Both Peter and he, along with others such as the Lord's brother James, died for their belief in Jesus' resurrection.

The Trinity: Is It Possible That God Be Both One and Three?

by Douglas K. Blount

Like Jews and Muslims, Christians are monotheists. In other words, they believe in the existence of precisely one God. Unlike other monotheists, however, Christians also believe that, while there exists just one God, He is three persons—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The belief that the one and only God exists eternally as three persons is known as the doctrine of the Trinity. And this doctrine plays an important role in Christian faith. In fact, the doctrine of the incarnation—which says that Jesus as God became a man and that He is thus both fully divine and fully human—assumes it. This latter doctrine lies at the heart of Christian faith.

On its face, however, the doctrine of the Trinity might look like a contradiction. It might seem impossible that God be both one and three. Indeed, the apparent absurdity of this doctrine has led to at least two major errors, each of which elevates one of the doctrine's claims at the other's expense. On one hand, some stress the oneness of God at the expense of His threeness, claiming there is only one divine person. Those who describe God in this way usually say that the one divine person appears in different guises or masks, sometimes as Father, other times as Son, and still other times as Spirit. Since this view says the one divine person changes His mode of appearance, it is called modalism. On the other hand, some stress God's threeness at the expense of His oneness, claiming each of the three divine persons is a distinct god. This view, which says that there are three gods, is called tritheism.

But modalism and tritheism are at odds with the Bible, which presents God as both one and three. There is just one God (Dt 6:4), yet this God is three persons—Father, Son, and Spirit (Mt 3:16-17; Mk 1:9-11; Lk 3:21-22). No doubt it is difficult (or perhaps even impossible) for us to understand how God is both one and three. But something's being difficult (or even impossible) for humans to understand doesn't make it a contradiction.

A contradiction involves saying that something is both true and false at the same time and in the same way. So, for instance, one who says both that Napoleon lost the Battle of Waterloo and that Napoleon did not lose the Battle of Waterloo contradicts himself. It is logically impossible for Napoleon to have both lost that battle and not to have lost it. His claim is contradictory.

Now if Christians said both that (1a) there exists precisely one God, and that (1b) it is not the case that there exists precisely one God, they would contradict themselves. So also if they said both that (2a) there are three divine persons, and that (2b) it is not the case that there are three divine persons, they also would contradict themselves. But Christians do not affirm both 1a and 1b. Neither do they affirm both 2a and 2b. Rather, they affirm 1a and 2a. And this would be contradictory only if either 1a entails 2b or 2a entails 1b.

To put the point differently, when Christians say that God is both one and three, they do not say that He is one in the same way in which He is three. So, for instance, they do not say both that (1a) there exists precisely one God, and that (1c) there exist three gods. Nor do they say both that (2a) there exist three divine persons, and that (2c) there exists only one divine person.

Since 1c entails 1b, affirming both it and 1a would be contradictory. And since 2c entails 2b, affirming both it and 2a also would be contradictory. But, as a matter of fact, Christians deny both 1c and 2c. In affirming 1a and 2a, then, Christians affirm that in one way God is one and in another way He is three. And in so doing they do not contradict themselves.

So, then, those who think the doctrine of the Trinity is contradictory misunderstand either the nature of a contradiction or the doctrine itself. Perhaps they confuse contradiction with mere paradox, taking our inability to understand how the doctrine is true to entail that it is false. But our inability to understand how God is both one and three tells us far more about ourselves than it does about God. The Bible presents God as both one and three; that suffices for us to know that He is so, regardless of whether we understand the how of it.

Introduction to Matthew

AUTHOR

Nowhere does the first Gospel name its author. Though the title, "According to Matthew," was probably added early in the book's history, most likely around the beginning of the second century, the book was not quoted as Matthew's Gospel until Irenaeus, bishop of Lyon, did so around A.D. 180. Earlier documents quoting Matthew (going back to the same period as the title or earlier) do not name the Gospel from which the quotes came.

According to the sources available, the early church was in unanimous agreement that the Apostle Matthew was the first to write a Gospel and that he originally did so in Hebrew (or Aramaic). Irenaeus was the first to explicitly claim this, and it was repeated thereafter with relative frequency. The claim seems to stem, at least in part, from Papias, a bishop in Asia Minor, writing around A.D. 130.

The fourth-century church historian Eusebius cited Papias as affirming that Matthew arranged Jesus' sayings in Hebrew or Aramaic and each interpreted them as best he could. This sentence from Eusebius has provoked considerable scholarly debate. Was Papias saying that Matthew wrote a Gospel or merely that he wrote an orderly collection of Jesus' sayings? Was he claiming Matthew wrote in Hebrew (or Aramaic) or in Greek with a Semitic flavor? Did people try to translate Matthew's work into Greek? At one end of the spectrum, Papias may have been saying that Matthew arranged, in Hebrew, the sayings of Jesus (or perhaps just OT testimony about Jesus). At the other end of the spectrum, Papias may have been talking about a complete Gospel account, such as the Gospel of Matthew that we know. Certainly the church fathers understood the latter to be the case, and Jerome who translated the Bible into Latin (c. 380) even insisted that he was given access to the Hebrew original possessed by the Nazareans, a Jewish-Christian sect.

The problem for modern scholarship is that Matthew's Gospel shows few signs of having been translated into Greek from an earlier Semitic text. It appears much more likely to be an original Greek composition. Scholars thus disagree over whether Papias was wrong to insist on a Matthean Hebrew original or whether he was correct but was referring to something written in Hebrew that was different from our first Gospel. (Other church fathers besides Jerome reported a Hebrew Gospel existing in their day associated with Jewish Christians. They agreed that it was in many respects different from the biblical Matthew, though connected with that apostle.) If the latter is the case, our first Gospel was either not written by Matthew or is a second work written by him, this time in Greek. It could be that Papias confused the two works and assumed one was the basis for the other.

The best evidence from the Gospel itself that Matthew was its author is that only in this Gospel is Levi the tax collector (Mk 2:14; Lk 5:27) identified as the Apostle Matthew (Mt 9:9; 10:3). At the very least, this suggests the author presents Matthew's witness. The Gospel also contains clear evidence that the author possessed a strong command of both Aramaic and Greek, something that would be a prerequisite for most tax collectors. Furthermore, the author of Matthew used the more precise term nomisma for the coin used in the dispute over tribute (Mt 22:19) than Mark's and Luke's denarion (Mk 12:15; Lk 20:24). This linguistic specificity strongly implies that the author was conversant in the fine details of money and finance, a point that would lend credence to the proposition that the author was a tax collector.

Nevertheless, most critical scholars still reject Matthean authorship of the first Gospel. Some argue that an apostle and eyewitness of Jesus' ministry would not have used a secondary source, yet the first Gospel relies on Mark for much of its material. Others claim that the perspective of the book shows a fuller development of traditional material and of relations with the Jews than one might expect in an early Gospel.

Neither of these objections is telling. One could just as easily speculate that Mark's Gospel, associated as it was with Peter, had gained so much acceptance as the first accurate narrative of Christ's life that Matthew saw no need to disregard it in compiling his own Gospel. Another objection to Matthean authorship is the highly developed relationship between Jews and Gentiles. The same can be said for Paul's letters, which are indisputably from the apostolic age. Thus there is no compelling reason to overturn the unanimous external evidence associating the first Gospel with the Apostle Matthew.

DATE

Matthew was quoted by the church father Ignatius around A.D. 110 (perhaps 15 years earlier in 1 Clement), and thus could not have been written much later than about A.D. 90. Most critical scholars opt for a date not much earlier than that for the same reasons that lead them to deny Matthean authorship. Because Matthew seems to betray knowledge of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, any date before A.D. 70 is presumed impossible.

But besides prejudicially disallowing that Jesus could have predicted Jerusalem's fall, the evidence for "prophecy" after the fact is not as clear as some suggest. First, the words of Christ (Mt 22:7; 24:15) are so general that one could easily understand them as indicating no knowledge of the actual destruction of Jerusalem. Second, certain episodes in Matthew give pre-A.D. 70 perspectives that would at least require clarifying comment from the Gospel writer if the temple had already fallen (e.g., the discussion of the temple tax in 17:24-27). There is no reason, therefore, that the Gospel could not have been written before A.D. 70. Irenaeus reported that Matthew was written while Peter and Paul preached at Rome, placing at least early versions of the Gospel in the A.D. 60s, assuming Irenaeus had a reliable tradition. The precise date of the writing of Matthew is uncertain, but some time in the 60s is not unreasonable.

THEMES

Each Gospel, though broadly compatible with the others, emphasizes something different about the significance of the life and ministry of Jesus. For Matthew, that significance clearly lies in Jesus' status as the promised messianic son of David, the king of Israel. Several features of the Gospel are related to this primary theme. Foremost is Matthew's citation of OT prophecies fulfilled in the life of Jesus. Matthew is often faulted for taking these "prophecies" out of context and misapplying them. However, his practice must be understood in terms of the conventions of first-century citation generally, and the charge is less appropriate than is often thought (see the notes, esp. 2:15). Other features related to the theme of Jesus as promised King include long teaching discourses in which the word of Jesus becomes a new law for the church, a confession of Jesus as the Son of God in divine (as opposed to merely messianic) terms, and an extension of kingdom promises from the Jews to the Gentile nations in fulfillment of the covenant with Abraham.

For more on the similarities and distinctions between Matthew and the other Gospels, see the Introduction to Mark.

Matthew Study Notes

1:1 In identifying Jesus as Son of David and Son of Abraham, Matthew linked Jesus to the Davidic messianism of the OT. This connection is suggested in the Davidic covenant (2 Sm 7:12-16; Ps 89:29) and explicitly expressed in the Prophets (Is 9:6-7; 11:1-10; Jr 23:5-6; 30:9; 33:14-26; Ezk 34:20-24; 37:24-28; Hs 3:5; Am 9:11; Zch 3:8). Matthew also linked Jesus to the Abrahamic covenant (Gn 12:1-3; 22:18), in which God promised to bless all the nations of the earth through Abraham's seed. The two covenants are brought together in Ps 72:17 (Mt 28:19). Jesus' Davidic descent was not a theological invention of the early church. It was attested as early as Paul (Rm 1:3) and in the letter to the Hebrews (Heb 7:14). Furthermore, Jesus' immediate family, which was prominent in the early church, would have had to accept the claim. The Talmud, a collection of Jewish rabbinical writings, repeatedly charges Jesus with being born out of wedlock, for example, to Pandera a Roman soldier, so this is a polemic againstJesus' lineage. But there is no polemic against Mary's or Joseph's lineages.

1:2-16 There is evidence that first-century Jews kept genealogical records (for example, the Jewish historian Josephus referred to public registers as sources of some of his information). Matthew's genealogy emphasizes Christ's royal lineage, while Luke's focuses on His biological lineage. For more about the differences between the genealogies, see note on Lk 3:23-38. (On the schematic nature of the genealogy, see note on Mt 1:17.)

1:11 According to Jr 22:30, no son of Coniah (Jechoniah, Jehoiachin) would prosper on David's throne. Therefore, Matthew's genealogy seems to be wrong. However, Matthew's focus was on the royal lineage of Jesus. As noted in Lk, Jesus' (Joseph's) physical descent stemmed from David through Nathan, not Solomon. So his physical lineage did not pass through Coniah, even though Matthew's legal lineage must. See note on Lk 3:27.

1:16 On the different names for the father of Joseph in the genealogies of Jesus in Mt ("Jacob fathered Joseph") and Lk 3:23 ("Joseph, son of Heli"), see note on Lk 3:23-24.

1:17 Matthew omitted several names in his genealogy in order to maintain a three times 14-generation structure (Gk egennesen, translated "fathered," indicated ancestry, not actual fatherhood. "All the generations" must then be taken to imply "as summarized here.") Matthew was emphasizing Jesus' birth as a culminating moment in Israel's history. The third set of "14" has only 13 names, unless one counts Jechoniah a second time (or the second set has 15, if one begins it with David).Perhaps Matthew reflected the common feeling of his time that Jechoniah could be considered both a pre-exilic and a post-exilic figure (see 2 Kg 24:8-12; 25:27-30). David is the central figure in the lineage of Jesus. When the consonants of his name are added, the sum is 14; hence, the importance of the number 14 to Matthew. David is the fourteenth entry in the genealogy.

Luke has a different genealogy of Jesus that traces His ancestry all the way back to Adam. See note on Lk 3:23-38 for an explanation of the differences between these two genealogies.

1:18-25 This passage, unique to Mt, shows the exemplary character of Joseph. He did not question the angel's explanation for Mary's pregnancy. He obeyed without question what the angel told him to do, going ahead with his plans to take Mary as his wife.

1:20 On the announcement of the birth of Jesus to both Joseph and Mary, see note on Lk 1:26-38.

1:22-23 Matthew cited the Greek version of Is 7:14 virtually verbatim, including the Greek word parthenos ("virgin"). The underlying Hebrew word, almah, means something like "a marriageable girl." It probably always refers in the OT to virgins (Pr 30:19 has been suggested as a counterexample, but it is not obviously such). For more on the virgin birth of Jesus, see note on Lk 1:35. Isaiah 7:14 was a prophesied sign to Judah's King Ahaz that an impending military crisis would be averted by God. The prophecy received an immediate fulfillment in Isaiah's own son (Is 8:1-4), but that son was a "sign" of a greater fulfillment (Is 8:18), and the prophecy thus continued to present the ultimate manifestation of "God with us" in Is 9:1-7. The name Jesus ("Yahweh saves") describes what Jesus does; Immanuel ("God with us") describes who Jesus is. Matthew included the prophecy to assert the divinity of Jesus. For more on prophecy and fulfillment in Matthew, see note on 2:15.

1:25 This text implies that Mary and Joseph had biological children after the birth of Jesus. That Jesus had earthly brothers and sisters is explicitly stated in 13:55-56, Mk 6:3, and Gl 1:19.

2:1-2 Some interpreters deny the historicity of the wise men's visit. One reason for doing so is a general anti-supernaturalism. Another is the alleged parallelism in form and/or content with legends or myths of great people or gods in the ancient Mediterranean world. Some take the star as purely supernatural, since it pointed the way to where Jesus lay (v. 9). Several scientific explanations have been offered to identify the star of Bethlehem, such as it being a conjunction of Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn in 7–6 B.C. or perhaps the appearance of a comet in 5 B.C. Wise men (sometimes translated as "magi") were originally a religious class in Media and the Persian Empire, but the word magi came to describe any student of astrology and lore. These men had probably been studying Jewish texts such as Nm 24:17 in order to correlate their astronomical observations with the birth of a Jewish king.

2:6 Matthew did not quote Mc 5:2 directly but paraphrased it to bring out the sense of the passage. Thus, while the prophet Micah noted the smallness of Bethlehem in relation to its being the home of the ruler, Matthew emphasized Bethlehem's significance by calling it "by no means least" of Judah's towns. (The reading "leaders" for thousands predates Matthew. These terms are spelled the same in Hb.) He concluded with a quote from 2 Sm 5:2 (see Ezk 34:23), since the identification of Bethlehem as the ruler's hometown set the prophecy in the stream of Davidic messianism (and was so understood in first-century Judaism). The principle of biblical inerrancy requires only that a NT paraphrase of an OT text preserves the intent of that text or expresses its implications.

2:15 Some critics suggest that the quote from Hs 11:1 led to the invention of the story of the flight to Egypt as a "fulfillment." But it fits the story tangentially enough to render that opinion less plausible than the alternative, namely that the flight to Egypt was historical and led to the use of the Hs quote. Matthew and other NT writers did not usually mean a one-to-one correspondence of prediction and fulfillment by this language, but rather they had a much broader understanding of the OT in mind. Jesus was the culmination of many themes, lines of progressive revelation, and streams of tradition. The texts cited (often conflated texts, as in Mt 2:6) stand for these broader themes; they do not in themselves carry the themes fully. Thus here, though Hs 11:1 refers directly to the exodus as an originating event in God's relationship with Israel, it stands in streams of traditions that include the Messiah as God's Son and One who represents Israel, succeeding—and thus fulfilling—where Israel failed (cp. the Servant in Is 49–53, who is related to the Davidic branch of Is 11:1-10). On the comparison with Luke, see note on Lk 2:39.

2:16 No sources outside the Bible corroborate this episode, but it fits the character of Herod as reported in the writings of the historian Josephus. In addition to atrocities he had earlier perpetrated, Herod grew increasingly paranoid in his last years and committed or planned several political executions, including those of members of his own family. The slaughter of perhaps 20 or so babies in an insignificant village to protect his throne is thus entirely plausible and would hardly merit mention in historical sources. That Herod based his decision to kill all male children two years or younger on the timing ascertained from the wise men indicates that they had initially seen the star rise two years earlier. It is unknown whether the initial appearance corresponded to the birth (making Jesus two years old at this point) or merely foretold it (so that Jesus at this point was still a baby).

This Herod, known as Herod the Great, was different from the other three members of the Herodian dynasty mentioned in the Gospels. They are (1) Herod Archelaus, son and successor of Herod the Great as ruler over Judea (Mt 2:22); (2) Herod Antipas, who executed John the Baptist (Mk 6:17-29) and who returned Jesus for sentencing by Pilate (Lk 23:6-12); and (3) Herod Philip, ruler in extreme northern Galilee when Jesus began His public ministry (Lk 3:1,19-20).

2:17-18 On Matthew's use of the OT, see note on 2:15. Matthew loosely translated the Hebrew of Jr 31:15. Ramah was the staging point for the Babylonian exile (Jr 40:1-2), an event Matthew had already identified as important to Jesus' identity (1:17). But Jr 31:16-35 also promised an end to the exile and the institution of the new covenant with Israel, events associated elsewhere with the messianic reign (Jr 30:1-9; 33:14-26; cp. Mt 26:28). With the birth of Jesus, the Davidic son had arrived and the exile was ended. Thus the weeping in Bethlehem fulfilled, or culminated, Rachel's weeping. This is the final mourning of exiled Israel.

2:23 According to Lk 1:26 and 2:4, Mary and Joseph lived in Nazareth prior to the birth of Jesus, prompting some to claim that Matthew was unaware of this and thus presented Bethlehem as their hometown. But Matthew's focus was only the well-known fact that Nazareth was Jesus' hometown at the start of His ministry. He was not concerned to tell the reader the hometown of Jesus' parents. Though he first mentioned them in connection with the birth of Jesus at Bethlehem, he nowhere stated that Bethlehem was their hometown. The quote corresponds to no known passage in the OT. The best possibility is that Matthew alluded to Is 11:1 ("shoot" = Hb nezer), but others suggest that "a Nazarene" is a title of dishonor and thus alludes to those texts in which the Messiah is despised (e.g., Ps 22:6-8; Is 53:2-3). The two may go together, since Is 11:1 describes the Messiah as arising from the ignominious conditions into which David's house had fallen and has links to the Servant of Is 49–53 (see Is 11:1,10,12; 49:22; 53:2).

3:8 For more on repentance, see note on Lk 3:3. The slight variations in wording between Mt and Lk demonstrate that the Gospel writers followed first-century convention and aimed to convey the gist of reported speech, not the exact words. Inerrancy requires only that paraphrased speech accurately summarizes the content and intent of the original utterance.

3:11 On John the Baptist as the forerunner of Jesus, see note on Mk 1:7.

3:15 Jesus' baptism announced His intention to follow God's will and identified Him with the sinners He came to save, the most important aspect of God's will for Him. His baptism, then, appropriately initiated His messianic ministry; it was the first step in His carrying out the will of God, of fulfilling all righteousness.

3:17 God addressed these words about His Son, Jesus, to those who witnessed His baptism. The Gospels of Mk (1:11) and Lk (3:22) report that God spoke these words directly to Jesus. See note on Mk 1:11.

4:2 The 40-day fast and temptation in the wilderness paralleled Israel's exodus experience. See note on Lk 4:2.

4:5-10 On the differences in the order of the temptations in Mt and Lk, see note on Lk 4:5.

4:12 Jesus launched His public ministry after the death of John the Baptist. See note on Mk 1:14.

4:17 The theme of Jesus' preaching was the kingdom of heaven, also referred to as the kingdom of God in Mk (1:15) and Lk (13:28). These two phrases refer to the same reality: the rule of God in human hearts. See note on Mk 1:15.

4:18-22 Matthew's account of the call of the fishermen brothers, Peter and Andrew along with James and John, differs in one detail from the parallel narrative in Luke's Gospel. Luke's longer account has Jesus teaching the crowds from a fishing boat, then producing a miraculous catch of fish for these professional fishermen. After this miracle, He issued His call to them, and they became His disciples. See notes on Mk 1:16-20 and Lk 5:1-11.

4:24 Matthew distinguished between physical maladies and demon possession (though he also could relate the two, 17:14-18). Contrary to what modern critics claim, the disciples did know the difference between a physical ailment and demon possession. "Throughout Syria" is probably shorthand for the regions surrounding and including Galilee rather than a strict reference to the entire Roman province of Syria. So verse 25 specifies the crowds as coming from Galilee, the Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and Perea.

5:1–7:27 Matthew seems to have presented Jesus' Sermon on the Mount and other discourses in his Gospel as actual events rather than as anthologies of Jesus' teaching, and thus parallels to individual sayings appearing elsewhere in the Gospels should be taken as evidence that Jesus taught similar things on multiple occasions. Matthew organized other major teachings of Jesus around specific events in His ministry (see 7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1). For differences between Matthew's account and Luke's account of this famous sermon, see note on Lk 6:17-49.

5:1-10 On the subtle differences between the Beatitudes in Mt and in Lk, see note on Lk 6:20-23.

5:13 On Jesus' reference to believers as "the salt of the earth," see note on Mk 9:50.

5:16 This verse is not contradicted by 6:1. Here Jesus commended good works properly motivated, so that God might be glorified. In 6:1 He discouraged improperly motivated good works, namely those intended to bring self-glorification. The stress was not on the openness or hiddenness of actions but on the reasons for them.

5:17-20 Jesus did not come to destroy the Law but to fulfill it and to enable those who trust Him to fulfill its demands. Jesus fulfilled the Law both by His obedience to it and by His sacrificial death, through which He satisfied the law's demands for those who trust Him.

5:19 Some have seen in this verse not the voice of Jesus but a later reaction against the Apostle Paul's brand of Christianity. However, there is no reason why Jesus could not have said these words. Given what Jesus had said of His status with regard to the Law, keeping and teaching the commandments must take on different force than strict adherence. The Law is good and remains valid (Rm 3:31; 1 Tm 1:8). Loving God and neighbor is a fulfillment of the Law (Mt 7:12; 22:37-40; Rm 13:8-10; Gl 5:14; Jms 2:8).

5:22 On Jesus' command not to call a person a "fool" or a "moron," see note on Lk 11:40.

5:29 Jesus did not commend self-mutilation to avoid sin. He was exaggerating to emphasize the point that avoidance of sin is worth whatever drastic measures are required. A blind person can still lust.

5:38-42 On Jesus' principle of non-retaliation and love of one's enemies, see note on Lk 6:29-35.

5:48 The perfection that Jesus referred to is that of loving all people, both good and evil (v. 45; cp. Lk 6:36).

6:1 On the proper motivation for good works, see note on 5:16.

6:9-13 On Jesus' teaching of the model prayer to His disciples, see note on Lk 11:2-4.

6:12,14-15 This prayer seems to be a model for believers. Forgiveness is an attitude that follows from recognition of the seriousness of our sin (18:23-35; Eph 4:32; Col 3:13). A person with an unforgiving heart toward others shows that he does not take his own sin seriously and has not appropriated God's forgiveness.

6:13 Jewish parallels suggest that "Do not bring us into temptation" may be idiomatic for "Do not let us be overcome by temptation" or "Do not let our faith be tested beyond what it can bear." James 1:2-3,13-14 shows that "temptation" can have a negative or positive purpose—the one an enticement to sin, the other the strengthening of faith. God pursues only the latter, and Satan only the former (see 1 Co 10:13).

6:22-23 The "good eye" and the "bad eye" are expressions for generosity (Gk haplous = "single, undivided" and "generous," see Rm 12:8) and miserliness (Pr 28:22). "If the light within you is darkness" is a paradoxical way of saying, "If where there ought to be light, darkness is found." Jesus' point is that love of money clouds one's moral vision.

6:33 On Jesus' provision for our daily needs, see note on Lk 12:22-34.

7:1-2 Jesus did not prohibit judging of any sort, as verse 6 makes clear. Rather, He warned against judging others in way that we would not want applied to ourselves. To judge another person in a harsh spirit is to take on a role reserved only for God. Only the Lord can see beyond the outward appearance to underlying motives and causes in a person's heart.

7:7-12 On Jesus' instructions about asking, searching, and knocking, see notes on Mk 11:22-24 and Lk 11:10.

7:21 A person who comes to Christ for salvation comes to Christ the Lord, who has the right to demand obedience because of His lordship. Note that Jesus did not teach here that works save us, but rather that doing good works is a reflection of our obedience to God's will (7:16-20,24-27; cp. Jms 2:14-26). Attempting to earn salvation by works is a rejection of Christ's sovereignty. Sin replaces God's sovereignty with our human bent toward self-will and rebellion against God's will. For more on this point, see note on 5:17-20.

8:4 On Jesus' instructions to a man not to tell anyone about his healing, see note on Mk 1:44.

8:5-13 For differences between Matthew's account and Luke's account of the healing of a centurion's servant, see note on Lk 7:1-10.

8:17 Matthew cited Is 53:4 as fulfilled in the healing ministry of Jesus. That Matthew understood this fulfillment in the light of the larger, atonement context of Is 52:13–53:12 is made clear in Mt 20:28 (see Heb 9:28;1 Pt 2:24). That is, Jesus' healing ministry was part of His larger ministry of bringing in the kingdom(Mt 4:23). His atoning death was the central and necessary feature of this kingdom. His healings were a foretaste of the ultimate benefits of His death, benefits that will not be fully realized till His return. Thus this passage does not teach that Christians can expect automatic healing in this age.

8:20 On Jesus' reference to Himself as the Son of Man, see note on Mk 2:10,28.

8:22 On Jesus' statement "Let the dead bury their own dead," see note on Lk 9:60-61.

8:26 On Jesus' stilling of the storm, see note on Mk 4:39-41.

8:28 Matthew's account of this miracle reports that Jesus healed two demon-possessed men, while Mark(5:1-20) and Luke (8:20-39) mention only one (see note on Mk 5:2). On the difference among the Gospels in the spelling of the name of the region in which this healing occurred, see note on Mk 5:1.

8:31-32 On the entering of a herd of pigs by the demons cast out of a man by Jesus, see note on Mk 5:11-13.

9:8 The bystanders recognized that Jesus was a man and yet He exercised the prerogative of God. In Jesus, they saw God at work. His works of healing and the forgiveness of sins were signs that the kingdom of God was dawning.

9:9 On the calling of Matthew (Levi) as a disciple ofJesus, see note on Mk 2:14.

9:13 All three Synoptic Gospels (Mt, Mk, and Lk) place the dinner at Matthew's house immediately after the call of Matthew. But there is probably a significant time lapse between the two events, and they were placed together because they dealt with the same character. Mark and Luke placed these events and the healing of the paralytic before the exorcism at Gadara, while Matthew placed them after that event. All three Gospel writers placed the raising of Jairus's daughter after Gadara. It is likely that a combination of literary and chronological concerns caused the writers to order the events as they did. On Jesus' statement "I didn't come to call the righteous, but sinners," see note on Lk 15:7.

9:18-26 Matthew greatly compressed his version of this story compared to Mark's (Mk 5:21-43) and Luke's (Lk 8:40-56). Indeed, there was often much more to the actual events than the Gospel writers told us, and responsible harmonization of divergent accounts is a legitimate and at times necessary undertaking. See note on Lk 8:46-48.

9:27-31 Several stories of healing blind men are recorded in the Gospels (20:29-34; Mk 8:22-26; 10:46-52; Lk 18:35-43; Jn 9:1-7). Some of these record the same event (Mt 20:29-34; Mk 10:46-52; Lk 18:35-43), but others are surely separate incidents, since healing the blind was a regular part of Jesus' ministry (Mt 15:30; 21:14). Passages such as Is 35:5-6 gave rise to the expectation that the Messiah would heal the blind.

9:29 Jesus did not mean that He healed in proportion to the men's faith, but He healed because of faith. See note on Lk 8:46-48.

9:34 On the charge by the Pharisees that Jesus healed through the power of demons, see note on Mk 3:22.

10:2-4 On the names of the 12 disciples of Jesus, see note on Mk 2:14.

10:5-6 As the Jewish Messiah, Jesus primarily focused His ministry on the Jews. He did respond to Gentiles who showed faith (8:5-13; 15:21-28; Jn 4:5-42), but the preaching of the gospel to Gentiles awaited His ascension (Mt 28:19; Lk 24:47) and the subsequent bestowal of the Spirit at Pentecost (Ac 2).

10:8 On Jesus' distinction between healing those with physical disabilities and delivering those who were possessed by demons, see note on Mt 4:24.

10:9-10 On Jesus' instructions about what His disciples should not take with them on their mission, see note on Mk 6:8-9.

10:16-22 Matthew may have included here predictions of future persecution originally part of the Olivet discourse (Mt 24:9,13; Lk 21:12) in order (1) to place all "mission" sayings together, and (2) to use the mission of the Twelve as a paradigm for the mission of the church. Alternatively, Jesus may have repeated these warnings in His discourse about the end times (Mt 24). See notes on Mk 13:24-25 and 13:30.

10:23 There is a close connection in the Gospels between the coming of the Son of Man and the destruction of Jerusalem (see note on Mk 13:30). Jesus was either telling His disciples the evangelism of Israel and subsequent Jewish persecution of the church would not be complete before Jerusalem was destroyed by the coming of the Son of Man, or explaining that the evangelism of Israel would be an ongoing task until the end of the age.

10:34-36 On the claim of discrepancy between Jesus' statement about bringing peace versus not bringing peace, see note on Lk 12:49-53.

10:40 That Jesus was "sent" by God does not detract from His own deity. Indeed, Php 2:5-8 makes clear that the Son voluntarily subordinated Himself to the Father in the incarnation. See note on 28:18.

11:3-5 On the question by John the Baptist of whether Jesus was the Messiah, see note on Lk 7:18-23. Josephus, the Jewish historian, gave an account corroborating John's imprisonment and execution.

11:11 On Jesus' statement about the greatness of citizens of the kingdom in relation to John the Baptist, see note on Lk 7:28.

11:14 On Jesus' identification of John the Baptist with "the Elijah who is to come," see note on Lk 1:16-17.

11:19 On the charge of gluttony and drunkenness against Jesus by the religious leaders, see note on Lk 7:34.

11:25 The "wise" are the self-sufficient, and the "infants" are those who depend on God (see note on Lk 1:51-54). Verses 20-24 emphasize the coming punishment of the cities of Galilee (whose main populations were part of "the wise") for failing to heed the miracles of Jesus. On God's "hiding" matters from the wise but still holding them responsible for their unbelief, see note on Mk 4:11-12.

11:27 When Jesus said that all things had been entrusted to Him, He was speaking of His authority to reveal the Father (see note on Lk 10:22). Thus, passages such as Mk 13:32, where it is said that God reserves certain knowledge to Himself, do not stand in contradiction to this verse. See note on Mk 13:32.

12:1-2 On the Pharisees' criticism of Jesus for picking grain on the Sabbath, see note on Lk 6:1.

12:18-21 Matthew quoted from Is 42:1-4 to highlight the compassionate character of Jesus' ministry. He paraphrased Is 42:3-4 in verses 20-21. "Until He has led justice to victory" is equivalent to Isaiah's "He will faithfully bring justice. . . . Until He has established justice on the earth." And "The nations" paraphrases "the islands." While the Hebrew text of Is 42:4 has "His instruction," the Greek text has "His name."

12:30 On Jesus' statement about those who oppose His ministry and refuse to accept His authority, see note on Lk 9:49-50.

12:31-32 Blasphemy against the Spirit means consciously rejecting His incontrovertible testimony to the truth of the gospel (see Heb 6:4-8). (To blaspheme or speak against the Son of Man seems to be to reject the claims of Jesus. Paul blasphemed the Son of Man prior to the Damascus road experience; he would have blasphemed the Spirit had he rejected the Damascus road experience.) This, then, is the only unforgivable sin, and this saying thus does not contradict such texts as 1 Jn 1:9. This is not something Jesus addressed to the disciples or the crowds but to one small group of Jewish leaders who had already demonstrated their implacable opposition to Him. There is no biblical evidence that a genuine Christian can commit this sin. Fear that one has done so is probably a good sign that one hasn't, for full-fledged apostasy is a defiant rejection of everything Christian and lacks the tender conscience that would be worried about such an action.

12:38-40 See note on Mk 8:12. "Three days and three nights" is from Jnh 1:17. In Jewish reckoning, a period of light and darkness makes a "day" (onah), and any part of a "day" is considered as the whole. Since Jesus arose on the third day (Mt 16:21; 27:63-64), which was the first day of the week (28:1), the language of three days and nights does not mean 72 hours (see Est 4:16; 5:1) but "part of Friday, all of Saturday, and part of Sunday."

12:48-50 On Jesus' declaration about His earthly relatives as opposed to His spiritual relatives, see note on Mk 3:31-35.

13:10-11 On Jesus' explanation of why He spoke in parables, see note on Mk 4:11-12.

13:32 Jesus did not intend to teach botany here but to make a point about the kingdom of God. The mustard seed was the smallest seed of any plant cultivated in first-century Palestine and was proverbial for minuteness. Though mustard is not technically a tree, it can grow to a height of from six to ten feet and support birds. Jesus was probably making a theological point that His readers would catch, alluding either to Ezk 31:17 or Dn 4:12 and the world dominion of God's kingdom. Alternatively the statement may have been meant to shock: The kingdom of heaven will grow much bigger than one would expect when seeing its beginning.

13:35 Psalm 78 records the "parable" (mashal) of Asaph, in which, as a warning to his generation, he reviewed the history of God's gracious dealing with the Jews despite their stubbornness (Ps 78:4-5). Matthew cited the opening verses of the psalm because they parallel most specifically the teaching ministry of Jesus, but he probably intended the reader to place them in their larger context. Matthew did not assert that Asaph was talking about Jesus but that Jesus' parables culminated the sort of teaching Asaph conducted, teaching about the history of salvation intended to turn Israel from unfaithfulness to faithfulness. In Jesus, God gave His final revelation to the Jews, and, like Asaph's audience, they were expected to respond appropriately.

13:55 The people of Nazareth assumed Jesus was Joseph's son. Mark had the people identify Jesus as the carpenter (Mk 6:3); in Matthew they identified his father as such. Jesus probably learned the trade of his adoptive father, as was typical, and the crowd referred to Him in various ways, Matthew summarizing one way and Mark another.

14:3-11 On the death of John the Baptist, see note on Mk 6:17-30.

14:15-21 On the feeding of the 5,000 and the setting of this miracle, see notes on Mk 6:32 and 6:34.

15:20 Jesus was not addressing hygiene but religious purity. The Pharisees required ritual washings before eating to cleanse from contact with religious impurity. Jesus taught that such contact was not defiling but that personal ethical and moral corruption is (Mk 7:15-20).

15:22-28 On the healing of a Gentile woman's daughter, see notes on Mk 7:24-30 and 7:26.

15:32-38 On the miraculous feeding of 4,000 people and its relation to the feeding of the 5,000, see note on Mk 8:1-10.

15:39 On the place referred to here as Magadan by Matthew and as Dalmanutha in Mark's parallel account, see note on Mk 8:10.

16:16 See note on Mk 8:29. Matthew included the words "Son of the living God," while Mark excluded them. Peter made the complete confession recorded in Mt, and each Gospel writer recorded as much of it as necessary for narrative purposes. Matthew emphasized Jesus' divine sonship throughout his Gospel and so retained the confession. Mark reserved the confession of Jesus' divine sonship for the end of his Gospel (Mk 15:39) in order to tie the confession more explicitly to the cross. Peter presumably meant no more by "Son of the living God" than "the Messiah" (2 Sm 7:14; Ps 2:7; Mt 26:63), but the virgin birth makes clear that the divine sonship of Jesus is more than just a title.

16:18 The use of "church" (Gk ekklesia) here (among other reasons) has led some scholars to conclude that this saying is inauthentic. But Jesus' preaching of the kingdom could easily envision the establishment of the messianic community. Ekklesia merely means "assembly" or "congregation," and it is used in the Greek OT for the "congregation" of Israel, i.e., God's people.

16:19 Within the Roman Catholic tradition this passage has been used to support the infallibility of the pope as Peter's successor. Peter and other NT writers don't sustain this view. Peter was one among a number who were leaders in the first generation of the church (Ac 15:13-21; Gl 2:9,14; 1 Co 3:11; 1 Pt 2:7). The context demands that the binding and loosing had especially to do with opening or closing access to the kingdom, most likely through the preaching of the gospel, that is, confessing Christ. Peter was uniquely used by God to build Christ's church (e.g., Ac 2:14-42; 3:1-26; 10:27-48). Matthew 18:18 indicates that the church as an assembly has similar authority.

16:21 On Jesus' prediction of His death, see note on Lk 12:50.

16:28 On Jesus' promise that some of His followers would experience a foretaste of His glorious revelation before they died, see note on Mk 9:1.

17:1-8 On the historical reality of the transfiguration, see note on Lk 9:28-36.
17:1 On the different timing for the transfiguration as reported by Mt, Mk, and Lk, see note on Mk 9:2.

17:10-13 On Jesus' discussion of the coming of Elijah, see notes on Mk 9:12-13 and Lk 1:16-17.

17:20 See note on Mk 11:22-24.

17:24-27 The historicity of this event is questioned by a number of scholars. Some have suggested that the passage is a later insertion, reflecting a common concern of the early church. Such theories, however, are highly suspect. Payment of the temple tax was not an issue in the early church, and thus it is far more likely that the episode dates back to Jesus' life. Coins have been found in the mouths of fish from the Sea of Galilee. This coin is a state-r, equivalent to four drachmas.

18:8-9 On Jesus' statement about disfiguring the body to avoid sin, see note on 5:29.

18:10 Some suggest that Jesus referred to the destiny of believers at death, but more likely He meant that there are angels who constantly represent believers to God, since He used the present tense. The concept of such "guardian" angels was common in first-century Judaism. Jesus did not indicate the ratio of angels to believers nor whether their ministry would continue after His own ascension. See Ps 91:11; Ac 12:15; Heb 1:14.

18:12-14 This parable has a different setting in Lk 15:3-7, leading scholars to conclude that one Gospel writer invented the setting in his Gospel. But Jesus undoubtedly applied many of His stories and illustrations to different situations, and neither setting is historically implausible. Others suggest that Matthew placed the parable here for thematic reasons.

18:17 Jesus had in mind an actual assembly of God's people. On the word "church," see note on 16:18.

18:18 See note on 16:19. Jesus delegated authority tothe church and its leadership to open access to the kingdom (16:19) and so to forgive or retain sins (in the context of the gospel, Jn 20:23), to discipline members (as here), and to render doctrinal decisions (binding and loosing can mean "forbidding and permitting"). This authority is seen exercised in Ac 5:1-11; 13:38,46; 15:23-29; 1 Co 5:3-5. The fact that a similar promise is given to the Twelve that was previously given just to Peter casts further doubt that any unique authority was being given to Peter that is not available to all disciples.

18:35 See note on 6:12,14-15. This parable established in the strongest terms the importance of forgiveness. The parable made the same point as the metaphor of a bad tree bearing bad fruit (cp. 7:15-18): Those who have received God's forgiveness will forgive.

19:9 Matthew 5:32 also contains this exception clause (permitting divorce in cases of sexual infidelity), while Mk 10:11 and Lk 16:18 do not. This has led many interpreters to conclude that Matthew has liberalized Jesus' strict teaching. But all three Synoptic Gospels (Mt, Mk, and Lk) agree that Jesus viewed divorce as wrong, and no good reason has been given as to why Matthew included this exception. The discussion as presented in Mt fits first-century Jewish debates about divorce, particularly centering on the meaning of "something improper" in Dt 24:1. Jesus agreed with the school of Shammai that the indecency involved is sexual sin. But whereas Pharasaic halakah required divorce for adultery, Jesus only permitted it.

19:12 Making oneself a eunuch for the sake of the kingdom is to be taken figuratively (as in 5:29). Jesus was referring to celibacy.

19:16-17 Jesus did not teach that eternal life is earned by keeping the commandments (see note on Mk 10:18). Instead, the man had to follow Jesus (19:21). Jesus began where the man was: a Jew seeking life and righteousness must look to the law. But Jesus sought to move him to a new understanding. It is not strict adherence to the law that leads to life, as the would-be follower himself realized, but submission to the Messiah and to the broader ethic of the law as defined by Him. See notes on 5:17-20 and 5:19. Matthew's account tells us that this man was young (19:22). Luke's parallel narrative indicates that he was very rich (Lk 18:23) and that he was a ruler (Lk 18:18). Thus, the characterization of this would-be follower of Jesus as the "rich young ruler."

19:21 On Jesus' radical requirement that a rich man sell all his possessions and follow Him, see note on Mk 10:21.

19:29 On Jesus' promise of "100 times more" to those who sacrifice to follow Him, see note on Mk 10:29-30.

20:1-15 The parable merely illustrates God's generous mercy; it recommends neither wage practices nor deathbed conversions.

20:20 On the differences between Matthew's account and Mark's account of favored places in His kingdom to be granted to His disciples James and John, see note on Mk 10:35.

20:28 On Jesus' understanding of His mission, see note on Mk 10:45.

20:30 For differences among the Gospel accounts ofJesus' healing of a blind man in Jericho, see note on Mk 10:46-52.

21:2 The inseparability of a donkey and its colt was proverbial in Judaism, and here the mother apparently accompanied the unbroken colt on its first ride to keep it calm. Matthew noted both animals because of the nice parallelism with the prophecy of Zch 9:9 (two animals are mentioned: the colt and the female donkey of whom it is the son), though he doubtless understood that only one animal was indicated as being ridden there and intended his readers to understand that it was upon the colt that Jesus actually rode. Mark and Luke referred only to the colt since it was the animal ridden and since they made no mention of the prophecy. See note on Mk 11:2-3.

21:12-22 Matthew (and to a lesser extent Luke) differed from Mark on the timing of these events (see note on Mk 11:15). It appears that Mark recorded the actual chronology, while Matthew and Luke gave a more topical arrangement within the broad chronology. Mark had Jesus merely looking around at the temple on the day of the triumphal entry and cleansing the temple the following day. Matthew and Luke skipped the initial visit and jumped immediately to the cleansing. Mark split the cursing of the fig tree (before the cleansing) and its withering (after the cleansing). Matthew combined both events and reported them immediately after the cleansing.

21:22 On Jesus' statement about receiving "whatever you ask for in prayer," see note on Mk 11:22-24.

21:33-46 On Jesus' parable of the vineyard owner and its messianic message, see note on Mk 12:6.

22:11-13 The man without a wedding garment apparently represents the false disciple (7:22). His speechlessness indicates that he recognizes his fault, not that the king (God) is making an impossible demand, especially since there was a custom of kings providing festal garments for those who needed but lacked them. Deliberate spurning of the king's offer may be in view here.

22:14 Many were invited to the feast, but only a minority responded, and of those some were rejected. Those who remain to the end show that they had in fact been chosen from the beginning. Jesus preserved a tension between individual response and divine election (see 11:25).

22:30 On Jesus' statement about our bodily form in heaven, see note on Mk 12:25.

22:45 On the superiority of the Messiah to David, see note on Mk 12:37.

23:2-3 This saying seems to contradict the strong polemic against the Pharisees in Mt, and especially 16:12, but it must be understood in context. Verses 4-36 qualify the otherwise strong endorsement of the teaching of the scribes and Pharisees. Jesus was thus either being ironic in verses 2-3, saying, in essence, "They presume to sit in Moses' seat, so you had better do what they say!" Or He was endorsing the objectives of their teaching but denigrating the application ("They are attempting to safeguard the purity of Israel and its faithfulness to the covenant, so listen to them; just do not follow their practice").

23:8-10 The point of this text is not what titles may legitimately be used in addressing those in authority, but that titles are not to be used to confer privilege or status. Jesus used characteristically Semitic, hyperbolic rhetoric to get His point across.

23:17,33 On Jesus' reference to the Pharisees as "blind fools" and "snakes," see note on Lk 11:40.

23:34 On Jesus' prediction of the persecution of believers, see note on Lk 21:12-13.

23:35 Luke 11:51 identifies the prophet who died in the temple simply as Zechariah, and there is no problem identifying him as the priest Zechariah ben Jehoiada of 2 Ch 24:20-22, since 2 Ch is the last book of the Hebrew Bible and it records Zechariah crying out for vengeance (see Gn 4:10; 2 Ch 24:22). But Mt 23:35 says the murdered prophet was the son of Berechiah, which seems to identify him with the author of the book of Zechariah (Zch 1:1). Most understand the reference in Mt to be a blending of the two Zechariahs that occurred in Jewish tradition. It is possible, however, that Zechariah the priest had a father named Berechiah and that Jehoiada was the name of his grandfather, since Jehoiada died at the age of 130, shortly before the murder of Zechariah (2 Ch 24:15). Others suggest that the minor prophet Zechariah is intended and that he was murdered as described, though there is no evidence for this claim.

23:38 On Israel's being left desolate, see note on Lk 13:35.

24:9 On Jesus' prediction of the future persecution of His followers, see note on Lk 21:12-13.

24:15 On the interplay between Jesus' prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem and the end times, see notes on Mk 13:30 and Lk 21:20-28.

24:29-30 On the signs that foretell Jesus' second coming, see note on Mk 13:24.

24:34 On the events that will happen in "this generation," see notes on Mk 13:30 and Lk 21:28,31-32.

24:45-51 The historical setting of this parable is uncertain; neither Mt nor Lk provides chronological information. They each apparently placed the parable in their respective contexts for thematic reasons, though it is possible that Jesus taught these lessons to His disciples on more than one occasion. On the harsh punishment of the servant in this parable, see note on Lk 12:46-48.

25:14-30 On the relationship between the parable of the talents in this passage and the parable of the minas in Lk, see note on Lk 19:11-27.

25:26,28-30 On the harsh treatment of the unfruitful servant in Jesus' parable of the talents, see note on Lk 19:26.

25:31-46 This teaching of Jesus on the sheep and the goats appears only in Mt. He was not teaching salvation by works in these verses. The compassion shown by the sheep shows their salvation (7:15-27). That both the sheep and the goats are surprised at their "qualifications" indicates that neither was working for salvation. Those who were punished for their failure to minister to others were so blinded by their preoccupation with themselves that they showed no compassion. The parable shows that mere profession of one's belief that does not lead to love and concern for people is useless.

26:6-13 On the relationship of this anointing of Jesus to a similar event reported by Lk (Lk 7:36-50), see note on Mk 14:3-9. The Dead Sea Scrolls attest to a leper colony near Bethany, adding plausibility to the event taking place at the home of Simon the leper.

26:11 On Jesus' statement about the poor, see note on Mk 14:7.

26:17 On the sequence of events during the last few days before Jesus' crucifixion, see note on Mk 14:12.

26:24 Jesus used Son of Man as an all-encompassing term for His concept of the Messiah, a concept that included OT figures such as those in the servant passage of Is 53:7-8, and probably others. See notes on Mt 26:31 and Lk 18:31-33.

26:26-29 On the variation among the Gospel accounts about the number of cups drunk in the memorial supper and the sequence of the wine and bread served, see notes on Mk 14:22-24 and Lk 22:17,20.

26:31-35 On the differences among the Gospel narratives about Jesus' prediction of Peter's denial, see note on Mk 14:27-31.

26:31 In Zch 13:1-6 the shepherd, God's associate, is a messianic figure (cp. Zch 11:4-17; 12:10; 13:7-9; Ezk 34:1-31) whose death leads to the judgment of Israel and subsequent establishment of a remnant.

26:36-46 This prayer in the garden of Gethsemane is the classic disproof of "name it and claim it" praying.

26:57 On the legality of Jesus' appearance before the Sanhedrin, see note on Mk 14:53. On the order ofJesus' appearances before Caiaphas and Annas, see note on Mk 15:1.

26:64 "In the future" (Gk ap' arti) means "hereafter" or "in the coming days." Jesus told the Sanhedrin that they would be confronted with the vindication of the Son of Man in His resurrection, ascension, and the pouring out of the Holy Spirit (seated at the right hand of God) and later, at the last day, coming on the clouds of heaven for their judgment. See notes on Mk 14:61-62 and Lk 23:3.

26:65 On the high priest's statement that Jesus was guilty of blasphemy, see note on Mk 14:63-64.

26:71 On whether Peter's second denial of Jesus was initiated by a woman or a man, see note on Lk 22:58.

26:74-75 On the number of crowings by a rooster when Peter denied Jesus for the final time, see note on Mk 14:30,68,72.

27:5-7 The differences between Matthew's and Luke's (Ac 1:18-19) accounts of the death of Judas and the use of the blood money are not as imposing as some suggest. Both Matthew and Luke agreed that a field was purchased with Judas's money (though only Matthew mentioned that the priests purchased the field as agents of Judas), and both agreed that the field subsequently became known as the Blood Field. Luke was ambiguous as to why the field was so named; Ac 1:19 says, "This became known to all," can be read as referring to the purchase of the field with the tainted money (Ac 1:18) rather than to the manner of Judas's death. Matthew and Luke must be taken to supplement one another on the manner of Judas's death. The simplest harmony is that Judas hanged himself above a precipice but that the rope or support broke, causing him to fall. The topography of Jerusalem easily lends itself to this scenario.

27:9-10 Most of this quote is from Zch 11:12-13, but it also contains allusions to Jr 19:1-13. Both Zechariah and Jeremiah were part of a tradition within the OT dealing with the apostasy of Israel and its rejection of God's leadership. These themes come to fulfillment in Jesus' rejection by the Jewish leadership and more specifically in the details of the blood price of God's shepherd (see note on Mt 26:31) and the purchase of the potter's field. Jeremiah is cited as the prophet most relevant to Matthew's point (see note on Mt 2:15). That the fit between the quote and the event is rough argues that Matthew did not invent the event to "fulfill" a prophecy.

27:11 On Jesus' response to Pilate's question whether He was the Messiah, see note on Lk 23:3.

27:15 On the Roman custom of releasing a Jewish prisoner during the Passover festival, see note on Mk 15:6.

27:24-26 This episode is often thought unhistorical (though there is nothing historically implausible in Pilate's action) and that Matthew was thereby anti-Semitic. But all the Gospels note that Pilate was reluctant to execute Jesus (Mk 15:9-10,14; Lk 23:7,14-16,20-25; Jn 18:31,38-40; 19:4,6,12-16) and that the Jewish leadership and mob were insistent that he do so. Thus Matthew's portrayal is not unique. The first Christians and Jesus Himself were Jewish. Luke portrayed the early church as self-consciously Jewish.

27:28 On the color of the mock royal robe placed onJesus by Roman soldiers, see note on Mk 15:17.

27:34 On the sour wine offered to Jesus on the cross, see notes on Mk 15:23 and 15:36.

27:37 On the minor variations in wording among the Gospels about the sign posted on Jesus' cross, see note on Mk 15:26.

27:38 On crucifixion and the criminals executed with Jesus, see note on Mk 15:27.

27:44 All three Synoptic Gospels (Mt, Mk, Lk) report that two criminals were crucified at the same time as Jesus. But only Luke recorded that one of them repented and was converted. See note on Lk 23:39-40.

27:46 Mark's version of Jesus' cry of dereliction (see Ps 22:1) is in Aramaic. Matthew's "Eli" is technically Hebrew (though the rest follows Mark's Aramaic). Matthew's rendering is found as well in the Aramaic paraphrase of Ps 22 used in Jewish synagogues. Either Matthew conformed his record to the synagogue reading or Jesus cried out as Matthew recorded and Mark rendered it in more idiomatic Aramaic.

27:48-49 On the possibility that Jesus was offered sour wine more than once while He was on the cross, see note on Mk 15:36.

27:51-53 Presumably the tombs were opened when Jesus died, and the saints were raised and came out whenJesus arose, later ascending at His ascension. Matthew referred to their resurrection here apparently because he wished to link the messianic victory and end of the age represented by that resurrection with the death of Christ. That they "appeared to many" indicates that Matthew's intention in this report was historical, for the detail is irrelevant if his intention was merely symbolic.

27:54 On variations among Gospels in the words spoken by the Roman centurion at Jesus' death, see note on Lk 23:47.

27:62-66 Some have argued that Matthew created this account to provide evidence that the body of Jesus was not stolen. But if Matthew wished to create such evidence, surely he would have had the guard posted immediately upon burial, not a day later, or even witness the resurrection (as in the clearly contrived Gospel of Peter). The account rather seems intended to provide background for the report in 28:11-15, which in itself points toward its historicity. The Jewish response to this story would have been to deny it altogether, had it not been true, rather than complicate it by asserting the sleeping guard allowed the theft of the corpse. An inscription discovered in Nazareth and dating to before A.D. 70 records an imperial decree forbidding the removal of bodies from graves on pain of death. This decree is thought to have been issued by either Tiberius (A.D. 14–37) or of Claudius (A.D. 41–54). Grave robbing was a perennial problem in the Roman Empire. Other inscriptions as late as the third century A.D. threaten severe punishment to those who remove bodies from tombs. See note on 28:11-15.

27:62,66 The priests did not break the Sabbath regulations by gathering before Pilate and securing the tomb (especially if non-Jewish auxiliary troops actually did the work), though theirs was extraordinary behavior brought on by extraordinary circumstances. They may have delayed the request because they assumed Jesus was buried in a common grave and only too late learned that Joseph had been granted the body.

27:63-64 The priests could have learned of Jesus' prediction of His resurrection from Judas or at the trial of Jesus (if 26:60-61 is not the full extent of the discussion), or it could have been public knowledge (as v. 63 implies). They did not take the prediction seriously, but they feared the disciples did or that the disciples would capitalize on the public knowledge of the prediction.

28:1 On variations among Gospels on the women who went to Jesus' tomb, see note on Mk 16:1.

28:2-5 See note on Mk 16:5-7. Only Matthew mentioned the earthquake and the angel opening the tomb. There is nothing in this, however, that contradicts the other Gospels.

28:8-10 On variations among the Gospel accounts of Jesus' appearances after His resurrection that are both similar and difficult to reconcile, see note on Lk 24:36-43.

28:11-15 Though Matthew has been accused of inventing this story, it is still of great evidential value for the empty tomb, since it attests to polemics between Jews and Christians regarding the issue. Clearly the Jewish response to the Christian proclamation of the resurrection was that the disciples stole the body while the guards were asleep. (It would serve no purpose for Matthew to invent this charge, even if he invented the posting of the guard.) This means that the better responses of denying that Jesus was ever buried in the tomb or that the tomb still contained the body were not available to early opponents of the church. The known location of Jesus' burial site and the fact that it was empty are the best explanation for this Jewish charge.

28:11 It is difficult to tell whether the guards mentioned here were Roman troops or Jewish temple guards. Pilate's words, "You have a guard of soldiers" (27:65), may imply either. That they were in danger of dereliction of duty before Pilate (v. 14) implies that they were Roman. They reported to the priests, then, because they had been assigned to the priests to guard the tomb.

28:13-14 Presumably the priests suggested to the guards that they would explain the true situation to Pilate. It is not difficult to imagine, given the relative difficulty with which secrets are kept, that the story of the bribery eventually became public (especially considering Ac 6:7).

28:16-20 This passage is related thematically to Lk 24:47-49 and Ac 1:4-8, but it does not record the ascension of Jesus and is best understood as a separate incident. Like Luke, Matthew was probably summarizing the final teaching of Jesus to some degree. (See note on Lk 24:44-53 and cp. Lk 24:44-49; Jn 20:21-23.) John 21:1-23 indicates that the apostles spent at least some of the 40 days between Jesus' resurrection and His ascension in Galilee, as Jesus had instructed them. There is no contradiction between this account and the command in Lk 24:49 (cp. Ac 1:8) to remain in Jerusalem, because that command referred to the days after Jesus' ascension, not His resurrection.

28:17 All the resurrection narratives record the doubt of some of the characters at one point or another. The early church preserved in its tradition the fact that the apostles were not expecting the resurrection, despite repeated predictions of it by Jesus Himself. This can only be a historical reminiscence, and it corroborates the disciples' later faith in the resurrection. That is, the actual appearance of the resurrected Jesus best accounts for the historical facts that the disciples initially did not believe Christ had risen and that they later were convinced He had.

28:18 This is probably an allusion to Dn 7:13-14 and indicates that Jesus now began His messianic reign (Php 2:9-11). Absolute authority was given to Jesus by the Father (1 Co 15:27-28). This does not detract fromthe full divinity of Christ, since the subordination of the Son to the Father has to do with their respective roles, not their natures. Thus the baptismal formula in Mt 28:19 treats the Father, Son, and Spirit as equals.

28:19 Some claim that the later difficulty of the church in accepting a Gentile mission is evidence that Jesus never issued this command. But the slowness of the disciples to grasp and implement the words of Jesus was not unusual (15:17; 16:9; Mk 9:32); they experienced a process of growth in obedience as any other group might have. Furthermore, the main problem in Ac and Paul's letters is not whether there ought to be a Gentile mission but under what conditions that mission ought to be carried out.

28:19 In all other Christian baptismal texts in the NT, baptism is said to be in Jesus' name (Ac 2:38; 8:16; 10:48; 19:5; Rm 6:3). However, none of these descriptions may have been intended to be strict formulas for use in baptism. The early summary of apostolic doctrine, the Didache 7:1-4; 9:5, uses both formulas interchangeably. Matthew 28:19 implies Trinitarianism, since it not only places the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit equally at the center of Christian allegiance (baptism is at least a declaration of allegiance) but also unifies them under a singular reference to "the name" (cp.1 Co 12:4-6; 2 Co 13:14; Eph 4:4-6; 2 Th 2:13-14; 1 Pt 1:2; Rev 1:4-5). The clear Trinitarian implications of Lk 24:49; Jn 14:1-11,16,23,26; 15:26; 16:7; 20:28 testify to the likelihood that Trinitarianism has its roots in the teaching of Jesus Himself and argues for the historical probability of the saying in this verse.

Mark Articles

Has Historical Criticism Proved the Bible False?

by Thomas R. Schreiner

Historical criticism of the Bible began in earnest in the eighteenth century, flowered in the nineteenth century, and became the dominant approach to the Scriptures in the twentieth century. Historical criticism has at times been rejected by conservatives because it has called into question the accuracy of the Bible. For example, in the nineteenth century, most scholars delving into the life of Jesus provided rationalistic, not supernatural, explanations of Jesus' miracles. New Testament scholar F. C. Baur argued that the theologies of Peter and Paul contradict one another if one reads the NT historically. Old Testament scholars, such as Julius Wellhausen, maintained that the Pentateuch (first five books of the Bible) was not actually written by Moses. Careful literary and historical study, it was claimed, indicated that the Pentateuch had various sources that were written over a period of hundreds of years and that the final document was put together by an unknown editor.

Still, it is important to recognize that the rise of historical criticism has also benefited the church. The Christian faith is rooted in history. God has manifested Himself supremely in the person of Jesus Christ. He lived and ministered in a particular time and place—in Palestine in the third decade of the first century. As Christians, then, we believe that our faith is historically rooted. Paul insisted that Christians were foolish to believe in the Christian faith if the resurrection of Jesus did not actually occur (1 Co 15:12-19). Hence, we have no fear of historical study but welcome it, for we believe historical research can assist us in understanding the message of the Scriptures.

The benefits of historical study are numerous. It has cleared up the meaning of obscure terms. The discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls has cast light on the environment within which the NT was birthed. Study of the ancient Near East and the Greco-Roman world has clarified the extent to which the Scriptures are similar to and dissimilar from documents that came out of surrounding cultures. Historical criticism has also demonstrated that some traditional views were not credible. It was once thought that the NT was written in a special "Holy Ghost" language, but study of sources from the era of the NT has demonstrated that the NT was written in the common Greek of the day. The King James Version of the Bible was an outstanding product of the scholarship in its day, but we now have many more manuscripts for both the NT and the OT, and hence our English Bibles are even closer to the original today because of recent manuscript discoveries and the careful work of scholars in text criticism.

While historical criticism has benefited the church, it also carries with it liabilities. Many scholars who practiced historical criticism imbibed the Enlightenment philosophy sweeping Europe in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Their philosophical worldview masqueraded as historical criticism. As described above, they rejected the miracles of Jesus and provided rationalistic explanations. But scholars do not reject miracles on historical grounds. They have accepted a naturalistic philosophical standpoint that presupposed that miracles don't happen. On this view, even impressive evidence to the contrary is beside the point. Rudolf Bultmann is an example of this view. Bultmann defined historical work in such a way that the acceptance of any miracles was excluded. When we read the NT, we see that credible historical reasons exist to support the resurrection of Christ, but many scholars refuse even to consider the evidence, for they are convinced from the start that resurrections cannot happen. This fundamental bias, i.e., naturalistic philosophy, is all too often cloaked as "objective history."

Historical criticism hoped that it would succeed where orthodoxy failed. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, orthodox Christians debated the interpretation of the Bible, leading to several different theological systems (Lutheranism, Calvinism, Arminianism). Historical critics believed that they were more objective and that by means of a "neutral" scientific approach they could discover what the Bible really taught. But with the arrival of postmodernism this view seems naive to almost all scholars today. And the record of historical criticism reveals that it did not succeed in agreeing upon "the assured results of scholarship." Indeed, a dizzying array of viewpoints and perspectives are present in historical criticism today, and many of them are mutually contradictory.

The work of F. C. Baur and Julius Wellhausen threatened the faith of evangelical believers in the nineteenth century. Yet few scholars today embrace the conclusions of F. C. Baur, and the documentary hypothesis of Wellhausen is severely questioned. The "assured results" of scholarship in one generation are often vigorously challenged by the next. Evangelicals, of course, should be open to correction. Perhaps we have misread some parts of the Bible because of our tradition. On the other hand, we need to be critical and savvy and to reject the temptation of embracing the latest fad in scholarship just because it is current.

Though evangelical scholars have often solved problems raised by historical critics, conservatives have not solved them all. This does not mean that the Scriptures are inaccurate in such instances but instead that we could resolve such problems if we had enough information. To make such a claim is not a sacrifice of one's intellect. Comprehensive answers are lacking in every historical discipline since the evidence is fragmentary. We can be grateful to historical criticism since it has helped us understand the Scriptures better. But we must also be on our guard. Often historical criticism has veered off into unsubstantiated allegations about the accuracy of the Scriptures, and it has routinely approached the Scriptures with an antisupernatural worldview. Historical criticism has not demonstrated the Bible to be false. The Bible, rightly interpreted, has stood the test of time.

Can We Still Believe in Demons Today?

by Clinton E. Arnold

Many modern scholars regard belief in demons as a primitive worldview that includes elves, dragons, and a flat world. They contend that the advent of modern science, especially advances in understanding body chemistry, psychology, and neurology, enables better understanding of the phenomena the ancients attributed to the work of demons.

Skepticism about the existence of angels and demons is at odds with the direct and explicit testimony of Scripture. From the Garden of Eden in Genesis to Satan's doom in Revelation, the pages of Scripture are filled with references to evil supernatural beings who oppose God and His purposes. Their frequency of appearance actually heightens during the ministry of Jesus and the apostles. In fact, we learn most about their nature, character, and activities from Jesus and Paul.

Beside the biblical assumption of demonic reality, other matters must be considered:

Science is inherently incapable of answering this question. Some critics grant science authority to make judgments on issues it is incapable of judging. Just as science is incompetent to adjudicate on morality, so it is also beyond its jurisdiction in trying to decide the question of demonic existence. Science seeks to describe and explain natural phenomena. There is no reason to assume it has power to answer questions regarding the supernatural, such as whether these beings exist.

Purely naturalistic explanations are not adequate for describing many forms of evil in the world. Although the impact of sin on the human soul explains much of the proliferation of evil, some situations are still so abhorrent or inexplicable that they suggest a demonic origin. The horrors of an Auschwitz or of a mother roasting her own child to death imply a powerful force leading humanity to destruction.

Some therapeutic situations are best explained by the work of a spirit being. While it is true that symptoms produced by schizophrenia, dissociation, and other psychological and chemical disorders have often been wrongly attributed to demons, some conditions are best explained by the direct influence of a spirit entity. The international community of mental health professionals recognizes this and labels it "Trance and Possession Disorder," an especially common diagnosis in non-Western cultures.

We need to learn from the broader sweep of human history and cultures. The last 300 years in Western history represent the only time when the existence of evil spirits has been viewed with widespread skepticism. Furthermore, an exploration of other cultures throughout Asia, Africa, the Pacific Islands, and elsewhere reveals that belief in evil spirits continues to be integral to the worldview of many people groups.

Belief in the reality of evil spirits need not lead to uncritical or unwarranted beliefs about demons nor the bizarre and dangerous practices of extremist individuals and groups. Our task should be to integrate this more complete view of reality into our functional worldview with constant sensitivity to biblical teaching on this topic. At the beginning of the Screwtape Letters, C. S. Lewis warned that we can err in two ways as regards the devil. We can fail to take account of him or we can give him too much attention.

Why Would a Good God Send People to an Everlasting Hell?

by Paul Copan

The essence of hell is to be "away from the presence of the Lord" (2 Th 1:9). Hell's differing images of darkness, fire, and decay express the anguish of being cut off from intimate union with God (Rv 21:3; 22:4). God genuinely offers salvation to all and thus commands all without exception to repent (Ezk 33:11; 2 Pt 3:9; Ac 17:30), but He will not hold up the final celebration because of those resisting His grace (Ac 7:51)."

Let's address some hell-related questions that unbelievers and believers find troubling.

"Isn't God unjust to punish persons forever for sins committed during a limited earthly existence?" Those in hell have committed the ultimate, infinite sin—not simply a string of finite sins—in rejecting a relationship with the self-giving God. Also, hell is the logical outcome of a mindset to live life apart from God—not simply committing individual sins. The punishment fits the crime. You want no God, you get no God. There are two kinds of people: those who say to God, "Thy will be done," and those to whom God says, "Thy will be done" (C. S. Lewis).

"But wouldn't persons in hell really want to be with God if they knew what hell is like?" No. Those who have resisted God on earth continue in their hard-heartedness thereafter (just as those living for God on earth continue to enjoy Him). God's holy presence would truly be "hell" for those wanting their own way. We have no hint from Scripture of repentance in hell. Rebellion, hate, and selfishness continue. The rich man in hell (Lk 16:19-26) is remorseful, not repentant—not wanting to change but to find relief!

"But how can people be sent to hell without knowing its full implications?" Even if one isn't fully aware of hell's anguish, this doesn't mean our choice is too much to bear. God is ready to equip anyone for salvation (Jn 16:8). Though the full consequences of our embracing or rejecting God aren't fully apparent to us now, grace to choose responsibly is available to all. What prevents the salvation of everyone? Individuals' choosing freely to reject God's grace. We can always resist the Holy Spirit (Ac 7:51). God doesn't send people to hell; they freely reject Him, condemning themselves by not acknowledging their guilt.

"Why didn't God make the world in such a way that all people would love Him?" While a world in which everyone loves God is theoretically possible, it is not feasible. Whatever possible world with free creatures God could create, it may be that none is sin-free, and God's love isn't forced. Hell—the absence of God's presence—exists because, like Milton's Satan, people would rather "reign in hell than serve in heaven." God isn't unloving but rather has gone to great lengths to show grace to everyone. Should God not create at all because many freely resist Him in the world God created and thus deprive many others of the greatest good possible?

"Why did God create people He knew would reject and be separated from Him forever?" Despite God's desire that all be saved (1 Tm 2:4; 2 Pt 3:9), many still resist. What if some become more resistant no matter how loving God is (Is 5:4; Mt 23:37)? Should God not create those who would respond to His love simply because others would refuse it? What if God created a world in which a maximal balance of least condemned and most redeemed was realized? This is not unloving.

"Why couldn't God, from the start, make us like heaven's saints—loving God while unable to sin?" Robust freedom on earth—to embrace freely God's grace or resist it—is a requirement for arriving at one's final destiny. Our earthly direction is "sealed" in the afterlife; our heart's desire is finally granted—God or no God. So God couldn't have created a heavenlike state in which the redeemed no longer sin without damaging this vitally important freedom. (Or perhaps, rather than "sealing" us from sin in the afterlife, God simply foreknows that no saint will actually freely sin, guaranteeing a sin-free condition in the final state.)

Finally, because God has so fully given of Himself to make salvation freely available through His Son, we can confidently entrust any lingering questions about hell to His excellent character.

Can God Create a Stone Too Heavy for Him to Lift?

by Charles Taliaferro

This question should immediately strike one as a word game. Many puzzles exist in the same category, such as, "Can God eat oatmeal that no one can eat?" Such puzzles are intended to reveal a logical problem with the divine attribute of omnipotence. If God can create a stone too heavy for anyone to lift, then there is one task God cannot do, namely lift any conceivable stone. But if God can lift any stone, then again there appears to be one task God cannot do, namely create a stone too heavy for God to lift. The argument concludes there cannot be an omnipotent God.

The most plausible and common philosophical response to this puzzle is to challenge the coherence of the task demanded. In order for someone to conclude that there is some state of affairs God cannot bring about, the objector must establish that the state of affairs is a genuine, bona fide possibility. It is no imperfection of anyone to be unable to make the concept of justice dance with the number two. The concepts of justice and the number two are not the sorts of things that can dance.

Does the above reply make "logic" something greater than God? No, "logic" is not the name of some concrete or abstract thing that can carry out tasks. When you cannot do something contradictory (such as make a square circle), it is not as though there is a force called logic restraining you. "Logic," in this context, may be formulated in terms of two laws: the law of identity (A is A) and noncontradiction (A is not not A). These are not "laws," however, like the laws of nature (e.g., the laws of motion). They are, rather, necessary conditions of there being anything at all and for there being thought or language about anything at all. God the Son is identified in the NT as the Logos. Some philosophers and theologians have understood this to imply that logic and reason are attributes of God's excellent nature.

The stone paradox may be resolved in terms of strict logic, but does it not generate a more general problem? Can the God of Christian theism commit suicide? Tell lies? Do evil for its own sake?

Two replies should be considered. One is to claim God can bring about any of these states of affairs, but because of God's essential goodness, God does not do so. On this view, God is still omnipotent in the sense of being able to bring about any state of affairs. A second reply is to question an assumption behind the objection. Why think of divine omnipotence exclusively in terms of the bare scope of power? An important classical Christian tradition (Augustine, Anselm, Aquinas) holds that God's power is also supremely good. Is the "power" to do evil for its own sake a worthy, good power? Arguably, God's excellent power is the power to do good, not evil. A further exploration of this concept of divine power leads us away from the apparent word game of the stone paradox and focuses the mind on the nature of God's excellence, the object worthy of worship.

What About "Gospels" Not in Our New Testament?

by Graham H. Twelftree

The four Gospels in our Bible had all been written by the end of the first century. Apparently no other gospels were written by this time. By the last 20 years of the second century, when Irenaeus the bishop of Lyon was writing, the four Gospels had been widely and firmly established for some time as the only ones accepted by mainstream Christianity. However, many sections of the church did not use all of them.

Irenaeus argued against accepting other gospels, such as the Gospel of Truth, alleged to have been written by the Gnostic teacher Valentinus. He said it had only recently been written and "did not agree in any respect with the Gospels of the apostles." This gospel is a homily or meditation and does not resemble our biblical Gospels in telling of the activities and teaching of Jesus, including His appearances after Easter. The same is true of the Gospel of Philip, an anthology of sayings from the mid-fourth century, as well as the second-century Greek Gospel of the Egyptians, about which we know little except that it was apparently a collection of sayings. The Gospel of Thomas, which also contains a collection of sayings of Jesus (some of which may be historically authentic) along with minimal narrative material, has been argued to be early. However, because of parallels with literature of this period, many date it late in the second century. More fanciful gospels include the Infancy Gospel of Thomas, with its miracles conducted by the child Jesus, ending with the story from Luke of the 12-year-old Jesus in the temple.

Other gospels approximate those in the NT. For example, the now largely missing Gospel of Peter came from the middle of the second century. From the fragmentary evidence we have, it told of the trial of Jesus, His crucifixion, and His appearing to a group of His followers. Also, the Gospel of the Ebionites, from Syria in the same period, is a harmony of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Later in the century Tatian produced a widely used harmony of all four Gospels, the Diatessaron, which was highly valued particularly in Syria. From papyrus fragments we also have evidence of a handful of other gospels from as early as the second century. A letter of Clement of Alexandria (c. 150–215) discovered in 1958, which tells of a "secret gospel" of Mark, may be a modern forgery.

The Gospel of Hebrews, written before the mid-second century, perhaps in Egypt for Greek-speaking Jewish Christians, was the only gospel apart from the four in our Bible that was ever considered part of the legitimate Scriptures by sections of orthodox Christianity. The few remaining quotations of it show that it probably began with Jesus' preexistence and included His descent from heaven and subsequent birth. Jesus describes Himself as the son of the Holy Spirit and reports His temptation. There are also examples of His teaching. During the Last Supper, James the brother of Jesus says he will not eat again until he has seen the risen Jesus. There was probably a story of the burial of Jesus, and those who guarded the tomb may have witnessed the resurrection. As anticipated, there is a story of Jesus appearing to James, reinforcing his importance to this gospel. Gnostic characteristics, divergence from the biblical Gospels, and lack of any connection with an apostle may account for its eventually being excluded from the NT by mainstream Christianity.

Introduction to Mark

AUTHOR

The second Gospel is anonymous, but its only association has been with the Mark of the NT. The earliest existing Greek manuscripts including the title

"According to Mark" come from the third century, though the title was probably added when the Gospels were first being collected, sometime between A.D. 100–130. The earliest mention of Mark as the author of a Gospel comes from Papias, the bishop of Hierapolis, in Asia Minor, writing around A.D. 130. The early church historian Eusebius quoted Papias's words to the effect that Mark, as a follower of Peter, recorded stories about Jesus that Peter used in his preaching and that the stories were accurate but not in proper order. Papias added that he received this information from "the elder," by which he possibly meant the Apostle John.

Critical scholars have challenged Papias's claims, either suggesting that Papias was not referring to our second Gospel or that Papias was merely conjecturing about its authorship. These objections are weak. Not long after Papias (c. A.D. 150), Justin Martyr was quoting the second Gospel as "the memoirs of Peter," indicating at least that the Papias tradition was associated with Mark's Gospel. Why should Papias or another invent as its author the rather obscure character Mark? Why not identify Peter as the direct author, or at least Silas, who arguably was much more important in the early church than Mark and is mentioned in 1 Peter 5:12 as Peter's secretary?

Because there are no competing traditions, and because Papias's testimony is early and apparently well informed, it seems best to accept the traditional authorship of Mark based on the external evidence. But many critics also point to internal evidence to question whether the Mark of the NT authored the second Gospel. How strong is this evidence?

A John Mark is mentioned 10 times in the NT—in Acts as a young man in whose house the church in Jerusalem met (Ac 12:12) and who accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey (Ac 12:25; 13:5,13; 15:37-39). In Colossians and Philemon Mark is mentioned as someone with Paul during his first Roman imprisonment (Col 4:10; Phm 24) and in 2 Timothy as someone Paul desired to have with him during his second Roman imprisonment (2 Tm 4:11). First Peter indicates that Mark was someone beloved by Peter and with him in Rome (1 Pt 5:13). There is little doubt these four personages are one and the same. It is highly unlikely, despite the popularity of the name Mark in the first century, that more than one Mark could be mentioned in such close proximity to the ministries of Peter and Paul (and Barnabas, Silas, and Luke) without any distinction between them being indicated. That means that the Mark who presumably wrote the second Gospel grew up in Judea in a wealthy, urban family, that he was raised under the teaching of the 12 apostles, that he knew well the movers and shakers of the early church, and that he was relatively well traveled. And yet some scholars believe that this cannot be the sort of person who wrote the second Gospel. They note two points especially: (1) the Gospel was written in Greek, not Aramaic, the primary language of Palestinian Jews in the first century; and (2) the author seems not to have been well acquainted with the geography and customs of Palestine.

For specific responses to these charges, see the notes included with the Bible text. It is sufficient here to note, first, that even though it would virtually be expected of a wealthy urbanite in Palestine to know Greek, the Greek of Mark's Gospel has a distinctly Semitic tinge, a fact that makes it much more likely that its author was a Semite who spoke Greek as a second language. Second, the alleged erroneous references to the customs and geography of Palestine appear as such only on a skeptical reading of the text. On the other hand the Gospel of Mark familiarity with Paul's theology and an apostolic (Peter's?) eyewitness version of the events of the life of Christ. Some scholars have suggested that the rather negative portrayal of the disciples in Mark could only have had apostolic sanction. Others say that the outline of Mark bears resemblance to the preaching outline of Peter in Acts.

In the final analysis, the internal evidence does not weigh against traditional authorship any more than does the external evidence, and the best conclusion is that the second Gospel was indeed written by John Mark. The second Gospel must thus be treated as a highly reliable source on the historical Jesus.

DATE

There are various traditions for the dating of the Gospel. According to Irenaeus, bishop of Lyon, France (c. A.D. 180), Mark was written after the "departure" of Peter and Paul from Rome. Scholars are divided over whether Irenaeus meant that Mark wrote after Peter and Paul left Rome or after they died. But in either case, that would place the writing of Mark perhaps in the early 60s. Later church fathers place the writing during the life of Peter. If, as most scholars believe, the Gospel of Mark was used, at least in some form, by Luke in the writing of his Gospel, the date of Mark could be pushed back to the 50s, since the earliest date for Luke is around A.D. 60. Thus Mark could have recorded his information only 20 to 30 years after the actual events of Christ's life, well within the lifespan of eyewitnesses. Even critical scholars tend to date Mark no later than 69, since he does not seem to have been aware of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, which occurred in A.D. 70.

PROBLEMS

The greatest problem in studying the historicity of Mark is its relation to the other Gospels, particularly to Matthew and Luke. It is generally agreed there is a literary relationship among the first three Gospels, that one or another of the Gospels was used by the others. The theory that deals best with the data (though by no means with all of it) is that Mark was used by Matthew and Luke. Nevertheless, there are striking dissimilarities in how these three Gospels report the same events, especially between Mark and Luke. The words of Jesus are often reported with slight variations among the three Gospels, and the order of the events varies at times. Some of these dissimilarities may be due to Jesus saying and doing similar things on multiple occasions, but we cannot plausibly account for all, or indeed for most, of them this way. Instead, the differences are best attributed to a Gospel's genre, or kind of writing.

The Gospels are most like Greco-Roman popular biographies, and they follow similar conventions of reporting speech and events. Ancient biographers were not as interested in giving the precise details of a person's life as are modern biographers. They were more interested in presenting a sympathetic picture of their subject and in recording the hero's words and deeds in such a way that it would present him or her as worthy of honor or emulation. This is not to say they wantonly presented false information but rather that they aimed at only a general degree of precision. Thus the Gospels don't give us the exact words (often called the ipsissima verba) of Jesus on every occasion but instead His genuine teaching (the ipsissima vox, or "exact voice"). The Gospels make virtually no claims to chronological reporting (till the Passion narratives), and thus the events of Jesus' life are often arranged on other principles, thematic or geographical, or even merely within the broad chronological framework. Inerrancy is compromised in these cases only if Jesus never said or did the things attributed to Him or if the author made false chronological claims.

Unlike Greco-Roman biographies, the Gospels are concerned less to showcase Jesus' character than to explain His significance within God's program as the long-awaited Messiah, and each Gospel emphasizes a different aspect of this significance. Mark's emphasis is on Jesus as the suffering Son of God. Jesus is presented as fully aware of His messianic identity and calling, while everyone else (except God and the demons) is baffled by Him. He is at once supernaturally powerful and authoritative and yet also humble, servantlike, and committed to the cross. Mark moves the reader quickly through the teaching and miracle-working ministry of Jesus to the climactic events of His death and resurrection. The Gospel reaches its high point with the confession of the centurion at the cross, "This man really was God's Son!" (15:39).

Mark Study Notes

1:1 Though the phrase "Son of God" does not appear in all ancient Greek manuscripts of Mk, it is probably original. It is easy to account for its omission as a copying mistake, and the phrase appears at crucial moments in Mark's Gospel (notably 1:11; 9:7; 15:39; see 3:11; 5:7; 14:61-62). Son of God could merely be intended as a synonym for Christ (2 Sm 7:14; Ps 2:7), though Mark clearly portrayed Jesus as having supernatural ability and authority and probably used the title purposely to emphasize his special relationship to the Father.

1:2-3 This quote combines material from Mal 3:1, Ex 23:20, and Is 40:3. Such combinations were common among some groups in early Judaism and allowed a number of theological themes that had been developed in the OT to be brought forward with minimal citation. Here Mark highlighted the themes of God's salvation in the wilderness and the herald's announcement of the end-times coming of God, both fulfilled in the baptism of Jesus by John. Mark attributed the entire quote to Is either because the material in Is was most central to his portrayal of the baptism scene or because the quote serves to interpret the "beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ" within the larger framework of Isaiah's description of the coming Messiah (see Is 41:27; 52:7; 61:1).

1:5 When Mark stated that "the whole Judean countryside" and "all the people of Jerusalem" came out to John, he did not literally mean every single person. Biblical writers used the same figures of speech, including hyperbole, that any other person would use, and their precision must be judged by their purpose. Mark was conveying a story vividly, not reporting numbers scientifically.

1:7 The context of the opening scriptural salvo, which presents John the Baptist as the prophesied forerunner of the coming God (Is 40:1-11; Mal 3:1-6), implies that "more powerful" one who would come after him is God Himself. Similarly, in the OT it is God who pours out the Holy Spirit (Is 32:15; 44:3; Ezk 36:26-27; 39:29; Jl 2:28-29). Mark thus emphasized the divinity of Jesus here.

1:11 The voice from heaven is reported differently here and in Lk than in Mt. Mark and Luke recorded the event from Jesus' perspective; Matthew likely presented John the Baptist's viewpoint (see Jn 1:32-34). The voice was apparently addressed to Jesus but had the effect of confirming Jesus' status to John. The Gospel writers did not aim at "tape recording" accuracy but at the gist of the characters' speech. On this point see note on Mt 3:8.

1:14 Jesus' Galilean ministry began after the arrest of John the Baptist. John 3:22-30 indicates that Jesus had been conducting a baptism ministry in Judea prior to this. The fact that John told his readers that thisministry occurred before John the Baptist's arrest (Jn 3:24) may indicate that he knew of and was attempting to fill out the picture given by Mk or Mt.

1:15 Jesus was not mistaken about the nearness of the kingdom of God, despite the fact that almost two thousand years have passed since His announcement. Though the consummation of the kingdom awaits a future return of Christ, its inauguration occurred during His initial ministry, especially with His atoning death.

1:16-20 Mark gave only the briefest description of the events surrounding the call of Jesus' disciples. Andrew and Peter had earlier contact with Jesus, according to Jn 1:35-42, and Peter's call was more extended than Mark's presentation of it, according to Lk 5:1-11. This does not undermine the historicity of Mark's account; his narrative interest was not in the historical details but in the authority of Jesus. He was not concerned to tell us precisely how the disciples were called but rather that they were called and that they responded in complete submission to Jesus.

1:21 The Capernaum synagogue ruins visible today were most likely erected on the site of the synagogue mentioned in this verse.

1:29 Peter and Andrew's home at this time was in Capernaum, though Jn 1:44 states that they were originally from Bethsaida. In the 1970s and 1980s a house that may have been Peter's house was excavated in Capernaum beneath a fifth-century church dedicated to Peter.

1:29-34,40-45 Mark and Matthew presented these episodes in opposite order, indicating that the principle upon which they arranged their material was not always chronological. Neither Mark nor Matthew used language that indicated the chronological relationship of the two events. This phenomenon occurs frequently in the Gospels.

1:44 If Jesus was the Messiah, why did He not allow the man with the skin disease to spread the news about Him? Jesus did not want His program co-opted by others (see Jn 6:15; 7:3-6). He would reveal Himself on His own terms when the time was right. Jesus' purpose was not popularity and political insurrection but discipleship and ultimately the cross (Mk 10:43-45). This point is particularly central to Mk, so Mk includes several instances when Jesus ordered those whom He healed not to tell others about it.

2:10,28 These are the first references in Mk where Jesus used the self-designation Son of Man. There is evidence that the corresponding Aramaic phrase could be used to make oblique reference to oneself as an individual or as a member of a class ("a certain person [or "certain people"], namely, me"), and many scholars understand Jesus' usage of "Son of Man" this way. But there is also evidence of speculation among some Jews of Jesus' day about a judicial messianic figure based in part on the "One like a son of man" in Dn 7:13-14. This concept is certainly represented in the Gospels (see 13:26; 14:62) and helps clarify Jesus' claim of unique authority. Verse 28 may show a link between the two concepts, where the concluding Son of Man saying requires a meaning something like "the representative Man" or "the Second Adam."

2:14 Levi is the name given the tax collector here and in Lk 5:27-32, but he is called Matthew in Mt 9:9-13 and 10:3. It was not uncommon for Jews in the first century to have two names. Both Levi/Matthew and an apostle James the Less had fathers named Alphaeus, though whether they were brothers is uncertain.

2:26 According to 1 Sm 21:1-6, Ahimelech was high priest when David ate the bread of the presence. Abiathar, Ahimelech's son, became David's high priest shortly after as a result of the episode (see 2 Sm 8:17;1 Ch 24:6). There is no error in Mk 2:26, however, because the Greek idiom used can merely mean "in the passage about Abiathar." If that's the case, Mark's reference would be to the multi-chapter segment of 1 Sm that would have been a unit within a Jewish lectionary.

3:2 On Jesus' relationship to the Law, including observance of the Sabbath, see notes on Mt 5:17-20 and 5:19.

3:11 On the phrase "Son of God" spoken by the demons, see note on Mk 1:1.

3:12 See note on Mk 1:44.

3:13-19 The 12 apostles are listed four times in the NT (cp. Mt 10:2-4; Lk 6:13-16; Ac 1:13), and every list is essentially the same with the exception of Thaddeus and Simon. Luke gave these names as Judas and Simon the Zealot (see Jn 14:22). The variations in the nickname of Simon are due to its expressions in Aramaic (qan'ana = "zealot") and Greek (zelotes = "zealot"). It must be assumed that Judas son of James had a second name or nickname, Thaddaeus, used here by Mark. Similarly, Bartholomew is a patronymic, literally meaning "son of Talmai," and it is conjectured that his first name was Nathanael (see Jn 1:45). The Gospels report faithfully that Jesus chose Judas Iscariot as one of the Twelve. This points to the integrity of the early church in preserving accurately details that would be omitted in an account whose concern was image rather than truth.

3:22 This statement is reflected in rabbinic recollection of the ministry of Jesus: "On the eve of Passover Yeshu [Jesus] was hanged. And an announcer went out in front of him for fourteen days [saying], 'He is going to be stoned, because he practiced sorcery and led Israel astray!' " (b. Sanh. 43a, cp. 107b; b. Sota 47a; t. Sabb. 11:15; cp. Justin Dial. 69:7). The quote is from the earliest period of compilation of rabbinic traditions (c. A.D. 70–200) and shows a clear polemic against Christianity, but it nevertheless confirms that Jesus was remembered as a miracle worker opposed by the keepers of Jewish tradition.

3:31-35 Jesus' language in this passage would have been shocking to His audience. Family relationships were very important in first-century Palestinian society. But Jesus was not being rude; He was making two forceful and related points. First, His family had come to take control of Him (vv. 20-21), and He was distancing Himself from obligations to family honor for the sake of His greater calling. Second, He commended those who make a similar choice. He underscored in the strongest terms the pursuit of God's will as the highest value. Jesus' family eventually came to be His followers (Ac 1:14); see note on Lk 14:26.

4:11-12 Did Jesus really speak in parables to hide the kingdom from "those outside"? According to the context here, yes and no. Proper listening is the theme that connects the parables in chapter 4, and Jesus spoke in parables to distinguish between "anyone who has ears to hear" (v. 9; that is, those with responsive hearts) and those who do not. He knew His parables would have opposite effects on those ready to listen and those not ready. He therefore implied an element of culpability in the audience (see Mt 13:14). To those who have ears to hear, more revelation of the kingdom will be given, but to those who do not have ears to hear, even what revelation they have been given will be taken away, or will prove ineffective (Mk 4:25).

The quote in verse 12 is from Is 6. Concealing the message came in response to the people's repeated, prolonged hardening, but the end of Is 6 nevertheless promises that a remnant would repent and return.

4:31-32 On Jesus' reference to the seed of the mustard plant, see note on Mt 13:32.

4:39-41 Causing the wind and waves to cease was a strong indication of deity (Ps 65:5-7; 89:9; 107:23-32). Only God had the power to calm the sea, but His Son Jesus had the same power. For more on miracles, see note on 6:34.

5:1 The place of this miracle is somewhat confused in the Greek manuscripts of the NT, with testimony divided among Gerasenes, Gadarenes, and Gergesenes. (The best reconstruction has Mk and Lk naming the region of the Gerasenes, while Mt has the region of the Gadarenes.) All three places were cities or villages east of the Sea of Galilee. Gerasa was the most important village, but only Gergesa (modern El Kursi) is close enough to the lake and possesses a suitable geography (steep cliffs) to fit the story. It is likely that early in the transmission of this story the name of the lesser-known Gergesa was replaced by the better-known and similarly pronounced Gerasa. Or perhaps Gerasa was an alternative spelling of the name of the village, later confused with the well-known namesake city. Others argue that Gergesa was a village in the territory of Gadara, prompting Matthew to use the regional designation for its inhabitants in his version of the story.

5:2 While Mk and Lk mentioned one demon-possessed man, Mt mentioned two. Some understand Mt to have increased the number for theological reasons, but it is more likely that Mk focused only on the more prominent of the two men.

5:11-13 Jesus was not uncaring and destructive for causing a herd of pigs to die and its owners to be deprived of their property. First, the destruction was caused by the demons, not directly by Jesus. Second, though the intrinsic value of animals is taught in Scripture (e.g., Pr 12:10), the surpassing value of humans as made in the image of God is more fundamental. Jesus cast the demons into the pigs for the greater good of saving the demon-possessed man (see Mt 10:31). Pigs were the most unclean of animals and, by Jewish kosher laws, were not to be raised for food.

5:34 For more on the healing of the woman suffering from bleeding, see note on Lk 8:46-48.

6:5 Jesus was physically able to perform miracles in Nazareth. This is made clear by the exception clause at the end of the verse. The restriction on this healing was a moral one. Just as we are sometimes morally limited from performing some action though physically able to do it, so Jesus was morally limited from healing because of the conditions of faithlessness in Nazareth. Thus Mt 13:58 reports that Jesus "did not do many miracles there because of their unbelief."

6:8-9 This saying differs in Mt and Lk. In Mt 10:9-10 Jesus forbade the disciples to take a walking stick, while in Lk 10:4 the prohibition of sandals is added. The intent of the saying in each version, however, is the same: Take minimal provisions and trust God's goodness in the kindness of strangers. Matthew and Lk probably focused on the acquiring of possessions on the journey (thus Mt used the Gk term ktaomai, "acquire") or of bringing extra provisions (thus the prohibition in this account against "an extra shirt").

6:14 The reference is to Herod Antipas, son of King Herod the Great, who was made tetrarch of Galilee and Perea by Caesar Augustus after the death of his father. Antipas was given the rank of tetrarch explicitly to deny him the higher rank of king, and continual campaigning for the former title eventually resulted in his exile by the emperor Caligula. Mark called Antipas "king" because that was what he was in effect, if not in title, within his regions (see Mt 14:1,9, where Matthew referred to him as both tetrarch and king). Some scholars have also suggested that Mark's comment could be tongue-in-cheek criticism of Antipas's claim to be a king.

6:17-30 The first-century Jewish historian Josephus related the death of John the Baptist at the hands of Herod Antipas somewhat differently (Ant. 18.5.2-4). But the accounts are compatible. Josephus focused on the political reason for the death of John, namely John's potentially seditious popularity, while Mark focused on the more personal reason of Antipas's illicit marriage to his brother's wife. Yet John's preaching against Antipas's marriage to Herodias would be viewed by the ruler as seditious, particularly since the intrigues surrounding the marriage brought him to war with the Nabatean Arabs. Bawdy parties and extravagant gifts to entertainers were common in the first-century Roman world.

6:32 Luke places the feeding of the 5,000 near "a town called Bethsaida" (Lk 9:10), but Mark has Jesus direct the disciples afterward to "go ahead of Him to the other side, to Bethsaida" (Mk 6:45), creating a geographical difficulty. This is further complicated when John says in his Gospel that the disciples took the boat toward Capernaum (Jn 6:17). The best solution is to assume that Luke referred to Bethsaida Julias, a city on the north shore of the Sea of Galilee, just east of the Jordan River, in Gaulanitis, and that Mark referred to a Galilean village of the same name. (Bethsaida means "fishing village" and was perhaps the name of several towns along the shore of Galilee.) This may be confirmed by John's designation of the hometown of Philip, Peter, and Andrew as "Bethsaida in Galilee" (Jn 12:21, cp. 1:44) and by the regular association of Bethsaida with the Galilean villages of Chorazin and Capernaum (Mt 11:20-24). Alternatively, "to the other side" (Gk peran) in Mk 6:45 may merely indicate moving from one place to another via the lake rather than a crossing between its eastern and western halves. In this case the disciples left the location of the miracle and traveled northwestward, in the direction of both Bethsaida Julias and Capernaum, but ended up southwest of Capernaum (Gennesaret) because of the storm (v. 53).

6:34 The feeding of the 5,000 in the wilderness was a messianic act signaled here by an allusion to Nm 27:16-17. Moses prayed for someone to replace him after his death so the people would not be left as sheep without a shepherd. The motif is picked up in Ezekiel, where God promised that His servant David (i.e., the Messiah) will shepherd His people. John 6:14-15,26-34 makes it clear that the Galileans recognized the significance of the act (see Dt 18:15-19).

6:48 The feeding of the 5,000 and Jesus walking on water are narrated in three of the four Gospels. These nature miracles, along with the stilling of the storm, are most difficult for critics to accept as historical, since no good naturalistic explanation can be provided for them. Here we come up against a fundamental point of contention. Either one believes that God can work through His creation in patterns that differ from the normal patterns or one does not. God's usual ways of working we describe as laws of nature. The fact that John attests these miracles support their historicity.

6:50 "It is I" may have been intended as a divine disclosure here (lit., "I am"; see Ex 3:14). That Jesus intended "to pass by them" (v. 48) recalls God's self-revelation in Ex 33:19 and 1 Kg 19:11, as did walking on the water (Jb 9:8,11). The passage forms a fitting and ironic conclusion to a section of Mk that opened with the stilling of the storm (4:35-41) and the disciples' awestruck question: "Who then is this?"

6:56 On the relation of faith to healing in the Gospels, see note on Lk 8:46-48.

7:19 There were no parentheses in the original Greek manuscript of this Gospel. But if we didn't consider the sentence, "As a result, He made all foods clean," to be Mark's comment and not a part of Jesus' speech, then we would have to wonder why Peter needed the vision and the visit to the home of Cornelius (Ac 10) to get the message. But here Mark is writing with 20/20 hindsight in the c. A.D. 60s, based on Peter's testimony. Jesus' words regarding foods was one of many teachings the disciples failed to grasp in the period before Jesus' death and resurrection.

7:24-30 Jesus was not being unnecessarily harsh with the woman but rather eliciting her faith. Though we cannot know with what tone of voice or body language Jesus responded to the woman, His language points to a gentler and more provocative response than is often supposed at first reading (in English). The word Jesus used for dogs (Gk kunaria) means a lap dog or household pet. In effect he invited this woman to express the faith that would eventually come to be expected of the Gentiles while reminding her that his present ministry is directed to Israel (see Mt 10:6).

7:26 The woman was ethnically Syrophoenician, descended from the original inhabitants of the area. "Greek" did not indicate her ethnicity but rather the fact that she was a Hellenized pagan, a non-Jew. Matthew called the woman a Canaanite (which can merely mean a pagan in rabbinic literature) because of her ethnicity and to heighten the contrast of a woman from the traditional religious enemies of Israel approaching the Jewish Messiah for help. Because it is unlikely this woman spoke Aramaic, the story indicates that Jesus, like many Palestinian Jews, was able to converse in Greek.

7:31 Because of this verse, Mark is sometimes accused of not knowing Palestinian geography. He described Jesus and His disciples as traveling to the southeast shore of the Sea of Galilee by heading north from Tyre through Sidon. But Mark did not tell us that Jesus' route took Him directly from Tyre to Decapolis. He implied that Jesus avoided Galilee by traveling through Gentile territory to the north and east.

7:33 Though Jesus was capable of healing by a mere word, He presumably used this method to make clear to the deaf-mute what He was about to do.

8:1-10 Many scholars question the historicity of this miracle, even if they accept the historicity of the feeding of the 5,000. The second feeding appears to be a different version of the first, especially when in this story the disciples do not seem to be aware of the possibility of Jesus performing such a miracle. But if this is so, it is hard to account for the several distinctions between the two accounts and for Mark's reference to both miracles in verses 17-20. The disciples' lack of expectation here may be accounted for by the Gentile location or by the disciples not anticipating Gentile participation in the messianic banquet.

8:10 We have no record other than this mention in Mk of a place called Dalmanutha. Matthew 15:39 has Magadan, equally unknown. Most interpreters suggest that Magadan is a variant spelling for Magdala, the major center of the Galilean fishing industry. Dalmanutha may be a small anchorage north of Magdala discovered in 1970 (the name Dalmanutha may mean "anchorage" or "enclosure").

8:12 At least six places in the Gospels have Jesus' audience asking Him to show them a sign (Mt 12:38-39; 16:1-2; Mk 8:11-12; Lk 11:16,29-32; Jn 2:18; 6:30). The request for a sign was a regular occurrence during Jesus' ministry, and this alone may account for some of the distinctions among the various records. If Mt 16 and Mk 8 record the same event, then Mark's must be taken as a truncated version, giving in effect the message of the longer accounts. The authorities wanted an immediate sign attesting to Jesus' message, but they would not receive such a sign. Jesus did supply signs, particularly in Jn, to help create faith where there was openness for it or to bolster weak faith. But He would never work signs on demand, just to pacify the skeptics. The sign they would be given, that of Jonah, would not be the sort they sought. Some scholars, on the basis of Lk 11:29-32, take the sign of Jonah to be Jonah's effective preaching. Others, on the basis of Mt 12:39-41, take the sign of Jonah to be the resurrection.

8:29 Some scholars see this episode as a post-Easter confession of the church read back onto Peter's lips. Yet this theory cannot plausibly account for the rebuke in verse 33, since this is not a detail the church would invent. It is best to conclude that Peter's confession was historical and that Jesus accepted it, albeit on His own terms.

8:30 For more on Jesus' command to be silent concerning this, see note on 1:44.

8:33 Jesus intended His statement to Peter to shock some sense into the disciples. Chapters 8–10 of Mk form a transition from Jesus' ministry to His passion. In this section Jesus three times prepared His disciples for the goal of His ministry—His death—by trying to correct His followers' power-centered understanding of what His messianic role meant (see 8:34-35; 9:30-36; 10:32-45). Peter, like Satan, would undermine the purposes of God by self-centeredly seeking the glory of the messianic kingdom too quickly (see Mt 4:8-10).

9:1 Jesus reassured His disciples that He was not entirely rejecting Peter's expectations of a powerful Messiah (8:29-33). Some of them would experience a foretaste of the glorious revelation of the Son of Man in their lifetimes, a promise made good to Peter, James, and John immediately in the transfiguration (vv. 2-8). All further experienced the power of the kingdom with the coming of the Spirit on Pentecost.

9:2 Mark and Matthew presented the transfiguration as occurring six days after Jesus spoke of the coming kingdom. But Luke said it happened "about eight days" later. The Greek of Mk and Mt, compared to Lk, indicates that Jesus set out six or seven days after the saying and ascended the mountain on or around the eighth day. The six-day language may be another of the many parallels between the transfiguration and Moses on Mount Sinai preparing to receive the law. Alternatively, Luke's expression "about eight days" may merely signify "about a week later." On the historicity of the transfiguration, see note on Lk 9:28-36.

9:12-13 Jesus' point was that, though the disciples were correct to look for the coming of Elijah to restore all things before the establishment of God's kingdom, they needed to figure into their concept a time when the King, as representative of the people, would be mistreated. The story was more complicated than they supposed. Jesus' language alluded to Ps 118:22 and Is 53:3 as relating the rejection of the Christ. Not only was Christ rejected, His forerunner was ill-treated. In Lk 1:17 John the Baptist is described as one who "will go before Him in the spirit and power of Elijah."

9:23 On Jesus' statement about the unlimited power of faith, see note on 11:22-24.

9:29 "This kind" may mean "this type of demon" or "a demon this difficult." But it may also mean "this race [of being]," that is, evil spirits in general. However, the focus of the statement was the reason for the disciples' failure, namely, lack of prayer. Presumably they were trusting their own ability to exorcise rather than prayerfully trusting the power of God.

9:40 On Jesus' statement about those who were "not against us," see note on Lk 9:49-50.

9:43-47 On Jesus' statement about the disfiguring of the body to avoid sin, see note on Mt 5:29.

9:50 The Dead Sea provided rock salt to much of Palestine, but it was often of inferior quality, being mixed with other minerals, particularly gypsum. When the salt leeched out of the mixture, the result was a weak product. (The Greek historian Pliny [Nat. Hist. 3, 31, 34] attests to this feature of Dead Sea salt.) Or Jesus' saying might have been hyperbolic, showing the uselessness and lack of positive witness among His followers if they were not totally committed to Him.

10:15 Jesus was not commending unthinking credulity to enter the kingdom, as if Christians must be fools. He was commending an attitude of dependence, without which it is impossible to be saved. Sin is fundamentally independence from the rightful rule of God, and unbelief can be as much a matter of the will as of the intellect.

10:18 Jesus was not denying that He was good, nor was He denying that He was God. Rather, He was rejecting the flattery offered by the man and challenging him to consider both his concept of goodness and his concept of Jesus. Matthew's version (Mt 19:16-22) makes the same point but renders the exchange differently to bring out the erroneous focus of the man's thinking more directly. Mark included this saying to indicate his interest in reporting the actual sayings of the historical Jesus, for no one in the early church would have invented such a saying and placed it on the lips of Jesus.

10:19 Jesus was not confused about the Ten Commandments; that any first-century Jew could be is inconceivable. Jesus probably replaced "Do not covet" (Ex 20:17) with "Do not defraud," since fraud was commonly assumed to be the particular form of covetousness the rich manifested in the first-century Mediterranean world. Economics were viewed as a zero-sum game, and the rich were understood to obtain more wealth only by defrauding others of their fair share.

10:21 The demand placed on the rich man was radical and one that Jesus did not require of all His disciples. Jesus' goal was to discover the extent to which the man really desired eternal life and to underscore the radical self-denial of discipleship (8:34-38), a self-denial more difficult for "the haves" (the first) than the "have nots" (the last).

10:29-30 Jesus did not promise health and wealth to His followers. That He was speaking hyperbolically is made clear by the promise of receiving a hundred mothers and fathers in return for the loss of one. Rather, Jesus did promise that Christians are amply compensated in the new community for what they give up of their former lives. On the denial of family relationships, see notes on 3:31-35 and Lk 14:26.

10:35 Matthew tells us that it was James and John's mother who made the request of Jesus, whereas Mk has the brothers approaching Jesus directly. Matthew's version (Mt 20:20-28) is probably more accurate, since it was common in Mediterranean culture to broach delicate requests through a respected intermediary. Nevertheless, Jesus understood that the mother was speaking for the sons, so that even in Mt, Jesus responded directly to the brothers rather than to the mother and focused on their untoward request as the main issue. Mark simplified the story in the interests of this main point.

10:45 This saying combines allusions to the Son of Man of Dn 7 and the Suffering Servant of Is 53. These ways of understanding Jesus were rare, if not nonexistent, in the early church, and thus it is improbable that the church (instead of Jesus Himself) would have created this saying. In fact, a similar saying in 1 Tm 2:5-6 is reworded in a much more Hellenistic style, highlighting the antiquity and Semitic background of Mark's version. The cross was central to Jesus' messianic self-understanding. (Mk 14:24).

10:46-52 While Matthew mentioned two blind men healed at Jericho, Mark seemed to focus on only one of them, perhaps the spokesman. Mark named the man, something he rarely did (15:21).

10:47 On blind Bartimaeus's reference to Jesus as the "Son of David," see note on Mt 1:1.

11:2-3 For the number of animals, see note on Mt 21:2. Some understand Jesus to have been stealing the donkey or at least to have been presumptuous in taking it. However, Jesus had visited this region before (see Lk 10:38-42; Jn 11:1), and it is possible He had arranged the securing of the animal earlier. Other scholars refer to the recognized prerogative of government officials, or even a rabbi, of requisitioning mounts. The Greek word for "lord" here (kurios) could mean God had need of the animals, but it may also merely mean "our master" or "its master" had need of them.

11:12-14 Jesus appears out of character in this story. Its context, however, makes it clear that He intended His actions as an acted-out parable about His unsuccessful search for fruit in Israel and subsequent rejection of the religiously active but unproductive temple, perhaps with Mc 7:1 in mind (cp. the spoken parable in Lk 13:6-9). Though it was not the season for figs, Jesus could reasonably expect to find "early figs" on the tree (Is 28:4; Hs 9:10; Mc 7:1).

11:15 Jesus continued His prophetic action in the temple, undoubtedly not driving everyone (hundreds of people!) out of the precincts, but overturning some tables and accosting some individuals, as a symbolic demonstration against what He perceived as unacceptable use of the temple and a corrupt temple establishment (Zch 14:21). Other contemporary Jews held similar views (e.g., 2 Bar 10:18). Josephus (Jewish War 6.5.3) told of an individual, Jesus son of Ananias, who in A.D. 62 was delivered to the Romans by the temple authorities for similar prophetic cries against the temple. For more about the day of the cleansing of the temple, see note on Mt 21:12-22.

11:22-24 It is characteristic Semitic style to make a point in exaggerated and unqualified terms (e.g., 9:45-48; 13:2; 1 Jn 3:9). The hyperbolic casting of a mountain into the sea by faith signals the exaggeration in these statements about prayer. The point of the saying is the absolute necessity of trust in God's unlimited power, not a blank check for answered prayers. The disciples (and readers of this Gospel) were expected to supply the proper qualifications. Some of these are stated explicitly or illustrated elsewhere in the NT (Mt 6:10; 26:42; Jms 4:3; 1 Jn 5:14).

11:25 On Jesus' commendation of the spirit of forgiveness in the lives of believers, see note on Mt 6:12,14-15.

11:33 Jesus was not being flippant or dodging the question of the scribes. He made His point quite clearly to His questioners. If they could not recognize God's authority in John the Baptist, no amount of argument would persuade them that Jesus acted on God's authority.

12:6 The authenticity of this parable is established, among other things, on the word play in Hebrew of "son" (ben) and "stone" (eben). It indicates that Jesus understood Himself to be Israel's Messiah and shows that He viewed rejection as essential to the Messiah's mission. The Jewish audience was quite able to follow Jesus' point. They understood that He was referring to Israel as the vineyard (Is 5:1) and to the prophets as the servants of the owner, God. Thus they could be expected to recognize the son as the Messiah (2 Sm 7:14; Ps 2:7; 89:26-27; cp. Mk 14:61). What they could not accept was that the Messiah would be rejected and killed by the Jewish leadership, who would in turn be destroyed.

12:25 Humans do not become angels in the resurrection but are merely like angels. That is, they are no longer earthy creatures but heavenly ones (1 Co 15:35-50).

12:30 The addition by Jesus to Dt 6:5 of "with all your mind" is reflected in some manuscripts of the Greek version of the OT, though probably He was merely summarizing the passage in a way that heightens the point of total commitment to God.

12:37 In Jewish culture (and Roman culture as well) fathers (and other patriarchs) were deserving of utmost respect; they were lords of their families and descendants. Thus Jesus pointed out a paradox intended to expand the audience's messianic categories. He did not deny the Messiah was a son of David but noted that Ps 110 implies that the Messiah, though David's son, is his superior. Some have argued that the superscription of Ps 110 can be read as "a psalm to [or for] David," indicating that the psalm was written about David by someone else. However, the same superscription is used on all the psalms of David, notably Ps 18, which was clearly written by him, not about him, nor do the Pharisees seem to have entertained this option (Mt 22:45).

13:2 Jesus accurately prophesied the destruction of the temple 40 years before its demise. The fact that more details about its destruction (such as by fire or by the Romans, etc.) are not given indicates that this is not a "prophecy after the fact."

13:24-25 Jesus quoted Is 13:10, but the language of cosmic disturbances at the coming of God is common in Jewish literature (see Is 34:4; Jl 2:10; 3:15; Ezk 32:7-8; Am 2:9). Stars falling from heaven is apocalyptic rather than literal language.

13:30 "These things" that will happen in "this generation" are the events surrounding the destruction of the temple, about which the disciples asked (vv. 1-4). The temple was destroyed 40 years after the prophecy of Jesus, well within the lifetime of many of those present. Jesus, however, also talked about events surrounding His second coming (in vv. 14-27, though some scholars admit only vv. 24-27 or v. 32). The two events are spoken of together because the terror of the first-century Roman invasion of Palestine was viewed as representing the terror of the days leading to the coming of the Son of Man (vv. 7-8). Matthew's version of this prophecy makes the point more explicitly (see Mt 24:2).

13:32 The NT presents the incarnation of the Son as a period of humiliation and obedience (Php 2:5-11). When the Son became a man, He did not cease to be divine, but He condescended to live as humans properly should—in full dependence upon, and submission to, God the Father by the power of the Holy Spirit. At this point only the Father knows the timing of Jesus' second coming (so also Mk 10:40).

14:3-9 Though the account in Lk 7:36-50 is superficially similar to this episode, the details indicate that it was a different incident. The Gospel of Jn says that the event took place six days before Passover, i.e., before the triumphal entry. Mark apparently placed the event where he did in the narrative (note the lack of temporal markers) for thematic reasons, the focus from here on being the passion.

14:7 By focusing on His coming death, Jesus commended the appropriateness of the woman's actions. In doing so He also tacitly admitted that He was worth the costly sacrifice made by the woman. He was not disparaging the poor or helping the poor but emphasized the value of His presence, which would soon be taken away. Here He alluded to Dt 15:11, which explicitly commands helping the poor.

14:12 The Synoptic Gospels seem to represent the Last Supper as a Passover meal. They also appear to describe Jesus' death as occurring on the day of Passover. But the Gospel of Jn places these events on the day before Passover (Jn 13:1; 18:28; 19:14,31-32). All four Gospels agree, however, that the day of the week on which Jesus died was a Friday. Because there were calendrical disputes among first-century Jews, some scholars suggest that Mark and John used different calendars, both referring to the same Friday but as different days of the month. Others argue that when John referred to Passover, he was not referring to the day the Passover meal was eaten but to the entire Feast of Unleavened Bread, which began with Passover (or even, popularly considered, the day before) and lasted for seven days. Thus John's "preparation day for the Passover" (Jn 19:14) is taken to mean "the Friday of Passover week" ("preparation" being a term used for Friday, the day before the Sabbath; see Mk 15:42, Jn 19:42). For more on this point, see note on Jn 13:1.

14:21 Prophecy and foreknowledge do not negate human choice. Judas chose to betray Jesus, even though God knew such would be the case and decreed it as part of His plan for redemption.

14:22-24 The essential historicity of the words of institution is indicated by their reception by Paul as traditional (1 Co 11:23). The variation in wording among the accounts is due to the tendency of the Gospel writers to paraphrase in the interest of making a specific point. Just as in the Passover celebration the bread was said to be "the bread of affliction that our fathers ate when they left Egypt," though it was not literally such, so Jesus said that the bread was (i.e., represented) His body. This could be a messianic claim, since the eating of the afikoman, a piece of bread broken from the rest at Passover, signifies partaking in the messianic banquet. The words concerning the cup confirm 10:45, showing that Jesus understood His death as that of the atoning Suffering Servant (Is 53:12) and now indicated that His death would establish the promised new covenant of the messianic age (see Ex 24:8; Jr 31:31; Zch 9:11). The meal was not intended to be "cannibalistic" but symbolic of the significance of the death of Christ and the ensuing messianic fellowship among His followers.

14:27-31 Mark and Matthew set the prediction of Peter's denial on the way to the garden of Gethsemane, while Luke set it during the Last Supper. John divided the saying, giving the prediction of Peter's denial during the Last Supper (Jn 13:36-38) and the prediction of the scattering on the way to the garden (Jn 16:32; cp. 14:31; 18:1). The historical setting ranged from the Last Supper to the arrival in Gethsemane. The writers of the first three Gospels placed the material as they did for concerns other than pure chronology.

14:30,68,72 Rabbinic sources, which may not necessarily apply to conditions in the first century, both presuppose and disallow keeping poultry in Jerusalem. Thus, even if Jews could not keep their own poultry, roosters from outside the walls of the city could still be heard. In Mk, Jesus told Peter he would deny Him "before the rooster crows twice." In the other Synoptic Gospels,-Jesus referred to only one crowing of a rooster (Mt 26:34; Lk 22:34).

14:53 According to the later Jewish rabbinical writings known as the Mishnah, capital cases could not be tried at night and required two consecutive days before verdicts could be rendered. If these criteria were used in the first century, either convention was flouted in this case for expediency's sake or, more probably, this was not an official trial. The "trial" before the high priest seems to have been an ad hoc gathering of the ruling council demanded by the course of events (i.e., the opportunity afforded by Judas and the desire to do away with Jesus before the feast). Its purpose appears to have been to arrive at a consensus to deliver Jesus to the Romans with recommendation for execution. We must assume that Peter was informed of the proceedings by others in the high priest's household and related the trial to Mark or that some present at the trial—perhaps Nicodemus or Joseph of Arimathea—later reported the proceedings to the early church.

14:61-62 "The Blessed One" is an uncommon expression for God but is attested in Jewish literature. Caiaphas was demanding that Jesus admit plainly whether He was the Davidic Messiah. Mark made plain the intent of Jesus' actual, more evasive wording, which Matthew recorded (see note on Lk 23:3). On the timing of the return of Christ, see note on Mt 26:64.

14:63-64 Caiaphas probably did not take Jesus' admission to be the Messiah as blasphemy. He did see as blasphemy Jesus' claim to be the Son of Man who approaches God's throne (Dn 7:13-14) and the one who sits at God's right hand (Ps 110:1), sharing His authority. Later rabbis condemned such an understanding of the Messiah. Threatening the high priest was also related to the charge of blasphemy. According to rabbinic sources (m.San. 7:5), once the judge has heard blasphemy—a capital offense—he is to stand and tear his robes.

14:68,72 On the crowing of a rooster at Peter's final denial of Jesus, see note on 14:30,68,72.

15:1 John 18:13 has Jesus first examined before Annas, the father-in-law of the reigning high priest, Caiaphas. (See note on Lk 3:2.) The meeting appears to have been brief. After it, Jesus was sent to Caiaphas (Jn 18:24), whose house may have been on the same premises as Annas's. Mark 14:53-65 and Mt 26:57-68 describe the examination before Caiaphas. This meeting either continued into the morning (Mt 27:1; Mk 15:1; Lk 22:66-71),with a review of the case and summary judgment, or else a third, more official meeting was held in the morning before sending Jesus to Pilate. Each Gospel writer summarized this sequence and focused only on the parts that were important for the narrative.

15:6 That Mark and John independently related the story of the release of Barabbas points to the historicity of the event, especially since it could easily have been refuted in the first century and makes no particular contribution to the theology of the narratives. Slight evidence from outside the Bible exists for the practice of releasing a prisoner at Passover (m. Pesah 8:6), though more exists of Roman governors releasing prisoners to appease unruly crowds.

15:15 Luke and especially John gave added detail to the short, summary accounting by Mark and Matthew. John noted that the flogging of Jesus was an initial punishment (presumably the least severe type, termed fustigatio) intended by Pilate to appease the Jewish authorities. Verse 15 may indicate a second flogging (the more severe flagellatio or verberatio) after the verdict of crucifixion, or it may refer back to this initial punishment ("[already] having flogged Him").

15:17 Mark and John call the color of the soldiers' cloak put on Jesus "purple"; Mt 27:28 calls it "scarlet." Greek literature uses both words to describe such a cloak, since they describe a wide range of hues. Matthew's "scarlet robe" describes the coat as a military cloak, its color derived from a cheap dye. Mark's "purple" highlights the mocking of Jesus' supposed royalty intended by the soldiers.

15:23 Mark's phrase "mixed with myrrh" is more specific than Matthew's "mixed with gall" (Mt 27:34). The Greek term Matthew used (chole) means "a bitter substance," which Mark specified as myrrh. Matthew used "gall" to link the crucifixion to Ps 69:21.

15:25 According to Jn 19:14, Jesus was before Pilate at "six in the morning." Mark and John were probably using alternative means of reckoning time, both of which were in existence in the first-century Mediterranean world. Mark, in the common Jewish manner, reckoned the hour from daybreak (therefore, the third hour was about 9:00 A.M.), while John, in the official Roman manner, reckoned the hour from midnight (therefore, his "sixth hour" was about 6:00 A.M). See also Mk 11:11-12; Jn 12:1; 20:19 and note on Jn 19:14.

15:26 There are minor variations among the four Gospels as to the wording of the charge on the placard placed on Jesus' cross. Probably the charge read, "Jesus of Nazareth, king of the Jews," and each Gospel writer summarized it slightly differently while retaining the basic point. A placard noting the prisoner's name and offense often accompanied those condemned to death by the Romans.

15:27 Crucifixion was reserved for dangerous criminals and was especially employed for treason. Mark used the Greek term lestai for those crucified with Jesus. The term means "thugs" and could be applied not just to robbers but also to those agitating against the authorities. It may be that the men were associated with Barabbas and thus were crucified along with Jesus as insurrectionists.

15:32 On the crucifixion of criminals at the same time as Jesus and their attitude toward Him, see note on Lk 23:39-40.

15:33 On the darkness that happened at noon at Jesus' crucifixion, see note on Lk 23:44-45.

15:34 The greatest mystery of the gospel is that Jesus was both God and man in one person. Though the Gospels do not tell us, we can deduce from the rest of Scripture that Jesus was forsaken by God due to His bearing the sin of the world on the cross (Is 59:2; 2 Co 5:21;1 Pt 2:24). The rupture in relationship was between God and Jesus in His humanity. On the final words of Jesus, see notes on Mt 27:46 and Lk 23:46.

15:36 All the Gospels record that Jesus was offered sour wine, or wine vinegar, on the cross (see Mt 27:48; Lk 23:36; Jn 19:30). It is unclear whether what Luke and John related was parallel to Mark and Matthew. In the course of Jesus' six hours on the cross, He might have been offered a drink several times, particularly since in the first three Gospels it seems to be related to the mocking of Jesus. On the other hand, it is not hard to imagine all referring to the same incident, with sympathizers attempting to comfort Jesus, while the soldiers, in concert with the Jewish scoffers, used the opportunity to ridicule Jesus' messianic claims.

15:38 Some tantalizing parallels to the tearing of the veil are recorded in non-biblical sources (Josephus, War 6.7.3, b.Yoma 39b). But there is no direct confirmation of this event.

15:42-46 Victims of crucifixion were generally left as carrion for vultures and other wild animals to eat. But evidence indicates that a simple burial was more common in Palestine because of Jewish scruples about corpses. Joseph of Arimathea seems to have been an influential person since he was granted permission by Pilate to give Jesus a proper burial. This may support the portrayal of Pilate in the trial scenes as finding Jesus and His movement harmless to Roman rule. Otherwise, he probably would not have released Jesus' body to His followers.

15:47 Mark reports that Mary Magdalene and "Mary the mother of Joses" were at the cross and they observed that Jesus was placed in Joseph's tomb. Matthew's account includes these two women at the cross and adds "the mother of Zebedee's sons" (Mt 27:56). Luke's narrative does not name any specific women at the cross but refers to them as "the women who had come with Him from Galilee" (Lk 23:55). The Gospel of Jn indicates that Jesus' mother was at the cross, as well as Mary Magdalene and "Mary the wife of Clopas" (Jn 19:25). This Mary was probably the same person as Mary the mother of Joses in Mark's account.

The difference among these narratives may be disturbing to some people. But we must remember that the Gospels were not committed to writing until 30 to 50 years after the death of Jesus. They circulated as oral accounts for many years before finally being written down. The Gospel writers did not get together as a group to make sure their reports matched in every detail. They wrote from their recollections of the life and ministry of Jesus and the eyewitness reports from others who had known Jesus in the flesh. Just as the witnesses of an auto accident will remember different details of what they saw, the variation in these accounts is understandable and actually argues for the authenticity of the Gospels.

These variations in the Gospels have been known since the early days of the church. Church leaders creating neat, completely harmonious accounts would raise concerns about the authenticity of the account. As it was, the church was confident enough in the truthfulness of these accounts not to have to hide or eliminate the places that were challenging to a unified account.

16:1 All the Gospels agree that Mary Magdalene went to the tomb along with other women (see Lk 24:10; Jn 20:2). The first three Gospels agree that one of the others was named Mary. Mark tells us Salome was also present, and Luke that Joanna was present. See notes on Mt 28:9-10 and Jn 20:1-2. If the story of the empty tomb were invented by the early church or by Mark, it is hardly likely that it would feature women as the primary witnesses, especially in the way Mark portrayed the incident. John's (and perhaps Luke's) apparently independent version corroborates this judgment. The women presumably supplemented the supply of spices they had prepared earlier (Lk 23:56) by buying more on Saturday night, after the Sabbath had ended. Conversely, Mark may have compressed the events of Lk 23:56 since his point was that they bought spices to anoint the body on Sunday morning.

16:2 The Gospels agree that the women arrived at the tomb about dawn. Mark's "sunrise" and John's "while it was still dark" should be understood similarly, since at dawn light and dark are relative terms. The series of events probably began in relative darkness and ended in relative light. See note on Jn 20:1-2.

16:5-7 Matthew 28:2-4 agrees with Mark that there was one angel at the tomb (describing an angel as a "young man" was common in Jewish literature). Luke 24:4 (and Jn 20:11-12, if we can assume it records the same events) indicates two angels. As with the entire resurrection narrative in all four Gospels, the account of the angel(s) is told in a highly selective manner. There were apparently two angels, but Mark and Matthew focused on the one who took the initiative. Mark placed the angel in the tomb, and Luke seems to have done the same. Matthew had him initially outside the tomb, but his location when he addressed the women is not clear. Presumably he had at that point moved into the tomb.

16:6 The resurrection can be doubted on philosophical grounds, but it is a historical certainty that the first disciples of Jesus believed He had actually risen from the dead (1 Co 15). Such belief cannot be accounted for merely by hallucination, wishful thinking, or conspiracy to commit fraud. See note on Mt 28:17.

16:8 Manuscript evidence indicates that this Gospel probably did not originally include any of verses 9-20. Either Mark ended his Gospel here, he never wrote an intended ending, or his original ending has been lost. The Greek syntax of verse 8 and the fact that all the other Gospels include the announcement to the apostles and subsequent resurrection appearances lead some scholars to conclude that Mark's original ending has been lost.

If the Gospel ended with verse 8, Mark intended his readers to assume the women did as they were told. Their fearful silence did not imply their failure to deliver the angel's words to the disciples. The reading provides the mental image of the resurrected Jesus heading for Galilee and the women and disciples doing the same, their minds full of the inescapable and wonderful conclusion "This man really is God's Son!" Many times before, the response to Jesus' work was fear and faith (4:41; 5:15,33; 6:50; 9:6,32; 10:32). Furthermore, the abruptness of such a conclusion matches the abruptness of Mark's beginning as compared with the other Gospels.

Luke Articles

Could the Gospel Writers Withstand the Scrutiny of a Lawyer?

by John Warwick Montgomery

Lawyers distinguish between making claims (almost anyone can file a lawsuit) and proving the case (which is possible only on the basis of good evidence). Lawyers, therefore, are in the evidence business and will not accept any claims (including religious claims) without good reason to do so. It is highly significant, then, that throughout history so many great lawyers, judges, and legal scholars have come to Christian belief.

This is due in large part to the solidity of the Gospel testimony to Jesus Christ. The Gospel records qualify under the "ancient documents rule" and would be admitted as evidence in any common law court. They assert that they are firsthand, nonhearsay testimony to Jesus Christ (1 Jn 1:1, etc.) or are the product of careful research concerning Him (Lk 1:1-4). Documents, like defendants, are innocent until proven guilty, and the critics have not been able to impugn the credibility of the Gospels.

The soundness of the four Gospels depends upon their early dating and their authorship by those who knew Jesus personally. Corroboration from outside the Gospels comes by way of such early writers as Papias, who was a student of the Apostle John. Papias tells us that the four Gospels were written either by an apostle (Matthew and John) or by an apostle's associate (Mark with Peter, Luke with Paul). The Gospels were in circulation, then, while hostile witnesses of Jesus' ministry were still alive. As F. F. Bruce has argued, these opponents were the functional equivalent of modern cross-examiners: They had the means, the motive, and the opportunity to refute the Gospel accounts of Jesus' miraculous ministry if it had not happened just as the Gospel writers said it did. Since the opposition could not do that, the Gospel narratives stand as powerful evidence that the miraculous picture of Jesus they convey is accurate.

The fact that the first three Gospels were written prior to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and the Gospel of John not long thereafter, makes impossible the attempt of liberal Bible critics and secularists to argue that they are really the product of a developing oral tradition in which the early church modified Jesus' life and teachings. There was insufficient time for doing this. A. N. Sherwin-White has pointed out that the case for accurate reporting is far better in the case of the Jesus of the Gospels than for the best-known contemporary of Christ, Tiberius Caesar, whose career is also known from just four sources.

Harvard professor Simon Greenleaf, the greatest authority on the law of evidence in the nineteenth century, wrote, "All that Christianity asks of men on this subject is [that the testimony of the Gospels] be sifted as if it were given in a court of justice. . . .
The probability of the veracity of the witnesses and of the reality of the occurrences which they relate will increase, until it acquires, for all practical purposes, the value and force of demonstration."

What About Those Who Never Heard About Christ?

by Chad Owen Brand

Human beings as a lot are incurably religious. The problem is that since these same human beings are also infected by sin, they tend not to desire to honor and glorify the true God, who is righteous and holy. Rather, they tend to make gods for themselves that are pleasing to them or that satisfy some sense of what they think a god ought to be. As John Calvin said, the human mind is a factory for idols. Such gods, concocted by the rationale of humans apart from special revelation, are invariably out of touch with the truth (Rm 1:18-32).

What hope is there for those who do not live in predominantly Christian parts of the world? Historically, Christians have argued that their hope lies in the mission impulse of the Christian church. From the earliest days of Christianity, Jewish believers began to spread the message to the Gentile world (Ac 10–11). Christians such as the Apostle Paul made it clear that it was not good enough even to be a Jew, since the hope for salvation rests in affirming Jesus as Messiah (Php 3:7-11). In the early centuries of the faith, Christians spread the message to Africa, northern Europe, the British Isles, and the Asian subcontinent, all because they believed this message was the hope of salvation for the world.

It is obvious to anyone that vast numbers of people in the world today either have never heard the gospel or have heard it in only a cursory manner. What hope do such people have? The Bible makes it clear that there is no salvation in any name other than that of Christ (Jn 14:6; Ac 4:12). That means that one must believe specifically in Jesus in order to be saved (Rm 10:9-14). Does this mean that most people ever born will spend eternity in hell? If so, is that a problem for the Christian faith?

A couple of proposals have been offered to respond to this difficulty. Some have suggested that God will evaluate all people according to the "light they have." That is, if someone is a Hindu or a Muslim or an ancient Aztec, God will judge that person only according to his response to the religious information he has at hand. The problem is that the Bible regularly condemns idolatry. Scripture even indicates that idolaters know intuitively that there is something wrong with their idolatry (Rm 1:19-20). The other problem is that many actions of religious people are terrible. Hindu Kali worshipers murdered travelers, and Aztecs sacrificed young women to their god. Another proposal is that God will simply save all persons by His power. The difficulty here is that it ignores human free will as well as the fact that the Bible indicates that some will eventually go to everlasting punishment (Mt 25:46).

Christians must hold that faith in Christ, and only faith in Christ, is the avenue to salvation. But having said that, God will judge those who have heard the truth and yet have rejected it more severely that those who have never heard (Lk 10:14). There is also the hope that in the future the church's message of salvation will cover the entire earth.

(For another perspective, see the article in Romans 10, page 1696.)

Does the Bible Teach That There Is a Purgatory?

by Chad Owen Brand

Some Christian traditions teach that Christians who die in good fellowship with the church but still not in a state of perfection will go to an intermediate place after death that is neither heaven nor hell. This intermediate place is known as purgatory. Unbaptized adults and those who have committed mortal sins, according to this tradition, go to Hades or hell. A few perfected persons (saints) go directly to heaven.

Defenders of purgatory teach that it will be a time and place of suffering, something akin to the lake of fire, but not as severe and only temporary. The amount of time one spends there depends on the degree of purging needed, based on one's sins. Pope Gregory I taught that baptism absolves us of original sin but that we have to remit payment for our actual sins. This purging is a preparation of the soul for heaven.

Is there any biblical justification for the doctrine of purgatory? Supporters of the doctrine generally defend their position by citing 2 Maccabbees 12:39-45 (a passage in the Apocrypha, or collection of writings that Protestants do not accept as a part of the Bible). But this text says nothing about purgatory, and those who do not accept the authority of the Apocryphal writings would not find it compelling even if it did. The other text that is sometimes cited is 1 Co 3:10-15, where the concluding phrase is "yet it will be like an escape through fire." But again there is nothing in the text that indicates that there will be a time and place after death in which individuals will be purged of the sins committed in this life.

The doctrine of purgatory fails the biblical test both in terms of direct interpretation of the specifically cited texts and in terms of the overall teaching of Scripture. Neither of the classically cited passages mentions purgatory by name or by concept. Even more, this doctrine denies one of the fundamental teachings of the NT—that Jesus' death on the cross atoned for all our sin, not simply original sin (Rm 3:21-26; 2 Co 5:21). Because of that atonement, though we will all stand before the judgment seat of Christ, those who have placed faith in Christ will never face condemnation (Rm 5:1; 8:1; 2 Co 5:10).

Are the Teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses Compatible with the Bible?

by Robert M. Bowman Jr.

Jehovah's Witnesses (JWs) claim to regard the Bible as the absolute Word of God and to base all their beliefs on it. In fact, the teachings of JWs are contrary to the Bible.

The Bible. JWs use a doctored version of the Bible called the New World Translation (NWT). The JW leaders who produced the NWT were not biblical scholars, and it shows. The most obvious difference between the NWT and other Bibles is its use of "Jehovah" in the NT. JWs claim that the NT originally used the Hebrew name YHWH (translated "Jehovah" or "Yahweh") and that apostate scribes put "Lord" (Gk kurios) in its place. There is no historical or manuscript evidence for this claim.

The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. JWs teach that the Father alone is Jehovah, the almighty God; that the Son, Jesus Christ, is "a god" (their translation of Jn 1:1) inferior to the Father; and that the "holy spirit" is an impersonal force emanating from God. The Bible, on the other hand, teaches that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are each God (Jn 1:1; 17:3; 20:28; Ac 5:3-4; 2 Co 3:17-18; Ti 2:13). The Son made everything (Heb 1:10-12) and is to be honored as God (Jn 5:23; Heb 1:6; Rv 5:13). The Holy Spirit is a person, called the "Comforter" or "Helper" (Gk parakletos); He teaches, speaks, and bears witness to Jesus (Jn 14:16,26; 15:26-27; 16:13-14).

Death, the soul, and eternal punishment. According to JWs, when unsaved human beings die, they cease to exist. There is no intermediate state of the dead and no eternal punishment for the wicked (who are annihilated instead). The Bible, on the other hand, teaches that human beings exist after their deaths as spirits awaiting the resurrection and final judgment (Lk 16:19-31; 23:43; Heb 12:9,23; Rv 6:9-11). (The NWT mistranslates Lk 23:43 and the Hebrew texts to avoid this implication.) The wicked will suffer eternal punishment (Mt 25:46; Rv 14:9-11; 20:10).

Jesus' resurrection and return. JWs believe that God "raised" Jesus from the dead as an angelic spirit, with a so-called spirit body. They deny that He will return visibly and personally to earth. Scripture, however, teaches that Jesus rose with the same physical body with which He died, though glorified and immortal, and that His body possessed flesh and bones, hands and feet, and even marks of His crucifixion (Lk 23:49; Jn 2:19-22; 10:17-18; 20:20,25; Ac 2:24-32). Though He is the second person of the Godhead, Jesus is also a glorified man (Ac 17:31; 1 Co 15:47; 1 Tm 2:5) and He will return personally and bodily to the earth (Ac 1:9-11; 3:19-21; 1 Th 4:16; Heb 9:26-28).

Salvation. JWs view Jesus' death as providing a "corresponding ransom," releasing all people in principle from the condemnation due to Adam's sin. However, to enjoy everlasting life, JWs believe they must not only accept Christ's ransom but also prove themselves worthy by their works. The Bible's teaching is quite different. Christians are saved by God's grace alone, through faith in Christ, and our good works are the fruit of salvation, not the prerequisite for it (Rm 3:21-28; 5:1-11; Eph 2:8-10; Ti 3:4-8).

How Is the Transformation of Jesus' Disciples Different from Other Religious Transformations?

by Gary R. Habermas

When people discuss the beliefs of Jesus' disciples and their willingness to suffer martyrdom for their convictions, they often make comparisons to other religious persons whose lives were also changed due to their own religious beliefs. Like Jesus' disciples, many have willingly given their lives for their beliefs. Examples include modern Muslims, the followers of various religious teachers, and certain UFO groups. Even political ideas, such as communism, have inspired life changes and martyrdoms.

Under these circumstances, can Christians continue to make evidential use of the disciples' transformations?

Initially, we need to make a crucial distinction. Transformed lives, whether the disciples' or others', do not prove that someone's teachings are true. However, they do constitute evidence that those who are willing to suffer and die for their religious commitments truly believe them to be true.

So, can we distinguish between the disciples' transformations and the experiences of others? In general, people committed to a religious or political message really believe it to be true. Of course, beliefs can be false. But in the case of Jesus' disciples, one grand distinction makes all the difference in the world.

Like other examples of religious or political faith, the disciples believed and followed their leader's teachings. But unlike all others, the disciples had more than just their beliefs—they had seen the resurrected Jesus. This is a crucial distinction; their faith was true precisely because of the resurrection.

Let's view this another way. Which is more likely—that an ideology we believe in is true or that we and a number of others saw a friend several times during the last month? If eternity rested on the consequences, would we rather base our assurance on the truth of a particular religious or political view, or would we rather that the consequences followed from repeated cases of seeing someone?

But unlike the world's faiths, which rest on certain beliefs being true, the disciples both heard unique teachings and saw the resurrected Jesus. Jesus was the only founder of a major world religion who had miracles reported of Him in reliable sources within a few decades. But most of all, He confirmed His message by rising from the dead. The disciples, both individuals and groups, saw Him repeatedly. Even two skeptics—James the brother of Jesus and Saul of Tarsus (Paul)—witnessed the resurrected Jesus.

No wonder the disciples were so sure of their faith! Not only had they been promised heaven, but then they had actually been shown a glimpse of it!

Introduction to Luke

AUTHOR

Luke is unique among the canonical Gospels for having features indicating that it, along with Acts, was written as a self-consciously literary work (see the note on 1:1-4). The author apparently intended the Gospel not merely for private or church use but to set before a broad literary public the facts of the life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus of Nazareth, the founder of the fledgling "Jewish sect" called Christianity. The prologue shows an awareness of other sources, both written and oral, that provided accounts of Jesus' life and ministry based on the testimony of eyewitnesses. The author had carefully investigated these. His aim was to compile his own orderly account in order that his reader may "know the certainty" (1:4) of those things he had been taught.

There is no reason to dispute the traditional belief that Paul's traveling companion Luke (Ac 16:10-16; 20:6–28:22; Col 4:14; Phm 24; 2 Tm 4:11) was the author of this Gospel. It is unlikely that a Greco-Roman literary work would have been published anonymously. Usually the name of the author, if not indicated directly in the text, was attached as a tag to the scroll. Though the earliest manuscript we have that bears the title "The Gospel According to Luke" (as a postscript) is from the end of the second century, the heretic Marcion acknowledged Luke as the author as early as A.D. 135. This tradition is strongly attested in writings by Christian leaders from 160 on. The Muratorian canon (a fragmentary list of biblical Christian books from about A.D. 180) names the author of the third Gospel as "Luke, that physician, who after the ascension of Christ, when Paul had taken him with him as companion of his journey, composed in his own name, on the basis of report." There is no competing tradition of authorship in the early church, as one might expect if Luke's name were attached to the Gospel on conjecture. Luke is a minor character in the NT. Had there been any doubt that he was author of this Gospel and the Acts, it would likely have shown up in other traditions regarding authorship of these two key documents. Some have denied Luke's authorship of the third Gospel, raising three possible objections. (1) The portrait of Paul in Acts seems dissimilar to that in Paul's letters. (2) The "we" sections of Acts (indicating that the author was traveling with Paul) could be a literary device or a subterfuge. (3) The author of Acts does not seem to know about Paul's letters.

Each of these points is easier to understand as supporting the traditional authorship. We would expect one trying to pass himself off as a companion of Paul to cite or mention Paul's letters, and to correlate his account with the biographical and theological details garnered from those letters, since that was the primary means by which Paul was known to the generation that came after him. A writing failing to do so, as suggested by some critical scholars, would at least have met with suspicion in the early church, but such was never the case with Luke or Acts. Similarly, with the "we" sections, if one were trying to pass oneself off as Paul's companion, why include oneself in only part of the narrative rather than the entirety of it? On the other hand, the sporadic "we" sections and the portrait of Paul we encounter in Acts, which is certainly compatible with the Paul of the letters, though not derived from them, comport well with authorship by someone who knew Paul and traveled some with him but who wrote before Paul's letters were collected and recognized as having canonical status.

Since the early church conceived of no other candidate for this person than Luke, the tradition must be considered trustworthy.

DATE

The date of Luke is debated among scholars, and the issue is clearly tied up with the book's authorship. The latest possible date for Luke is about A.D. 80, since there is evidence of its use from 95 on and since Acts makes no use of Paul's letters. On the other hand, the book probably was not written earlier than, say, the late 50s, since Luke was apparently written not long before Acts (Ac 1:1), and 62 is the date of the last event recorded in Acts (Paul's house arrest in Rome). Most critical scholars argue that Luke could not have been written before A.D. 70 since it records as a prophecy of Jesus the fall of Jerusalem to the Romans in that year (Lk 13:35; 19:43-44; 21:20,24). However, aside from the question of the ability of Jesus to prophesy or even merely to predict the destruction of Jerusalem, the language describing the destruction is general rather than detailed. Those recording Jesus' prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem would likely have included more detail had they experienced this series of devastating events or had talked with witnesses of these events. It has in fact been argued that Jesus could have couched His prediction in such terms solely from OT precedents. Furthermore, it is astonishing that Luke, who recorded so much in Acts about the Jerusalem church and the expansion from there of the gospel to the Gentiles, should fail anywhere in that book to mention such a historically and theologically momentous event as the destruction of the temple, or of Emperor Nero's persecution that preceded it, or yet of Peter's and Paul's deaths in the same general time period. It is much more likely that Luke made no mention of these events because they had not yet happened. Acts ends with Paul in prison because that was the state of affairs when Luke concluded his writing. Thus a date prior to A.D. 62 for the third Gospel is best.

THEMES

Luke wrote as a historian and noted that he was aware of both written sources (the Gospel of Mark appears to have been one of them) and oral testimony from eyewitnesses. His Gospel and Acts are thus noteworthy for the number of named characters (e.g., Zechariah, Elizabeth, Mary, Cleopas). Presumably these names attest to his careful research, including the interviewing of primary witnesses. He could have conducted this research in Palestine while he awaited the outcome of Paul's case in Caesarea (Ac 23:23–27:1).

Each of the four Gospels emphasizes something different about the significance of Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah of Israel. Luke especially emphasizes Jesus as Savior and His work as one of salvation (2:11; 19:10). And though the author stressed Jesus' life and work as fulfillment of God's promises to Israel, a primary point of his Gospel (and Acts) is that Jesus brought salvation not just to Jews but also to Gentiles. In turn, love of neighbor, expressed in concern for the poor and marginalized, becomes a major demand of discipleship in Luke and Acts. Other major emphases include the Holy Spirit and prayer.

For more on the similarities and differences among the Gospels, see the Introduction to Mark.

Luke Study Notes

1:1-4 This prologue is typical of Greco-Roman literary works. Luke noted that other gospel narratives had been produced prior to his. These were based on the testimony of eyewitnesses. His account, the result of careful investigation, was intended to reassure his benefactor, Theophilus, of the historical accuracy of that received tradition. Luke did not contrast his Gospel to earlier ones; rather, he placed his alongside them (note "also" in v. 3). The account is "orderly" (Gk kathexes), but the term does not tell us what the principle(s) of order is (are). Of the four canonical Gospels, Lk is most like a biography, beginning with detailed circumstances of Jesus' birth and frequently tying notable events to secular history and personages.

1:5–2:52 The Semitic flavor of 1:5–2:40 and its inclusion of theologically irrelevant details has led many to conclude this passage was reworked by Luke from an earlier source or sources. Presumably Mary the mother of Jesus, or other family members, related them to the early church (Ac 1:14) or Luke interviewed some of these primary sources for this information. If Mary were about 15 years old when Jesus was born, she would have been about 75 when Paul was in prison in Caesarea (Ac 24–25), the first time Luke had access to the Palestinian church. For more about the birth, see note on 2:39.

1:16-17 Luke alluded to Mal 4:1-6 with its prophecy that Elijah will come as a forerunner of the Day of the Lord (v. 76). John coming "in the spirit and power of Elijah" makes explicit the odd statements in Mt 11:14 and Mk 9:11-13 as compared with Jn 1:21.

1:26-38 There is no reason to doubt that an angel announced the virgin birth to both Mary and Joseph (Mt 1:18-24). Because of the arranged nature of marriage in first-century Palestine, we have no idea how much contact Mary and Joseph had with one another prior to their wedding. On the other hand, Joseph's acceptance of the fact that Mary conceived by the power of the Holy Spirit seems next to impossible without his own angelic vision.

1:27 Luke presented Jesus as descended from David through his stepfather, Joseph. As a relative of Elizabeth (v. 36) from the "daughters of Aaron" (v. 5), Mary had Levitical ancestry. It may have been that her bloodlines were mixed with Davidic heritage, but we are nowhere told this (unless Rm 1:3 can be taken as affirming it). Nevertheless, as the adopted son of Joseph, Jesus was legally a descendent of David. The NT consistently understands Jesus as a son of David (vv. 32,69).

1:32 "Son of the Most High" may merely be a designation of the royal Messiah (2 Sm 7:14; Ps 2:7; Mk 14:61), but the further explanation of conception by the Holy Spirit in verse 35 argues that the title refers ultimately to Jesus' divinity.

1:33 God's promise to David that his son would reign forever (2 Sm 7:13) grounded the Davidic messianism in the OT and early Judaism. According to 1 Co 15:24-28, the initial phase of the kingdom will end when the Son hands the kingdom to the Father. The Son will thereafter reign with the Father for eternity (Rv 22:1,3).

1:35 Some scholars have understood the conception of Jesus by the Holy Spirit to be a late invention of the early church, especially since it appears explicitly in the NT only in Lk and Mt. Most contemporary scholars dismiss as baseless, however, theories that the story was developed from or in response to pagan legends of supernatural conceptions, since suggested parallels bear little resemblance to the Gospel narratives. But there was no theological need to invent the virgin birth; other avenues for asserting the divinity of Christ (such as adoptionism, the view that Jesus the man became divine by adoption) were open and less fraught with the danger of inviting the charge that Jesus was illegitimate, which was in fact the pagan and Jewish response to the stories. In the end, the only real reason for rejecting the historicity of the virgin birth is a philosophical denial of the supernatural in general and of the incarnation in particular.

1:46-50,67-80 The style and themes of the hymns of Mary and Zechariah are Semitic and pre-Christian, indicating that Luke incorporated them from a source earlier than his Gospel. Scholars debate the sources, but there is no reason to doubt that either Mary or Zechariah, both familiar with the singing of the psalms, could have composed them and repeated them as reflections on the auspicious events they had experienced. The hymns must then have been written down and preserved by Jesus' and John's family.

1:51 God, as a Spirit (Jn 4:24), has no body. The arm of God is a metaphor for His power (Dt 9:29; Jr 32:17).

1:51-54 This "great reversal" is a common OT motif(1 Sm 2:5-7; Ps 113:7-9; 147:6) and reflects God's justice (Jr 5:27-29). The classes of raised and lowered are not to be taken absolutely but as a reflection of their spiritual condition. Those cast down are the arrogant and self-reliant (v. 51), and those exalted are the humble (v. 52). These two classes are often related in the OT and first-century Judaism to the rich and powerful on the one hand and the poor on the other. See notes on 6:20-23; 6:24-26; Mk 10:19.

2:1 We have no evidence that Augustus ever issued a decree resulting in an empire-wide registration (census), though several censuses were conducted during his reign having this effect. Luke may have been merely summarizing the intention of these registrations or referring to a decree that expressed such an intention. Evidence exists that the Romans sometimes took registrations of client kingdoms, as Palestine was at this time, and may even point to the existence of tax rolls in Samaria prior to Herod's death. Herod had fallen out of favor with Augustus toward the end of his life, and Augustus may have pressured Herod to conduct the registration in view of his advanced age and the possibility of Roman acquisition of at least some of Herod's territory upon his death.

2:2 The Jewish historian Josephus wrote that Quirinius became governor of Syria and instituted a registration in Judea in A.D. 6, too late for a supposed birth of Jesus under Herod the Great (Mt 2:1; Lk 1:5), who probably died in 4 B.C. Luke clearly knew of this registration (Ac 5:37), so that calling the registration of chapter 1 "the first" (in apparent opposition to the later census) strongly suggests he did not have his facts mixed up here. The verse is to be read as either (1) dissociating Quirinius from the registration (i.e., this was a former registration, taken before the famous one under Quirinius), or (2) positing two registrations administered by Quirinius (i.e., this is the registration taken by Quirinius the first time he was governor [or some other administrator] of Syria). Our knowledge of the relevant historical facts is too incomplete to determine a more definitive solution.

2:3 The Romans did not normally require people to return to their ancestral homes to be registered, so this detail may support a registration under Jewish methods while Herod was still king. Similarly, if Luke were referring to the registraton of Quirinius in A.D. 6, it is unlikely Joseph was required to leave Galilee, ruled by Herod's son Antipas, to register in Judea, administered by a Roman prefect under the authority of the province of Syria. This detail makes much more sense if Galilee and Judea were at the time under one administration, such as during the reign of Herod the Great.

2:7 Some argue that Bethlehem would not have had an inn since it was not on any major road, and that this story is therefore fictitious. But attempting to claim the nonexistence of an inn in Bethlehem is mere conjecture, and besides, the Greek term translated "inn" (kataluma) simply means "lodging" and can refer to a guest room in a private home. Animal stalls, with their mangers, were normally located inside the one-room residence of peasant families. Animals were sometimes kept in caves, and an early Christian tradition places the birth of Jesus in a cave.

2:11 The Greek term kurios ("lord") in the Bible has the same range of meaning as the English term lord, from simple social status to divinity. It is probably intended to explain "Christ" (Gk christos, meaning Messiah, meaning "anointed") more fully as "the sovereign."

2:19 In Mk 3:20-35, Mary appeared with other family members wishing to restrain Jesus' ministry, believing Him to be mad. Though Mary mulled over the incredible events of Jesus' birth, she apparently did not come to any firm resolution about them until later in Jesus' life. The 30 years between birth and ministry, with only occasional reminders (Lk 2:51), may have softened the impact of these events.

2:22-24 Luke here combined references to Mary's postpartum purification (Lv 12:2-8) and Jesus' dedication to God (Ex 13:2; Nm 18:1-16). "Their purification" was not due to Luke's ignorance of Jewish custom but instead either means "the Jews' purification law" or, more likely, "the purification sacrifice offered by the family." Others have suggested that the phrase either referred to the two ceremonies performed for mother and child, using the one term "purification" for both, or that Joseph had been defiled in assisting the birth and thus offered a sin offering (Lv 5:11) alongside Mary's purification sacrifice.

2:39 It is difficult to reconcile the birth narratives in Lk and Mt, each of which seems to know nothing of the events of the other. They agree that Jesus was born in Bethlehem and later moved to Nazareth with His parents. In order to integrate the two accounts, the record in Mt of the flight to Egypt must be placed between Lk 2:38-39. The visit of the wise men may also have occurred here. If it occurred before Jesus' temple dedication, Herod took at least a month from his encounter with the wise men to realize he had been tricked, which is not unreasonable. Both birth narratives highlight themes important to their respective authors. Matthew highlighted both Joseph's role as a righteous, adoptive father through whom Jesus obtained Davidic lineage, and the recognition of Jesus as the true King of the Jews in opposition to Herod. Luke highlighted both the role of marginalized characters, women and shepherds, in the joyful recognition of the messianic Savior, and the significance of Jesus for Gentiles as well Jews.

2:42-51 Verses 49 and 51 show that Jesus was not intending to be disrespectful of His parents. At age 12 He had a strong sense of His paternity, and He anticipated that His parents would have the same sense. But, despite the announcement of His birth, 12 years of normal family relations had passed, and this sudden revelation of Jesus' self-consciousness probably brought a flood of confusion to Mary and Joseph about their roles as parents and about Jesus' relationship to them.

3:1 Josephus refers to a Lysanias who was ruler of Chalcis and executed by Mark Antony in 36 B.C., leading some to accuse Luke of error here. But Josephus also appears to have spoken of another Lysanias, one who ruled the city of Abila some time before A.D. 37. Inscriptional evidence from near Abila confirms that a Lysanias was associated with the area around A.D. 14. Luke's placement of the tetrarchy of Lysanias in c. A.D. 26–29 (the fifteenth year of Tiberius is disputed) therefore seems assured.

3:2 Caiaphas was high priest from A.D. 18–36. His father-in-law, Annas, preceded him as high priest but was deposed in A.D. 15. Annas nevertheless remained a powerful figure in priestly leadership for some time, and Luke referred to his de facto high priestly authority as retained during the tenure of Caiaphas. In 1990 an ossuary believed to be that of Caiaphas was discovered in Jerusalem (see Jn 18:13).

3:3 John's baptism was a preparatory rite, not only symbolizing the confession of sin and the intention of the one baptized to live responsibly under God, but also looking forward to the coming Mightier One who would purge His people and baptize them with the Spirit. Acts 19:4 shows that Luke did not envision John's baptism (or the repentance associated with it) would provide salvation; faith in the Messiah was still necessary.

3:6 The standard Hebrew text of Is 40:5 does not contain this phrase, but the Greek translation of this passage does. Presumably the ancient Jewish translator added the phrase as a marginal note for the revelation of God's glory, a justifiable inference from the larger context of Is 40–66. The significance of Jesus as a Savior for all humanity is a recurring theme in Lk (1:76-79; 2:11-14,29-32). Luke did not suggest a form of universalism in which every person will be saved but instead emphasized that salvation will extend beyond Israel to the Gentiles (see Ac 11:18).

3:17 The final judgment is yet future, when "the wheat" will be gathered and "the chaff" burned. But the winnowing process—the process of distinguishing chaff and wheat—began in the ministry of Jesus and continues through His second coming.

3:22 For more on the Father's affirmation of Jesus at His baptism see note on Mk 1:11.

3:23-38 Luke and Matthew differed considerably in their recording of Jesus' genealogy. Some have suggested that Luke gave Jesus' descent through Mary, but this solution has not been accepted by the majority of scholars. Perhaps Matthew gave the legal line of descent, while Luke gave the physical line of descent (i.e., of Joseph, but not literally of Jesus—see note on vv. 23-24), both with allowances for adoptions, levirate marriages, or transference of inheritance rights from one parallel line to another in the absence of children. Though all harmonizing solutions are conjectural, they demonstrate that the two genealogies are not inherently incompatible.

3:23-24 Though Jesus was not the physical descendant of Joseph, He was the legal heir through adoption. Luke lists Heli as the father of Joseph, but Mt 1:16 lists Jacob. Jacob and Heli may have been near relatives, with Heli's son Joseph becoming Jacob's heir when the latter died childless. Or, if Heli was the father of Mary and if she was his sole heir, then Joseph, his son-in-law, could have been considered his heir.

3:23 The dates of Jesus' birth and initial ministry are disputed. They depend on the date of Herod the Great's death (1:5; Mt 2:1) and the date of the fifteenth year of Tiberius (Lk 3:1). Herod's death is accepted by most as 4 B.C., but some evidence may better fit a date in 1 B.C. Similarly, on a normal Roman reckoning, the fifteenth year of Tiberius was A.D. 28–29. It is possible, however, to date his fifteenth year as early as A.D. 26. The various alternatives allow that Jesus was anywhere from 27 to 33 years old, within range of Luke's "about 30 years old."

3:27 Why does 1 Ch 3:19 list Hananiah, but not Rhesa, as one of the sons of Zerubbabel? Hananiah is probably equivalent to Luke's Johanan. On one the divine name Yah has been added as a suffix, and on the other it has been added as a prefix, to the basic name Hanan (Hanan-Yah, Yo-Hanan). Rhesa is then taken to be an early copying error, where the Aramaic word for "the prince" (resha), a title of Zerubbabel (see Ezr 1:8), has been mistaken for his child. The standard Hebrew text of 1 Ch 3:19 lists Zerubbabel as the son of Pedaiah. Whereas other OT passages (e.g., Hg 1:1; Ezr 3:2; Neh 12:1) as well as the Greek translation of 1 Ch 3:19, call him the son of Pedaiah's brother Shealtiel. This is probably a case of levirate marriage (Dt 25:5-10) or adoption. Matthew agreed with 1 Ch 3:17 that Jeconiah (Jehoiachin) was the father of Shealtiel, but Luke named his father as Neri. According to Jr 22:30, Jeconiah's heirs would not rule, so the right of rule presumably passed to the line of Nathan in the person of Shealtiel, son of Neri. The chronicler then followed the legal descent from Jeconiah to Shealtiel.

3:38 Luke was not trying to suggest that Adam was a literal son of God but rather that he was directly created by God. Luke's point is to link the universal significance of Adam, the unique man and progenitor of humanity created directly by God, to the universal significance of Jesus, the second Adam and Savior of humanity conceived by God.

4:1-13 How do we know what happened in the wilderness? Jesus probably recounted the temptation narrative to His disciples. There are no real parallels to this story in Jewish or Greco-Roman literature, and no cogent reason has been given as to why the early church would invent it. Furthermore, the story resonates with other known features of Jesus' self-perception and spiritual practice. These considerations lead even some critical scholars to see at least a core of historicity in the account. On the relation to John, see note on Mk 1:7.

4:1 In the incarnation Jesus did not primarily function in His divine nature (Php 2:6-7) but set aside the independent exercise of His divine attributes. In His human nature Jesus was filled with, or empowered by, the Spirit.

4:2 Though it is possible that Jesus ate nothing for 40 days, Luke's language may merely mean that Jesus subsisted on little or regularly fasted during that time. Matthew used similar language to characterize the lifestyle of John the Baptist in Mt 11:18, clearly not intending total abstinence from food. Either way, the point is that Jesus would have been famished when Satan came to tempt Him.

4:5 The manner in which Jesus experienced these temptations is not made clear. Matthew made this temptation the third in his account, and many think his order was original. Luke may have rearranged the order of the temptations for literary purposes, presumably to have the climactic event occur at the temple, foreshadowing the Passion narrative (note the lack of temporal markers linking the temptations). The different order of the temptations in Mt and Lk demonstrates the freedom assumed by the Gospel writers in structuring their narratives. Though the events they recorded are historical events, the Gospels display principles of structure other than strict chronology. Modern historiography is far more concerned with chronology than were ancient historians. Only when time indicators are explicit can we be sure of chronological order.

4:14-15 For more on the timing of Jesus' Galilean ministry, see note on Mk 1:14.

4:16-30 This is probably Luke's version of the episode recorded in Mt 13:53-58 and Mk 6:1-6, which Luke has moved forward for thematic purposes. The emphasis at the outset of Jesus' ministry is His understanding of His messianic calling to the marginalized—whether Jews or Gentiles—and the rejection that resulted. According to plan, Jesus focused His three years of ministry primarily on His own people, but as His ministry began, He recognized that there would be no man-made barriers to the mercy God offered through His Son.

4:16 Rabbinic sources give some indication of what a synagogue service in the first century entailed. Part of the service included the invitation for any qualified male present to give a homily—an invitation Jesus accepted on this occasion.

4:18-21 Luke undoubtedly summarized a reading of Is 61:1-2 with an accompanying address by Jesus (cp. v. 22). The reading does not include the final portion of Is 61:2, "and the day of our God's vengeance," because Jesus reserves judgment for His second coming.

4:41 For more on Jesus not using the term messiah in the early stages of His ministry, see note on Mk 1:44.

5:1-11 This episode is similar to that in Jn 21:1-14, though different enough to conclude they represent distinct events. If this is the same event as in Mk 1:16-20 and Mt 4:18-22, Luke moved it to this point in his narrative in order to shift from an introduction to Jesus' ministry in 4:1-44 to an introduction of His disciples in 5:1-28. Luke 4:38-39 seems to indicate that the placement of the call narrative was thematic, not chronological.

In 1985 a boat, called "the Jesus boat," was discovered in the depths of the Sea of Galilee between the ancient harbors of Magdala and Ginnosar. Carbon-14 dating places the construction of the boat at about 40 B.C. The boat was likely in service on the Sea of Galilee during the first half of the first century A.D.

5:17 This verse was probably not intended to suggest that Jesus' healing power was intermittent. Luke nowhere stated that the power of Jesus to heal was at any time absent from Him. Luke's point here seems to have been to focus on Jesus' dependence on the power of the Holy Spirit (4:18).

5:19 Houses with tile roofs were uncommon, though not unknown, in first-century Palestine. It is not clear, however, if Luke was actually referring to a roof of baked clay tiles or to something else. The Greek word here translated "tiles" (keramoi) can mean "clay," and Luke may have been merely referring to the common mud-clay roof, which seemed to be the case in Mk 2:4. Alternatively, Luke's word choice may be an accommodation to his audience's normal experience of Greco-Roman architecture, which included roof tiles, and only meant to express the idea that the men dug through the roof.

5:24 For more on Jesus' self-designation as the Son of Man, see note on Mk 2:10,28.

5:27 On the call of Levi or Matthew, see note on Mk 2:14.

6:1 Were the disciples stealing grain? No, the disciples were not stealing, as the Pharisees had accused them of doing. In fact, Dt 23:25 permitted the casual plucking of grain in a field, as this incident shows.

6:12-16 On the call of the Twelve, see note on Mk3:13-19.

6:17-49 There are a number of differences between 6:17-49 and Mt 5:1–7:27. Jesus undoubtedly taught similar things on several different occasions, and the different settings (a "level place," Lk 6:17, and a "mountain," Mt 5:1; before [Mt 10:1-4] and after [Lk 6:12-16] choosing the Twelve) and contents of the two sermons lead many to conclude that they represent such a case. Others conclude from the very similar contents and order of the sermons, and from the episode of the healing of the centurion's servant that follows each, that they represent the same sermon, albeit considerably summarized by both Gospel writers. Luke's "level place" (Gk pedinos) can refer to a flat spot in the mountains and is so taken in this latter view. Luke omitted much of what is of primarily Jewish concern in the sermon as recorded in Mt and relocated other sayings elsewhere in his Gospel (to times when Jesus presumably repeated such sayings). Regardless of whether we read these as one sermon or two, the introductory and concluding statements in both Lk (Lk 6:17-19; 7:1) and Mt (Mt 5:1-2; 7:28-29) imply that the writers intended for these sermons to be read as historical events and not mere anthologies of Jesus' teaching shaped into sermons for literary purposes.

6:20-23 Since the Beatitudes are worded differently in Mt and Lk, some have claimed that Luke was focusing entirely on socioeconomic categories, as opposed to Matthew's more spiritual focus. However, the word for "poor" (Hb anawim) is used in the OT (and first-century Judaism) to describe pious people (e.g., 2 Sm 22:28; Ps 12:5; 69:29; Is 49:13; cp. 1 Co 1:26-29; Jms 2:5). The "poor" are those who have God as their only resource. Thus, in Lk 6:20-23, they are associated with the Son of Man and the prophets and expect end-times vindication on the one hand and are identified with Jesus' disciples on the other. Matthew's use of the phrase "poor in spirit" (Mt 5:3) makes this nuance explicit. Jesus probably said something much as Luke has recorded, and Matthew paraphrased it to bring out this nuance. Jesus' coming is especially good news for the poor and oppressed (Lk 4:18).

6:24-26 Although Matthew omitted these "woes" in his account, it does not mean that Luke was putting words into Jesus' mouth. Similar terminology and syntax between the woes that Luke recorded and the beatitudes that Matthew recorded suggest the same. Either Matthew did not know of the woes or he omitted them as unnecessary to his purpose. Jesus was not condemning all rich, satisfied, joyful, and well-liked people any more than He was commending all poor, hungry, sad, and persecuted people. The former categories stand for the self-satisfied, self-reliant, and ungenerous as the latter stand for those who rely on God.

6:29-35 These are not absolute commands but illustrations of loving one's enemies (v. 27) and dealing with others as one would desire to be dealt with (v. 31). They are stark and concrete examples of the general principles of non-retaliation, impartiality, generosity, and graciousness. The examples are radical and thus intended to shock the audience to consider the radical nature of Jesus' ethic; they were not intended to be applied unthinkingly. For more on hyperbolic expressions see note on Mk 1:5.

6:37 For more on Jesus' command not to judge, see note on Mt 7:1-2.

7:1-10 The differences between this episode and that in Jn 4:46-54 probably indicate that two distinct, though similar, events are described. Matthew 8:5-13 parallels Lk 7:1-10, but whereas Lk has two sets of intermediaries between Jesus and the centurion, Mt has Jesus interact directly with the centurion. Luke probably preserved the actual events, and Matthew summarized them, narrating the effect of the emissaries' mediation as direct speech with the centurion. This illustrates the relative degrees of precision at which the Gospel writers aimed in their reporting of events. For more about broaching delicate issues through intermediaries, see note on Mk 10:35.

7:16 Jesus, like Elijah (1 Kg 17:17-24) and Elisha (2 Kg 4:18-37), raised the dead, leading the crowd to speculate that He was a prophet on par with those great prophets. Elisha's raising of the Shunammite's son took place close to NT Nain, the site of this miracle. It is difficult to tell whether Luke presented their speculation as referring to the prophet of Dt 18:15. Though the verbal parallelism between their remarks and that of Dt is strong, the absence of the article with "prophet" leaves it unclear (see Mt 21:11; Jn 6:14; Ac 3:22).

7:18-23 Did John the Baptist change his mind about Jesus? Though John had earlier identified Jesus as the Messiah (Mt 3:14; Jn 1:32-34), he now expressed doubts. However, this is not surprising. John was languishing in prison for a cause that was centered on the justice-wielding messianic power of Jesus. But Jesus' ministry was not turning out to be what John expected (Lk 3:16-17). He thus sent emissaries to find out whether he had made a mistake.

7:28 The striking, paradoxical rhetoric of this saying was intended to make the simple point that the new era of the kingdom surpasses the old, preparatory order. The saying is not to be read as denigrating John, although his death coming prior to Jesus' meant he would not live to see the arrival of the kingdom age.

7:34 The accusation that Jesus was a glutton and drunkard came from the Jewish authorities. Though He undoubtedly mixed with the less-than-respectable, there is no indication that the charges of gluttony and drunkenness were anything more than caricature.

7:36-50 For a similar but different event, see note on Mk 14:3-9.

7:47 It is important to note that the woman was not forgiven as a result of her love. Rather, her love was a response to the forgiveness she received from Christ.

8:10 For more on the aim of parables, see note on Mk 4:11-12.

8:18 On the parable of the soils, see note on Mk 4:11-12.

8:19-21 For more on Jesus' relationship with His earthly family, see note on Mk 3:31-35.

8:26 For more on the location of this event, see note on Mk 5:1.

8:27 For more on the number healed, see note on Mk 5:2.

8:32-33 For more on Jesus' sending the demons into the pigs, see note on Mk 5:11-13.

8:46-48 Was everyone who touched Jesus healed? God honored this woman's faith as it was. The relation of faith to healing in the Gospels is complex. Sometimes Jesus responded to people's faith (or refused to heal due to their lack of faith), and sometimes He seems to have acted purely on His own initiative (7:11-16). Faith is explicitly present in about half the miracles in the Gospels. In the other half, miracles strengthen the faith of those who witnessed them.

Faith is not a matter of "name it and claim it." It does not override God's sovereignty. Lack of healing cannot be blamed on insufficient faith. Neither can it be attributed to specific sin (2 Co 12:7-9).

9:1 A distinction is here made between demonic possession and physical disease. The ancients were not as naive in these matters as many critics allege.

9:3 For different accounts of this event, see note onMk 6:8-9.

9:10 For geographical background, see note on Mk 6:32.

9:17 For more on the motif represented in this event, see note on Mk 6:34.

9:20 For more on Peter's confession, see note on Mk 8:29.

9:26 Jesus was not addressing a simple lack of courage on the part of His disciples. Being ashamed of His words is to reject His claims and to refuse to take up one's cross and follow Him.

9:27 For more on what Jesus meant about some seeing the kingdom of God, see note on Mk 9:1.

9:28-36 The historicity of the transfiguration is doubted by some because of its supernatural elements. It is often thought to be a post-resurrection story read back into the life of Jesus. But the story bears no real resemblance to other resurrection appearances (Moses, Elijah, and the glory of Jesus do not appear in any resurrection story). And reference to it in 2 Pt 1:16-18 indicates that the transfiguration was always seen as occurring before Jesus' passion and not after.

9:28 For more on Jesus' transfiguration, see note on Mk 9:2.

9:49-50 Jesus had earlier sent the disciples on a ministry tour with His authority and power to cast out demons (v. 1). That others who accepted His authority but were not part of His entourage were doing the same thing is historically plausible. (For a similar occurrence, cp. Ac 19:13.) Moreover, Lk 11:23 does not contradict Jesus' open attitude here. The question, then, is about the status of ministers not part of the inner circle and seems to be a question of rivalry. In 11:23 it is a question of one's assessment of Jesus, whether He is from God or not. In 9:49-50, not to oppose the work of the apostles was to join it. In 11:23, to refuse to come to a decision regarding Jesus was to reject Him.

9:51 The section from 9:51–19:44 is often referred to as the "travel narrative," since it roughly outlines the final journey of Jesus to Jerusalem. The portions in 10:38-42 and 17:11 seem to indicate that the narrative was only broadly chronological, and this may account for some of the variations with the settings in Mt, though it is also possible Jesus repeated these teachings on multiple occasions.

9:52 Though many of the residents of Sychar believed in Jesus (Jn 4:39), He was not universally accepted by the Samaritans.

9:57-62 Matthew 8:18-22 sets this episode in the Galilean ministry of Jesus. Both Matthew and Luke were ambiguous about the exact location where the event occurred, and both may have chosen the respective locations in the flow of the narrative for thematic reasons.

9:60-61 The burial of the dead, especially of one's close kin, was a sacred duty in first-century Judaism; it took precedence over virtually all other religious obligations. Jesus' response was intended to shock His audience. He was pressing the radical claims of the kingdom above even the most fundamental obligations of kinship. In effect He was saying response to God's call is the most fundamental obligation of all (8:21; 9:23; 14:26). Those unresponsive to the call ("the dead") may bury the dead. That the NT does not advocate the renunciation of all family ties by Christians is made clear by such passages as 1 Co 7:12-13, 1 Tm 5:8, and 1 Pt 3:1-2. Jesus' point was about people's priorities. He didn't set aside the commandment to honor father and mother (Mk 7:7-13). For more on Jesus' teaching concerning the relative priorities of God's kingdom and family, see note on Mk 3:31-35.

10:1 The instructions to the 72 are similar to those to the Twelve (9:3-5), especially in Matthew's version (Mt 10:5-42), prompting many scholars to see a repetition of the mission of the Twelve here. But the purposes of the two missions (besides the number sent) seem sufficiently different to see two different events. It is likely that Jesus gave similar instructions to the groups He sent out and the instructions were here conformed to the same shape. Furthermore, both sets were no doubt summaries of longer discourses by Jesus. Luke 9:51-56 implies that the sending of advance troops was a regular tactic of Jesus.

10:6 Peace, like grace (2:40) and power (8:46), is pictured here as having substantial reality. Jesus referred to a situation in which the Jewish greeting shalom was accepted by one disposed to the disciples, allowing them to board at his house. God would honor the blessing offered and give peace to the house. The rejected greeting would not be so honored.

10:10-11 In contrast to the immediate vengeance James and John sought to call down on Samaria (9:51-56), Jesus required a prophetic warning when leaving an inhospitable city.

10:18 Jesus was probably speaking metaphorically here. His point was that the ministry of the 72 was an assault on Satan's authority.

10:19 Though Paul escaped harm after the bite of a viper (Ac 28:3-6), Jesus was speaking hyperbolically. Snakes and scorpions stand for the power of Satan. And though Christians have been harmed by many things, Jesus promised that they are ultimately kept by the power of God (see Ps 91:13).

10:22 The similarity of this saying to the language and theology in Jn has led many scholars to reject its authenticity. But the saying has been shown to have an early Palestinian origin, and the conclusion that it goes back to Jesus seems assured, especially since everyone agrees that Jesus referred to God as His Father (2:49; see Mt 10:33; 11:27; 18:10). Thus we have confirmation here of the basic historicity of John's picture of Jesus, someone who understood Himself as uniquely related to God and as exclusively mediating a relationship with God.

10:25-28 This incident appears from the details to be different from that of Mt 22:34-40. Indeed, the dispute is so basic that it surely occurred more than once in Jesus' ministry. Note, however, that Jesus' commendation of love of God and neighbor as fulfilling the demands for life in the law is not meant to deny salvation by faith or the necessity of a relationship through Christ.

11:2-4 It is not clear whether the prayer here was originally included in Luke's sources as part of the sermon on the plain (see Mt 6:9-13) or whether Luke recorded a separate instance when Jesus taught His disciples to pray. If Luke moved the prayer, he apparently did so for thematic reasons. Set prayers were not uncommon in Judaism, and it is at least plausible that Jesus repeated this model prayer more than once.

11:10 Jesus said here that "everyone" who asks receives, yet experience does not seem to bear this out. Why?Jesus was not giving a magic formula for self-gratification. Jesus used absolute terms to emphasize His point: One is to pray while trusting in God's goodness and willingness to answer. This is particularly true when the object of prayer is spiritual (v. 13). Jesus had just taught the disciples to pray for God's will to be done. One should assume that the caveats of the prayer earlier in the chapter inform the interpretation of a statement like this just a few verses later. For more on the point of Jesus' hyperbolic language, see note on Mk 11:22-24.

11:23 To compare this with a saying that seems to be contrary to this, see note on 9:49-50.

11:29-30 For more on the place of signs in Jesus' ministry, see note on Mk 8:12.

11:34-36 Jesus made an analogy between receptivity to His ministry and the ability to see. Receptivity is like having healthy eyes; one can see well (light enters the body). The warning to ensure that the light in you is not darkness is paradoxical, not illogical. Jesus intended examination of the heart's spiritual receptivity.

11:40 This verse might seem to contradict Jesus' previous injunction against calling someone a fool (Mt 5:22). However, Jesus did not prohibit condemnation of foolishness per se (or anger at injustice). Rather, Jesus condemned meanness or self-centered spite.

11:47-48,50 Jesus asserted that the same spirit that caused the ancestors of the scribes to reject and murder God's prophets animated the scribes' rejection of Him. They demonstrated their collusion by building tombs for the prophets their ancestors murdered. The scribes, of course, would object that their monuments to the prophets implied the opposite.

11:51 For additional details on the identification of Zechariah, see note on Mt 23:35.

12:11 For Jesus' prophecy of the coming persecution, see note on 21:12-13.

12:20 More information on the use of "fool" is contained in note on 11:40.

12:22-34 Was Jesus recommending a passive and unthinking approach to life and the future? Absolutely not. He used dramatic rhetoric to highlight the inconsistency of claiming faith in God while remaining anxious about daily needs. Jesus' advice to sell one's possessions and give to the poor (v. 33) fits into this context. It is not an absolute command but an illustration of the kind of faith that trusts God more than worldly security. For more on worldly security, see note on Mk 10:21.

12:37 That Jesus used parables with slaves does not imply that He endorsed slavery. The parables drew on everyday facts of life in the Greco-Roman world and were not intended as social commentary. Jesus' teaching focused extensively on justice and human dignity, as noted in the Sermon on the Mount.

12:46-48 The punishment of "cutting in two" was not unheard of in the ancient world. To be assigned a place with the unbelievers could mean that the slave's corpse was left unburied, although this could also be a mixed metaphor—Jesus switching from the parable's picture to the significance of the picture. The scenes of dismemberment and beatings are intentionally harsh and do not need to be pressed too far with regard to God's character. Jesus used the most graphic images known to His audience to illustrate the dire consequences of being unprepared for the Day of the Lord.

12:49-53 In other passages, Jesus is said to bring peace (Is 9:6; Lk 2:14; Ac 10:36). There "peace" is applied to the restored relationship Jesus affords between God and man and to the ultimate peace He brings to creation when His messianic work is finished, after His second coming and millennial reign. In His first coming He brings division, since His call to the kingdom of God is heeded by some and rejected by others.

12:50 The parallel in Mk 10:38 is sufficiently distinct to attest to the historicity of this statement, that is, that Jesus predicted His own death. See note on Mk 10:45.

13:1,4 Though no outside sources confirm these incidents, there is no good reason to reject their historicity. Violence by rulers against the people was not an uncommon occurrence, and the historian Josephus told of several incidents of Pilate's bloody suppression of dissent. It is clear, however, this list is not exhaustive, since the Jewish philosopher Philo mentioned other events not recorded by Josephus. If our knowledge of political disasters is limited, it is even more so with construction disasters like the fall of the tower of Siloam.

13:6-8 For more on the image of the fig tree, see note on Mk 11:12-14.

13:11 Since no exorcism took place, the phrase "disabled by a spirit" used to describe the cause of the woman's condition may be idiomatic. That is, the condition was not caused by direct demonic influence but was a manifestation of satanic opposition to humanity in general (v. 16). See note on 9:1.

13:33 Jesus clearly understood Himself to be a prophet, but this self-understanding does not exclude a royal, messianic self-understanding as well, as the allusion to Ps 118:26 in verse 35 makes clear (Lk 19:29-40).

13:35 This is a prophecy of God forsaking Israel (see Jr 22:5-6). Jesus declared that Israel would remain rejected until it acknowledged Him as its Messiah. The triumphal entry (Lk 19:29-40) did not fulfill this requirement, as the note of rejection continued there (19:41-44; cp. Rm 11:11-32). Luke either moved the saying forward for narrative purposes (see Mt 23:39) or else Jesus made such a remark more than once.

14:13-14 Love for God is seen in love for others. Faith leading to salvation is manifested in love for God and neighbor (see Mt 25:31-46).

14:23 The idea here is not one of force or compulsion but of strong urging or convincing (see Gn 19:3), presumably because the invitees did not know the host.

14:24 It is important not to confuse the details of parables with the realities they represent. God is not petulant, but the outcome of refusing His invitation is nevertheless exclusion from the messianic banquet.

14:26 See notes on Mk 3:31-35 and Lk 9:60-61. Jesus' point is not that all who follow Him must sever all family relations (cp. 1 Tm 5:8) but rather that nothing, not even family, should be allowed to keep one from discipleship. The statement was intentionally shocking to drive the point home (see Mt 10:37).

14:28-32 Salvation is completely free, but it will cost your life.

14:33 For more on Jesus' teachings on possessions, see notes on 12:22-34 and Mk 10:21.

14:34-35 For more on Jesus' use of the image of salt, see note on Mk 9:50.

15:7 Jesus was not suggesting there actually are some needing no repentance. The religious leaders needed to repent, but they were far from recognizing it. Jesus saw their need with clarity, but they didn't (e.g., 11:39; 16:15). On the need of all to repent, see Rm 3:1-31.

15:25-30 The attitude of the older son is completely understandable. Indeed, the listener to the parable is supposed to feel the same sense of injustice that the older son feels, highlighting the distinction between our self-centeredness and God's grace. The point is that God is a gracious Father, and if one is truly to be His child, one should adopt His attitude toward repentance.

16:8-9 Jesus did not commend the manager's dishonesty but rather his foresight. The shrewdness of the manager is typical of the "sons of this age" toward their own kind, and Jesus' audience (and even the master in the parable) could, without condoning his activities, smile at how the fox got himself out of a jam. The manager used what resources he had to prepare for his inevitable demise. The point, then, is to ask, if the unrighteous know how to use money to win friends and secure a future, how much more ought the righteous to do so, albeit righteously, helping those in need, and with a view to God's reward? Verses 19-31 record a second parable illustrating this point.

16:17 For Jesus' high view of the law, see Mt 5:17-20.

16:19-24 The opening to this story ("There was a rich man") indicates that it is a parable (16:1), and thus the details of its picture of the afterlife should not be taken too literally. Certainly, however, Jesus taught life after death, including reward for the righteous and punishment for the wicked (Mt 8:11-12; 18:9).

16:25-26 For more on the pervasive theme of the great reversal, see notes on 1:51-54 and 6:20-23,24-26.

17:1-7 The sayings in this section have different settings in Mt and Mk and are somewhat differently expressed there, indicating that the version in Lk may have come from a unique source. Because of their proverbial character, they were probably used by Jesus numerous times in His ministry, and thus the tradition carried multiple versions of them. On faith, see note on Mk 11:22-24.

17:10 See note on 12:37. The focus is not on God's attitude toward our obedience (as an ungrateful taskmaster) or on the character of discipleship as a cold, thankless endeavor, but on the humble attitude of the disciple, who recognizes that he or she is unworthy of honor for merely fulfilling a duty.

17:11-19 The details indicate that this episode was different from that recorded in 5:12-16 (see Mk 1:40-45). Leprosy was common enough in Palestine, and its need for priestly testimony (Lv 13–14) unique enough, to account for two events in Jesus' ministry as similar as these.

17:11 Many accuse Luke of geographical ignorance here, since one does not pass between Samaria and Galilee on the way to Jerusalem. But Luke merely affirmed that Jesus was ministering in the border region of the two territories as He began His final trip to the religious capital, not that a route along the border takes one there.

17:20-21,24 By failing to recognize that the kingdom of God was present in the ministry of Jesus, the Pharisees wrongly looked for a future sign of its coming. He said in effect, "If you want to find the kingdom, you have to deal with Me now. You have gotten all the signs you need" (11:20). But He did not thereby deny a future "coming" of the kingdom with signs, as verse 24 makes clear. The manifestation of the kingdom began in the ministry of Jesus, continues in the work of the Spirit in the church, and will culminate in the return and subsequent world rule of Christ.

18:7-8 The vindication that God will bring for His saints is judgment of their enemies at the end times. It comes "swiftly," either in the sense that God justifies and condemns even before the judgment day (see Jn 3:18) or in the sense that time is relative in relation to eternity. Verse 8 seems to imply that a perceived delay on God's part may cause some to lose faith, indicating that the promise of immediate vindication probably depends on a relative sense of time. The NT gives only scant evidence that a "delay" in the second coming caused some concern for the early church (2 Pt 3:1-13). The provision of the Spirit and subsequent participation in the life of the risen Christ seems to have satisfied doubts and sustained hopes.

18:17 For additional explanation of the character of such faith, see note on Mk 10:15.

18:19 For more detail on this encounter, see note on Mk 10:18.

18:22-23 For elaboration of Jesus' call to radical obedience, see notes on 12:22-34 and Mk 10:21.

18:29-30 For further explanation of Jesus' promises to His followers, see note on Mk 10:29-30.

18:31-33 Jesus probably had in mind at least Is 52:13–53:12. Evidence that some first-century Jews understood this passage as a reference to the Messiah is disputed, but the links in Isaiah's "servant songs" to the Davidic messianism of Is 11 justify such a reading. Other passages possibly alluded to by Jesus include Ps 22 and 118:22, Is 50:4-9, and Dn 9:26. ("Prophets" could be used broadly to refer to any in the OT who prophesied.)

18:34 Though Jesus' original disciples were privileged insiders to Jesus' teaching and significance (Mk 4:11), only after the resurrection did they understood the full significance of His death (Jn 2:22). Such a concept did not easily fit their notions of the messianic victory (Mk 8:31-33).

18:35-43 Concerning the question of one or two blind men, see note on Mk 10:46-52.

19:9 Salvation didn't come to Zacchaeus because of his works. Rather, his encounter with Jesus and subsequent change of heart were exhibited by his actions (3:8). Although we are not told of his faith in Jesus as the Christ, presumably Zacchaeus's positive response to Jesus indicates as much. Though the crowd thought Zacchaeus had forfeited access to God's favor because of his greed, Jesus declared he was as much a child of Abraham as they were (see Rm 3:1-2; 9:4-5; 11:28).

19:11-27 This parable is different enough from Mt 25:14-30 so that most scholars think the Gospel writers had independent traditions of an original. But why the tradition would preserve the same story in such different forms is not clear, and it is more likely that Jesus told similar stories under different circumstances.

19:26 The parable is not intended to give insight into God's (or Christ's) character but to warn of unfruitful discipleship. Thus what appears as harsh or unfair in the story is applied in reality either to those who attach themselves to the church without actually being saved (see Mt 7:21-22; Lk 6:46) or to those who make a poor showing of their true discipleship (see 1 Co 3:14-15). Jesus' concern was for His followers to bear fruit for His kingdom.

19:27 The language sounds harsh to modern ears but fits the cultural setting of the story. The situation of those who reject the rule of Christ is dire (Ps 2:10-12; 1 Th 1:6-10; Rv 19:21) and the offer of forgiveness does not last forever.

19:29-40 On the question of the number of animals, see note on Mk 11:2-3.

19:38-40 There is nothing historically implausible about the triumphal entry. It is independently attested by all four Gospels and, with the cleansing of the temple, provides the best justification for Jesus' arrest and execution. Jesus' disciples and Galilean pilgrims familiar with His ministry and convinced of His messianic status would hail His entrance into Jerusalem as they thronged to the city for Passover, particularly if Jesus had now encouraged their acclamation after so long deflecting it in Galilee (see note on Mk 1:44).

19:42-44 Jesus prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem, an event that would occur at the hands of the Romans 40 years later. The vague language is typical of any siege (though it has precedents in the OT; e.g., Is 29:1-4), and this argues against a "prophecy after the fact." One would expect more detail from the actual destruction of the city if the latter were the case.

19:45 For a further discussion of the chronology of these events, see note on Mt 21:12-22.

20:8 For more on the question of Jesus' authority, see note on Mk 11:33.

20:9-18 For additional detail on the parable of the vineyard, see note on Mk 12:6.

20:36 See note on Mk 12:25. "Sons of God" is a way of referring to spiritual or heavenly beings. Angels are referred to in this manner in Jb 1:6.

20:44 For more on expectations of Messiah, see note on Mk 12:37.

21:4 While this verse has doubtless been used by unscrupulous persons to squeeze money out of others, Jesus commended the piety demonstrated by the widow's action. He was not recommending that everyone should demonstrate piety in exactly the same manner as this woman. See note on 12:22-34.

21:12-13 Some scholars think the early church invented this prophecy based on its experience of persecution. But, aside from the question of Jesus' ability to prophesy, it is not hard to imagine that Jesus could predict this based on His own experience of opposition and anticipated crucifixion. However, that He successfully prophesied not only these but also many other events (especially His own resurrection) argues strongly for real supernatural insight and for the future fulfillment of His remaining prophecies. See note on vv. 18-19.

21:14 Should persecuted Christians not prepare for their defense in court? Jesus' point is that they are not to rely on their own ingenuity but on the power of the Spirit.

21:18-19 Jesus prophesied that some of His followers will be killed but they will not be harmed. This seems contradictory. His promise was that though they may be put to death for His sake, ultimately they cannot be harmed (see 12:4-5 for an elaboration of Jesus' meaning).

21:20-28 Here Lk begins to differ most significantly from Mt and Mk. The Olivet discourse began with a question concerning the timing of Jesus' prediction of the destruction of the temple, though Mt 24:3 makes it clear that the disciples understood that event as part of the final events of the age. Jesus' response answered both questions—the timing of Jerusalem's fall and the timing of the end of the age—by using the one event to characterize the other. Luke placed the emphasis on the destruction of Jerusalem, while Matthew and Mark placed it on the end of the age. See note on Mk 13:30.

21:28,31-32 The references to "you," "this generation," and "these things" are interpreted in different ways. Matthew and Mark focused the remarks especially on the original audience and the question of the destruction of the temple. Here they seem to have referred both to the original audience, some of whom were alive at the destruction of Jerusalem, and to the generation of the end, who will witness the signs of the coming of the Son of Man. Presumably the latter generation is spoken of as the former because of the close link Jesus drew between the two events.

22:3 According to Jn 13:27, Satan entered Judas during the Last Supper. But Jn 13:2 notes that Satan had before this inspired Judas's betrayal of Jesus. Thus Satan "entered" Judas twice (see Jn 6:70).

22:7-8 For a discussion of the events related to the Passover celebration Jesus observed with His disciples, see note on Mk 14:12.

22:17,20 Some ancient manuscripts do not have verses 19b-20, and thus in Lk the order of the elements of the Last Supper are reversed, from bread-cup in Mt and Mk to cup-bread. However, because the manuscripts that support this reading come from the same text-type, and because a more viable explanation can be given for the scribal omission of the words than for their later insertion, many conclude that verses 19b-20 are original. Thus Lk mentioned two cups (vv. 17,20). The traditional Passover meal involved at least three (perhaps four) ceremonial drinks. The cup in verse 17 was probably the first of the series, given Jesus' introductory remarks. The cup in verse 20 was then probably the third cup, drunk at the conclusion of the meal.

22:19-20 For a discussion of the different versions of the words spoken as Jesus inaugurated the Lord's Supper, see note on Mk 14:22-24.

22:21-22 On Judas's betrayal of Jesus, see note on Mk 14:21.

22:24-30 John 13:2-17 confirms that Jesus addressed the topic of humility and mutual service at the Last Supper, raising the plausibility of this episode from Lk, especially Jesus' response to it in Lk 22:27. Mark 10:39-45 records a separate event and suggests that the dispute about greatness among the disciples was constantly simmering and surfaced again here as the obviously climactic events in Jesus' ministry were unfolding. This was a major theme of His teaching and makes probable it achieved an established form during his lifetime, accounting for the similar language of Mk 10:42-44 and Lk 22:25-26.

22:34 For the various accounts Peter's denial of Jesus, see note on Mk 14:27-31.

22:36 In contrast to His earlier instructions to depend on the kindness of others when preaching, Jesus now required His disciples to provide for themselves, including for their defense against enemies. He was in effect telling His disciples that their message would be met with hostility.

22:38 Jesus' directive to take a sword does not contradict His ethic of non-retaliation (6:29), since Jesus rebuked Peter for using the sword to defend Him from arrest (22:49-50; Mt 26:52; Jn 18:10-11). Most scholars thus understand this verse as figurative. "Enough of that!" is taken as a rebuke of His disciples for taking Him literally (see Dt 3:26; 1 Kg 19:4).

22:43-44 These verses are missing from many ancient manuscripts, probably indicating they were not originally a part of Lk. The text does not say Jesus sweat blood but that His sweat was like drops of blood, that is, He was sweating profusely, as if He had an open wound.

22:58 Although in Mt 26:71 and Mk 14:69 the second denial was initiated by a woman, Luke recorded Peter responding to a man. This is easy to explain. Perhaps the bystanders began to press Peter as a result of the woman's actions, and Peter could have been responding to one of them. While Mark said that the first woman who questioned Peter was also the one who identified him to the bystanders, Matthew said a second woman did so. The best solution is to assume that the women together stirred up the crowd and Peter responded both to the women and to the men in the group. The point remains the same, however, namely that Peter denied Jesus several times, as Jesus had predicted he would.

22:61 On the various accounts of the rooster crowing, see note on Mk 14:30,68,72.

22:66-71 This is a second, more official trial of Jesus before the Sanhedrin. The preliminary hearing is recorded in Mk 14:53-65 (Mt 26:57-68). See note on Mk 15:1. Jesus' statement did not imply that the council would see His second coming but rather would see Him sitting at the right hand of the Father when the Spirit would be poured out and the church would begin its inexorable expansion from Jerusalem.

23:3 Jesus admitted here that He was the Messiah, but His evasive answer qualified His admission. In effect He said, "I am who you say, but not in the way you think." That is, Jesus was not the political revolutionary that Pilate's question implied.

23:7-12 The historicity of the hearing before Antipas is questioned by many, but it is not clear why Luke would invent the story. (The theory that he wanted to produce the "fulfillment" of Ps 2 found in Ac 4:25-28 does not seem sufficient, especially since both Pilate and Herod found Jesus innocent.) The historical plausibility of a Roman governor seeking the assistance of a Herod in determining questions of Judaism is confirmed by Ac 25:13–26:32. Though the mocking Jesus received in Herod's court was similar to that rendered by Pilate's soldiers in Mk 15:16-20, the version in Lk is different enough to conclude he did not construct the former event from the latter. That is, Luke had a source for this material, perhaps Manaen, foster brother of Antipas (Ac 13:1).

23:12 Sometime early in his career as governor of Judea, Pilate had been opposed before the Emperor Tiberius by a letter from a delegation of Jews that included Herod Antipas. They objected to Pilate's placing of honorific shields in Jerusalem, and Tiberius angrily commanded Pilate to remove them. Pilate's fortunes with the emperor were further damaged when his patron, the anti-Semite Sejanus, was deposed by Tiberius in A.D. 31. Pilate's action in including Antipas in the trial of Jesus may have been intended as an olive branch. But this requires a date of A.D. 33 for the crucifixion, not nearly as likely as A.D. 30.

23:27-31 Many think Jesus would not have stopped to utter these words and that Luke created them. But Luke had already reported Jesus' prophecies of Jerusalem's destruction, so including another here seems to serve no theological or narrative purpose. This, taken with the Semitic elements of Jesus' words, argues that they predate Luke and are likely to be historical.

23:30 Although the phrases "fall on us" and "cover us" come from Hs 10:8, Jesus was not citing the passage directly nor claiming that the future action of the women (and others in Jerusalem) fulfilled Hosea's prophecy in any strict sense. He borrowed the language of terror in the face of judgment from the book of Hs to highlight what the Jerusalemites were to expect in the destruction of the city.

23:34 It is unclear whether the prayer was originally part of Lk. The oldest manuscripts omit it. This prayer seems to be at odds with Jesus' warning to the women of Jerusalem (v. 30). This implies at the least that one or the other was not originally a part of Lk. If both sayings go back to Jesus, then Jesus was not asking that the consequences for His rejection be prevented but that the individual guilt of those involved in His mockery and death be forgiven.

23:36-37 For a discussion of what Jesus was offered as He died, see note on Mk 15:36.

23:39-40 Both Mt 27:44 and Mk 15:32 state that the criminals crucified with Jesus mocked Him. Only Luke tells us of one's repentance. Over the course of a crucifixion that lasted for several hours, the second criminal apparently became impressed with Jesus' demeanor and speech and changed his view of Him.

23:43 This promise does not contradict Jn 20:17. Upon His death, Jesus' spirit went to "paradise," which may mean heaven (2 Co 12:2-4; Rv 2:7) or the place of the righteous dead (called "Abraham's side" in Lk 16:22). Jesus' body remained in the grave until His resurrection, and it was the attempt to hold on to Jesus' physical presence that Jesus admonished in Jn.

23:44-45 Luke was not asserting that a solar eclipse took place (a physical impossibility at Passover, which occurs during a full moon). The word he used (Gk ekleipo) merely means the sun was obscured. The physical cause of the darkness may have been thick clouds or a sandstorm, but the Gospel writers were interested in the phenomenon not for its physical but for its theological meaning. Similarly, darkness does not cover the entire "world" but the "whole land," that is, of Judea or of the region of Jerusalem (Gk ge can mean "earth" or "land").

23:46 The final words of Jesus are recorded differently in the Gospels. The saying recorded at Mk 15:34 and Mt 27:46 ("My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?") is certainly historical, since the early church would not invent such a saying for Jesus (cp. note on Mt 27:46). The saying recorded by Lk ("Father, into Your hands I entrust My spirit") should also be taken as historical, since it finds echoes in Mt 27:50 and Jn 19:30. John's record of the words, "It is finished!" seems to precede this statement. Thus Jesus apparently first gave the cry of dereliction. Later, immediately before dying, He cried aloud, "It is finished!" and committed His spirit to God.

23:47 Luke recorded the centurion's words differently than Matthew and Mark, both of whom had him declare Jesus to be "God's Son." The centurion may have said both things. More likely, Luke was summarizing the centurion's point, since the term he used (Gk dikaios, "righteous, innocent") occurs frequently in Luke's writings, and the motif of Jesus as an innocent sufferer is common in Lk and Ac. Historically, though the centurion may have used Son of God language, it probably expressed his conviction that Jesus truly was a King and thus innocent of the charges upon which He was crucified, see Mk 15:39.

24:1 For some of the chronological issues of the resurrection accounts, see notes on Mk 16:1 and 16:2.

24:4 For a discussion of the number of angels at the tomb, see note on Mk 16:5-7.

24:12 While Jn 20:2-4 notes that Peter and "the other disciple, the one Jesus loved" (John) both went to the tomb to confirm the women's story, Lk mentions only Peter. But in Ac, Luke often focused on Peter, even when he related that others (significantly John) were present (e.g., Lk 9:32; 12:41; 18:28; Ac 2:14; 3:4-6). Verse 24 explicitly notes that others beside Peter witnessed the empty tomb. Thus the mention of Peter here was probably not intended to exclude the possibility of companions. Peter presumably went "home" to his lodging in Jerusalem or Bethany.

24:13-35 Though Luke told this story in his characteristic style and emphasized themes important to him, several factors argue that the story itself is historical and that he received it from an earlier source. (1) It presents the first resurrection appearance as happening to two otherwise unknown, non-apostolic Christians, but(2) it names one of them. (3) The appearance was less than spectacular or immediately convincing, and the travelers were hardly anticipating it—both facts difficult to reconcile with a theory of purposeful invention (see note on Mt 28:17). (4) The wealth of detail (such as the location of Emmaus) is not consistent with a story invented to prove the resurrection but is in keeping with an eyewitness account (Lk 1:2).

24:16 It is not clear why the travelers could not recognize Jesus (see Jn 20:14-15; 21:4), but the text suggests they were prevented from recognizing Him.

24:19,21 The characterization of Jesus as a prophet was common during Jesus' ministry (see notes on 7:16; 13:33), and that assessment would not have been overthrown by His death. These men had hoped He was more than a prophet (1:68-79), but their hopes ended with His crucifixion.

24:27 "In all the Scriptures" does not mean that every verse of the OT is a prophecy about the Christ but that the entire scope of Scripture prophesies about Him. Some passages are directly prophetic, others are typological; but the whole thing is "messianic." The OT says little about a Messiah per se, but read progressively, it has much to say about God's plan to reconcile humanity to Himself and establish His rule over the earth. And it refers frequently to various "messianic" characters, both divine and human, who play a role in this plan. Jesus explained them as culminating in Himself.

24:36-43 The Gospels record several resurrection appearances that are at once similar and difficult to reconcile with one another. Matthew's account seems the most summarized, whereas the accounts in Lk and Jn are the most detailed (they appear to use a common source for some of their material). Any relative discrepancies can be accounted for by the different focuses and the necessary summarizing tendencies of all the Gospel writers.

It is clear from a comparison that the following occurred: (1) A group of women that included Mary Magdalene discovered the empty tomb early Sunday morning (Mt 28:1-7; Mk 16:1-7; Lk 24:1-9; Jn 20:1). (2) The women reported the discovery to the otherdisciples, particularly Peter and John (Lk 24:10-11; Jn 20:2). (3) Jesus appeared to the women sometime after the report to the disciples (Mt 28:8-10; Jn 20:11-18).(4) Peter and John investigated the empty tomb for themselves (Lk 24:12; Jn 20:3-10). (5) Jesus appeared to the group of disciples later that evening (Lk 24:36-43; Jn 20:19-23). Luke added the episode on the road to Emmaus, while John added the appearance to Thomas eight days after the resurrection. Matthew and John then both reported encounters with Jesus in Galilee, the one on a mountain and the other at the Sea of Galilee, both of which must have taken place sometime later. On the relation of Lk 24:44-53 to Mt 28:16-20, see note on Lk 24:44-53.

24:39 Jesus stressed that His body was physical ("flesh and bones") and the same body as that placed in the tomb ("Look at My hands and My feet"). Nevertheless, it was a body that could materialize and dematerialize (in some sense) at will, since He just appeared in their midst. On the nature of the resurrection body, see1 Co 15:35-57.

24:44-53 According to Ac 1:3-11, the ascension of Jesus (Lk 24:50-53) concluded 40 days of resurrection appearances, any number of which included instruction to the apostles, and Mt 28:16-20 presents at least some of that instruction in Galilee (see note on Mt 28:16-20). Thus Lk 24:44-49 may be a summary of that period of teaching, up to and including that presented immediately prior to the ascension (note the lack of time indicators; cp. 24:47-49; Ac 1:4-8).

24:46 See note on verse 27.

24:50-53 That the ascension was recorded only by Luke has led many scholars to doubt its historicity. But whereas the resurrection is sufficient to conclude the other Gospels, Luke's narrative continues in the book of Ac, as he recorded the early history of the Spirit-empowered church. The other Gospel writers had less incentive to narrate the ascension than did Luke, for whom it formed the presupposition to the pouring out of the Spirit. The ascension is taken for granted elsewhere in the NT (Jn 20:17; 1 Co 15:25; Eph 4:8-10; 1 Tm 3:16; 1 Pt 3:22; Heb 4:14).

John Articles

Aren't the Gospels the Product of Greek Thinking?

by Ronald H.Nash

For more than a century, liberal critics of the Christian faith have been claiming that early Christianity was heavily influenced by Platonism, Stoicism, pagan mystery religions, or other movements in the world at that time. A series of scholarly books and articles had refuted most of these claims by the 1940s. But new generations of liberal scholars have revived many of these older discredited positions.

The favorite target among the four Gospels has been the Gospel of John. John 1:1-18 was supposedly influenced by a Jewish philosopher named Philo who lived in Alexandria, Egypt. Rudolf Bultmann made a career of claiming that parts of John's Gospel were influenced by Gnosticism and/or various mystery religions. Such influences allegedly extended to the Apostle Paul as well.

All Christians should ask the following questions of all claims about any alleged dependence of early Christianity upon pagan sources:

(1) What is the evidence for such claims?

(2) What are the dates for the evidence? An embarrassingly high percentage of the alleged evidence turns out to be dated long after the writing of the NT.

(3) Are the alleged parallels really similar, or are the likenesses a result of exaggeration, oversimplification, inattention to detail, or the use of Christian language in the description?

(4) Is the alleged parallel between the NT and a supposed pagan source the sort of thing that could have arisen independently in several different movements?

(5) Is the claim of influence or dependence consistent with the historical information we have about the first-century church?

Can the Gospel Be Presented Across Cultures?

by John Mark Terry

Evangelical Christians respond to this question with a resounding yes. The Bible includes many passages about cross-cultural evangelism. In the Great Commission (Mt 28:18-20), Jesus commanded His disciples to evangelize all the nations of the world. The word translated "nations" is the Greek word ethne, which is the root word for the English word ethnic. Thus Jesus instructed the apostles to make disciples of all the ethnic groups of the world. At His ascension (Ac 1), Jesus reiterated the command, instructing the apostles to witness even to the "ends of the earth" (Ac 1:8). Clearly the Bible reveals God's concern for all the cultures of the world.

Jesus Himself is the supreme example of cross-cultural ministry. Jesus left heaven to minister on earth. He was the first incarnational missionary as God in the flesh. In a similar way, Christians today should live the gospel among the cultures of the world. Jesus also demonstrated His concern for reaching other cultures by witnessing to the Samaritans, an ethnic group despised by the Jews of His day (Jn 4).

Peter, the leader of the early church, offers another example of cross-cultural ministry. Like most Jews of his day, he avoided contact with Gentiles. But through a vision God showed Peter the error of his prejudice, and Peter traveled to Caesarea to witness and stay in the home of Cornelius, a Roman army officer (Ac 10).

Paul provides a third example of cross-cultural witness. Though he had been raised to segregate himself from Gentiles, Paul met the Lord Jesus on the road to Damascus, and Christ called him to be a missionary to the Gentiles (Ac 9:15). Paul devoted the rest of his life to planting churches among Gentiles.

So the Bible clearly says that, yes, the gospel can be presented across cultural boundaries. Any doubt to the contrary is based upon the false contemporary assumption that at least some vital worldview beliefs (such as the gospel) are incommunicable to other cultures. This philosophical assumption has been shown to be false historically. In A History of Christian Missions, Bishop Stephen Neill wrote: "Christianity long has succeeded in making itself a universal religion." Bishop Neill said this doesn't mean that everyone has become a Christian, but Christians can be found in almost every country of the world—among "the most sophisticated of westerners to the aborigines of the inhospitable deserts of Australia."

Are Jesus' Claims Unique Among the Religions of the World?

by Gary R. Habermas

Have all major religious teachers proclaimed approximately the same message? For example, have many of the religious teachers taught that they were God, as Jesus did?

It may surprise many to learn that we have no reliable historical data that any of the founders of the world's major religions—apart from Jesus—ever claimed to be God. No early writings attest such a claim on behalf of these persons. For example, Chinese teachers Confucius and Lao-tzu exerted moral, social, and cultural influences on their students but were not theologians. Many of their wise sayings are reminiscent of the Hebrew book of Proverbs. Strangely, Buddha may have been an atheist who did not believe in any kind of divinity!

The Muslim holy book, the Qur'an, definitely does not elevate Muhammad to the place of Allah (God). While we are told that Muhammad is Allah's chief prophet, there is no attempt to make Muhammad deity. To the contrary, Allah has no partners (Surahs 4:171; 5:72, 116).

The OT places no leader or prophet on God's level. Rather, we are told that God will not share His glory with anyone else (Is 48:11). So Abraham, David, and Isaiah are not candidates for godhood.

Perhaps the Hindu figure Krishna comes closest to being understood as God. While he is referred to in the lofty terms of deity in the Hindu sacred writings, the Bhagavad-Gita (e.g., 4:13; 9:18-20,23), scholars are not sure whether Krishna ever really lived or, if he did, what century he lived in. Moreover, these writings do not claim to be historical treatises of any actual teachings and are thought to have been written hundreds of years after Krishna may have lived. Thus tracking any possibility of original claims is fruitless.

Further, being God in the usual Hindu sense would be quite distinct from the Judeo-Christian tradition. In the latter, God is by nature totally apart from His creation; humans do not reach godhood. In the Bhagavad-Gita, however, the process of enlightenment can be attained by those who return to the Godhead and achieve their own divinity (see 18:46-68). In a certain sense, all persons have divine natures.

On the contrary, Jesus claimed dual titles of divinity. Particularly, He said He was both the Son of God (Mt 11:27) and the Son of Man (Mk 2:10-11). He spoke of His Father in familiar ways (Mk 13:36) and even claimed to forgive sins, for which He was charged with blasphemy (Mk 2:5-7).

In perhaps the clearest indication of His claims about Himself, when the high priest asked Jesus if He was the Christ, the Son of God, Jesus plainly declared that He was. Then He further asserted that He was also the Son of Man who would co-reign on God's throne and come on the clouds in judgment. The high priest pronounced these claims blasphemy (Mk 14:61-64).

These sayings of Jesus were recorded in documents that were written just decades after the events, and there are strong reasons to hold that all were composed by authors who were close to the occurrences. Moreover, many of the individual passages exhibit earmarks of historicity. Last, very early creedal texts (e.g., Ac 2:36; Rm 1:3-4; 10:9) also apply titles of deity to Jesus Christ.

Many religious teachers have claimed to present God's way. But Jesus declared not only that He was initiating God's path of salvation (Mk 1:15-20) but also that what His hearers did specifically with Him determined their eternal destiny (Mt 10:37-40; 19:23-30). Further, of these religious founders, only Jesus taught that His death would serve as a payment for human sin, achieving what we could not (Mk 10:45; 14:22-25).

Additionally, only Jesus has miracles reported of Him by early sources. Most importantly, according to the Gospels, Jesus taught that His resurrection from the dead would be the sign that evidenced the truth of His message (Mt 12:38-42; 16:1-4; Mk 14:28). For NT writers, Jesus' resurrection proved His claims were true (Rm 1:3-4; 1 Pt 1:3-6). After all, dead men do not do much! So if Jesus was raised, God must have performed the event in order to approve Jesus' message (Ac 2:22-24; 17:30-31).

Is There Evidence for Life After Death?

by Hank Hanegraaff

Philosophical naturalists (including most evolutionists) believe that death is the cessation of being. In their view, humans are merely bodies and brains. Though they reject metaphysical realities such as the soul, there are convincing reasons to believe that humans have an immaterial aspect to their being that transcends the material and thus can continue to exist after death.

From a legal perspective, if human beings were merely material, they could not be held accountable this year for a crime committed last year, because physical identity changes over time. We are not the same people today that we were yesterday. Every day we lose millions of microscopic particles. In fact, every seven years or so, virtually every part of our material anatomy changes, apart from aspects of our neurological system. Therefore, from a purely material perspective, the person who previously committed a crime is presently not the same person. Yet a criminal who attempts to use this line of reasoning as a defense would not get very far. Such legal maneuvering simply does not fly even in an age of scientific enlightenment. Legally and intuitively, we recognize a sameness of soul that establishes personal identity over time.

Finally, freedom of the will presupposes that we are more than material robots. If I am merely material, my choices are a function of such factors as genetic makeup and brain chemistry. Therefore, my decisions are not free; they are fatalistically determined. The implications of such a notion are profound. In a worldview that embraces fatalistic determinism, I cannot be held morally accountable for my actions, since reward and punishment make sense only if we have freedom of the will. In a solely material world, reason itself is reduced to the status of a conditioned reflex. Moreover, the very concept of love is rendered meaningless. Rather than being an act of the will, love is relegated to a robotic procedure that is fatalistically determined by physical processes.

While the legal and freedom arguments are convincing in and of themselves, there is an even more powerful and persuasive argument demonstrating the reality of life beyond the grave. That argument flows from the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The best minds of ancient and modern times have demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt that Christ's physical trauma was fatal; that the empty tomb is one of the best-attested facts of ancient history; that Christ's followers experienced on several occasions tangible post-resurrection appearances of Christ; and that within weeks of the resurrection, not just one, but an entire community of at least 3,000 Jews experienced such an incredible transformation that they willingly gave up sociological and theological traditions that had given them their national identity.

Through the resurrection, Christ not only demonstrated that He does not stand in a line of peers with Abraham, Buddha, or Confucius but also provided compelling evidence for life after death.

More Evidence for Life After Death

by J. P. Moreland

The case for life after death consists in empirical (observable) and nonempirical (theoretical) arguments. The empirical arguments are two: near-death experiences (NDEs) and the resurrection of Jesus. A sufficient body of evidence exists for the view that people have died, left their bodies, had various experiences, and returned to their bodies. Attempts to explain NDEs as natural phenomena fail in those cases where the disembodied person gained knowledge about things miles away (e.g., conversations of family members). One must be cautious about theological interpretations of NDEs, but their reality is well established. Some argue that, even if true, NDEs provide evidence only for temporary existence beyond death. Strictly speaking, this is correct. However, if biological death does not bring the cessation of consciousness, it is hard to see what could do so after death.

Jesus' resurrection is defended in other articles in this Bible. Suffice it to say here that if Jesus rose from the dead, this qualifies Him to speak about life after death because His resurrection provides evidence that He was the Son of God and means that He returned from the afterlife and told us about it.

The nonempirical arguments divide into theistic-dependent and theistic-independent ones. The former assume the existence of God and from that fact argue for immortality. If God is who He says He is, the case is proven beyond reasonable doubt. Three such theistic-dependent arguments are especially important.

The first is two-pronged and argues from the image and love of God. Given that humans have tremendous value as image bearers and God is a preserver of tremendously high value, then God is a preserver of persons. Moreover, given that God loves His image bearers and has a project of bringing them to full maturity and fellowship with Him, God will sustain humans to continue this love affair and His important project on their behalf.

The second argument, based on divine justice, asserts that in this life goods and evils are not evenly distributed. A just God must balance the scales in another life, and an afterlife is thus required.

Finally, there is the argument from biblical revelation. It can be established that the Bible is the truthful Word of God, and it affirms life after death. For this to be an argument, rational considerations must be marshaled on behalf of the Bible's divine status.

Two nontheistic dependent arguments exist for immortality. The first is a three-part argument from desire: (1) The desire for life after death is a natural desire.
(2) Every natural desire corresponds to some real state of affairs that can fulfill it. (3) Therefore, the desire for life after death corresponds to some real state of affairs—namely life after death—that fulfills it.

Critics claim that the desire for immortality is nothing but an expression of ethical egoism. People do not universally desire it, and even when they do, it is a learned, not a natural, desire. Further, even if it is a natural desire, sometimes such desires are frustrated. Thus the desire argument is not necessarily a strong argument, but nonetheless it does have some merit.

The second argument claims that consciousness and the self are immaterial, not physical, and this supports belief in life after death in two ways: (1) It makes disembodied existence and personal identity in the afterlife intelligible. (2) It provides evidence for the existence of God. This, in turn, provides grounds for reintroducing the theistic-dependent arguments for life after death.

The argument for consciousness being nonphysical involves the claim that once one gets an accurate description of consciousness—sensations, emotions, thoughts, beliefs—it becomes clear that it is not physical. Conscious states are characterized by their inner, private, qualitative feel made known by introspection. Since physical states lack these features, consciousness is not physical.

The case for an immaterial self is rooted in the claim that in first-person introspection we are aware of our own egos as immaterial centers of consciousness. This awareness grounds intuitions that when one has an arm cut off, has a portion of one's brain removed, or gains or loses memories and personality traits, one does not become a partial person or a different person altogether.

While these two arguments provide some grounds for belief in an afterlife, they are far from conclusive. At the end of the day, the justification of belief in life after death is largely theistic dependent.

How Does the Bible Relate to Islam?

by Barbara B. Pemberton

Islam teaches that throughout history God has sent prophets, from Adam to Noah to Jesus and ultimately Muhammad, all with the same message: There is only one God, who desires people to pursue good and to prevent evil. Christians and Jews, "People of the Book," are believed to be the remaining followers of earlier divine, but corrupted, revelations. Islam's scripture, the Qur'an, is understood by Muslims to have restored God's original guidance. The Qur'an includes numerous biblical personalities but recognizes as authentic only three sections of biblical literature: the Torah of Moses, the Evangel of Jesus, and the Psalms of David.

Muslims see many of their beliefs and practices as biblical: the existence of only one God, the prophets, heaven, hell, angels, and a day of judgment. They also see the importance of charity, prayer, and fasting in the Bible. Although Muslims believe that Jesus was only a prophet and not divine, they do believe the accounts of His virgin birth, sinless nature, miracles, and second coming.

The Qur'an accuses Jews and Christians of distorting their earlier revelation by deliberately suppressing the truth or by false interpretation. Muslims charge that the OT and NT contain logical inconsistencies, improbabilities, and factual errors. Charges against the OT include false reports of immorality (David and Bathsheba), missing doctrines (afterlife in the Torah), and incompatibility with science. The Evangel has been corrupted with inaccurate historical references, discrepancies in the Gospel accounts, and fabrications (such as the crucifixion). Christians and Jews allegedly suppressed or removed biblical predictions of Muhammad. For example, Psalm 84:4-6 is said to be about Muhammad, who overcame his childhood disadvantages by God's grace. Jesus supposedly predicted the coming Prophet Muhammad when He spoke of the "Counselor" in John 14.

Islam rejects the concept of human participation in the process of revelation that shows in the varieties of biblical books (Gospels, Letters, etc.). Jesus' original message is deemed lost. Muslims believe that Gospel authors, writing long after Jesus, altered the message to promote their own points of view. Paul's letters are supposed to promote a "mystical" Christ and "false" doctrines such as the resurrection. Another Muslim argument against biblical reliability is the lack of a record that the original texts passed from one generation to the next.

Muslims are, of course, correct that the Bible is older than the Qur'an. But there is not a shred of evidence the Bible has been corrupted. Indeed, the transmission of its text is by far the most accurate of any from the ancient world (see "Has the Bible Been Accurately Copied Down Through the Centuries?" p. 468). The Bible is not compromised by God using human personalities in its writing any more than when He uses human personality in the spoken word of prophets. Moreover, powerful evidence supports, among other things, the historicity of Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection (see "Did Jesus Really Rise from the Dead?" p. 1728). Prayerful Christians can help to correct Muslim misconceptions about the Bible (e.g., by showing that the Bible does not sanction the sinfulness of Western culture). Indeed, Christ's followers should befriend Muslims so the Holy Spirit can bring conviction to their hearts through the powerful Word of God (Heb 4:12).

Can Something Be True for You and Not for Me?

by Paul Copan

I"t's all relative." "That's true for you but not for me." "That's just your reality." "Who are you to impose your values on others?" The relativist believes truth functions more like opinion or perspective and that truth depends upon your culture, context, or even personal choices. Thus evil actions by Nazis or terrorists are explained away ("We don't like it, but they have their reasons"). Relativism, however, is seriously flawed.

Relativism cannot escape proclaiming a truth that corresponds to reality. "The moon is made of cheese" is false because it does not match up with the way things are, with what is the case. As Christians, we claim the biblical story is true because it conforms to the actualities of God's existence and His dealings with human beings. Truth is a relationship—a match-up with what is real or actual. An idea is false when it does not. But what of those making such claims as "Reality is like a wet lump of clay—we can shape it any way we want" (a relativistic idea known as antirealism)? We can rightly call such statements into question. After all, these persons believe that their view corresponds to the way things are. If you disagree with them, they believe you are wrong. Notice, too, that they believe there is at least one thing that is not subject to human manipulation—namely, the unshakable reality that reality is like a wet lump of clay that we can shape any way we want to! So we can ask: "Is that lump-of-clay idea something you made up?" If it applies to everyone, then the statement is incoherent. If it doesn't, then it's nothing more than one's perspective. Why take it seriously? And if there's no objective truth or reality, how do we know that our beliefs are not delusional?

Relativism is self-contradictory. If someone claims to be a relativist, don't believe it. A relativist will say that your belief is true for you but his is true for him; there is no objective truth that applies to all people. The only problem is that this statement itself is an objective truth that applies to all people! (Even when he says, "That's true for you but not for me," he believes his view applies to more than just one person!) To show the self-contradictory nature of relativism, we can simply preface relativistic assertions this way: "It's objectively true that 'That's true for you but not for me' " or "It's true that 'There is no truth.' " The bold contradiction becomes apparent. Or what of the line that sincere belief makes something (Buddhism, Marxism, Christianity) true? We must ask, is this principle universal and absolute? Is it true even if I don't sincerely believe it? That is, what if I sincerely believe that sincere belief does not make something real? Both views obviously cannot be true.

The basis and conclusion of relativism are objectively true. Ask the relativist why she takes this view. She'll probably say, "So many people believe so many different things." The problem here is that she believes this to be universally true and beyond dispute. Furthermore, she believes that the logical conclusion to draw from the vast array of beliefs is that relativism must be the case. The relativist doesn't believe that all these different beliefs are a matter of personal preference. The basis for relativism (the variety of beliefs), and the conclusion that relativism obviously follows from it, turn out to be logical and objectively true—for all people, not just the relativist!

Relativism will always be selective. People usually aren't relativists about the law of gravity, drug prescription labels, or the stock index. They're usually relativists when it comes to God's existence, sexual morality, or cheating on exams. But try cutting in line in front of a relativist, helping yourself to his property, or taking a sledgehammer to his car—and you will find out that he believes his rights have been violated! Rights and relativism don't mix. But if "it's all relative," why get mad at anyone?

Relativism is usually motivated by a personal agenda—the drive for self-control. Atheist philosopher John Searle uncovers what's behind relativism: "It satisfies a basic urge to power. It just seems too disgusting, somehow, that we should have to be at the mercy of the 'real world.' " We want to be in charge. Now, pointing out one's motivation is not an argument against relativism; still, it's a noteworthy consideration. Truth often takes a backseat to freedom. But clearly, when a person shrugs off arguments for the inescapability of objective truth with "Whatever," he has another agenda in mind. Relativism makes no personal demands upon us—to love God, to be people of integrity, to help improve society. Even if relativism is false, it is convenient.

How Should a Christian Deal with Doubt?

by Gary R. Habermas

Doubt might be defined as uncertainty regarding God or our relation to Him. Questions arise in many forms, including factual or philosophical issues, assurance, suffering, or unanswered prayer.

Doubt may be divided into three general areas. Factual doubt usually raises issues regarding the truth of Christianity. Emotional doubt chiefly concerns our moods and feelings, often posing questions pertaining to assurance of salvation. Volitional doubt is a category that ranges from weak faith to a lack of motivation to follow the Lord.

Few subjects are characterized by more misunderstandings than this one. Contrary to popular opinion, doubt is not always sin. Neither is it necessarily the opposite of faith nor the product of weak faith. It is experienced by many believers in Scripture, such as Abraham, Job, David, Jeremiah, and John the Baptist. And almost all believers, as well as unbelievers, experience doubt at times. As strange as it seems, doubt can produce positive results, and many doubters are very much in love with the Lord.

The answer to factual doubt is the facts. In other words, questions concerning God, Jesus, the Bible, or the resurrection are answered by the data. No other religion can claim the kind of foundation upon which Christianity is based. A frequent mistake made by factual doubters is to confuse disputed areas among Christians (e.g., sovereignty versus free will, the age of the earth, the sign gifts, or eternal security) with the core truths: the deity of Jesus Christ, His death and resurrection. A remedy for this kind of doubt is to start with these basics: "If you confess with your mouth, 'Jesus is Lord,' and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved" (Rm 10:9). When we believe these basics, our understanding and appropriation of other doctrines will follow.

Emotional doubt is the most common as well as the most painful variety. Frequently, these doubters repeatedly wonder whether they are saved, while exhibiting signs of their obvious love for the Lord. They often tell themselves that what they most desire is just beyond their grasp—hence their pain. Here the chief issue is not what is being said but the distraught moods in the background. The remedy is to treat the latter.

Many passages in Scripture command us to address our unruly emotions (see Ps 37:7-8; 39:2; 42:5-6,11; 55:4-8,16-17,22; 56:3-4; 94:19). Often we must move from our perspective to God's and replace our uncertain feelings with trust in Him.

For instance, in Philippians 4:6-9, Paul tells us to replace our anxieties with prayer and thanksgiving. The apostle promises peace for those who do so (vv. 6-7). Then he commands us to explicitly change our worrisome thoughts to God's truth (v. 8) and to model ourselves after his pattern, again promising the result of peace (v. 9).

The key is to change how we think and behave. Simply diverting attention from our worries can provide temporary relief. The best response, every single time a doubt arises, is to weed out and correct the improper thought by concentrating on God's truth rather than on our shaky beliefs.

Volitional doubt covers a wide range of uncertainty. The more extreme versions are often characterized by formerly committed believers who now seem not to care anymore. Perhaps they even appear to live no differently from unbelievers. This is probably the most dangerous species of doubt, since the individual may be in danger of turning from the Lord. But how do we motivate someone who does not wish to be energized? Friends and loved ones must get involved.

Any biblical means of stirring the dying embers may be helpful here. In Scripture, probably the most frequently prescribed methods are being convicted of sin (Heb 3:12-13) or being challenged by the truth of heaven. Everyone experiences the lure of living forever (Ec 3:11). Believers more specifically seek heaven (Heb 11:16,35; 13:14). Dozens of times we are challenged to pursue our eternal home, applying its truth deeply to our lives (Mt 6:33). After all, what we do for the Lord after salvation helps determine and shape our capacity for enjoying eternity (Mt 6:19-21; Mk 9:41).

Perhaps the key is to assist the volitional doubter in charging his spiritual batteries. What could be worse than failing the God of the universe and falling short of His kingdom? Conversely, what could be better than living with Him and our believing friends and loved ones for a truly blessed eternity? We need to drive these truths home to those who waver, by the power of the Holy Spirit (Jms 5:19-20; Jd 20-23).

Doubt can sometimes be a positive incentive to change and grow. But other times, intervention is necessary. Members of the body of Christ need to be alert and sensitive, helping each other focus on the Lord and His kingdom.

Introduction to John

AUTHOR

Despite doubts from various quarters, a good case can be made that the fourth Gospel was written by John, the "one Jesus loved" (as he referred to himself throughout his book), brother of James and son of Zebedee, just as early church tradition suggests. That same tradition places John in and around Ephesus, ministering to the churches of Asia Minor, until his death as an elderly man at roughly the end of the first century. The author would thus have been an eyewitness of much of the material he recounted and in a position to provide accurate information. The Gospel appears to be the first of five books he wrote in the A.D. 90s, the next ones being the three NT letters that bear his name and the book of Revelation.

It is possible that John relied on earlier written sources for some of the information in his Gospel, especially for the miracles of Jesus, where a different style and vocabulary at times intrude. In particular, it is possible that he knew one or more of the first three (Synoptic) Gospels. John's Gospel seems to be literarily independent of them, however. More likely he was aware of their contents more from oral tradition and an active preaching ministry and wanted to supplement them by focusing on different information in his account.

Without question, John's writing style, like his selection of content and themes, differs noticeably from that of the Synoptics. As was perfectly acceptable in his day, he would have written his account of what others said in his own distinctive style, being faithful to their meaning if not to their exact wording. His sense of being led by the Holy Spirit (14:26; 15:26; 16:13) would have given him the freedom to couch things in his own words, believing he was being faithful to history at the same time.

THEMES

A list of themes that receive distinctive emphasis in John, as compared with the Synoptics, includes a strong belief in the full deity of Jesus as well as His full humanity, an emphasis on the availability of eternal life to all who believe in Jesus (beginning already in this life), miracles as signs meant to elicit faith in Christ, the beginnings of Trinitarian thought, the unity of disciples, the election and security of the believer, the death of Christ as exaltation and glorification, the Holy Spirit as Comforter (Counselor, Advocate), a playing down of the role of John the Baptist and of the baptism and the Lord's Supper and a strong polemic against unbelieving Judaism.

Many of these themes can be explained by the situation in which John's churches found themselves. The minority of believers from Jewish backgrounds by this time were largely ostracized by the local synagogues and may have begun to wonder if they had made the right choice in following Jesus. John's Gospel provided them with much "ammunition" in their quest to evangelize their non-Christian Jewish friends and family and encouraged them in the belief that Jesus is the true fulfillment of all of the central hopes and aspirations of Judaism. Ephesus, however, was also being infiltrated by the early Gnostic teacher Cerinthus, who taught a form of docetism—the belief that Christ only "seemed" (from the Gk dokeo) to be human. Hence, John emphasized Jesus' full deity and His full humanity.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN JOHN'S GOSPEL AND THE SYNOPTICS

The apologist will probably be most interested in the numerous differences between John and the Synoptics and how they can be explained in detail. John includes no parables, few kingdom teachings, no exorcisms, and no pronouncement stories (short debates with hostile questioners ending in climactic pronouncements). But the parable seems to have been a distinctively Jewish form of teaching not known to the Greeks. The kingdom was an OT theocratic concept that likewise could have misled a largely Gentile church. Exorcisms were viewed almost magically in the Greco-Roman world, and John does include plenty of more extended controversies with Jewish leaders.

More telling are examples of "interlocking" between John and the Synoptics—places where details in one Gospel help explain what might have remained mysterious in another. For example, John refers to the imprisonment of John the Baptist ever so briefly (Jn 3:24), but only the Synoptics narrate the actual story (Mk 6:14-29). John 11:2 distinguishes Mary the sister of Lazarus from Mary the mother of Jesus by alluding to a story John has not yet narrated but that Mark said would be recounted whenever the gospel is preached (Mk 14:9). And the references to Jesus' trial before Caiaphas (Jn 18:24,28) are so short as to presuppose the fuller detail known from the first three Gospels (Mk 14:53-65).

In other instances John clarifies something the Synoptics leave puzzling. Why did the garbled charges against Jesus at His trial claim that He had predicted He would destroy the temple (Mk 14:58-59)? Presumably, because of what He said two years earlier about destroying the temple, when His audience didn't understand He was talking about His own body (Jn 2:19). Why did the Jewish Sanhedrin involve the Roman authorities with Jesus' execution in the first place, since their law prescribed stoning for blasphemy (Mk 15:1-3)? Most probably, it was because Rome prevented the Jews from carrying out capital punishment in most instances (Jn 18:31). How could the Synoptics describe Jesus as often wanting to gather the children of Jerusalem together (Mt 23:37) when they narrate only one trip the adult Jesus took to the holy city—that of His final Passover? Doubtless because He did in fact go there regularly at festival times, as John repeatedly indicates (chaps. 2; 5; 7–9; 10). Indeed, it is only from John that we learn that Jesus' ministry lasted for roughly three years, a claim most scholars accept as accurate. Plenty of additional examples of interlocking in each direction could be given.

A key feature of John's literary genre provides further explanation of the book's distinctives. John was less literal in his reporting than the authors of the Synoptics, in large measure due to writing in a style somewhat akin to ancient Greco-Roman drama. But his recurring emphasis on themes like truth and witness shows that he believed he was faithfully reproducing the life and times of Jesus even through this genre.

A detailed analysis of the historical reliability of John proceeds through the Gospel, verse by verse, looking for compatibility with the Synoptic data and applying standard historical criteria for authenticity to each text in turn. The most helpful criterion is what has been called double similarity and dissimilarity. When a teaching or event from Jesus' life fits plausibly into the Jewish world of Israel during the first third of the first century but differs in some respect from most conventional Judaism of the day, it is not likely to have been invented by some Jew other than Jesus. When that same teaching or event also shows some continuity with later Christian belief or practice and yet likewise proves distinctive at some telling point, it is not likely to have been manufactured by any later Christian. Usually at least one central element, if not several, emerge in each passage in John to satisfy this four-part criterion.

Much scholarship today continues to dismiss John as not nearly as valuable for recovering the "historical Jesus" as the Synoptics, but this scholarship rarely interacts in detail with the studies that demonstrate the points briefly summarized in this introduction.

None of this suggests that historical research can "prove" the reliability of every last detail in John (or any other portion of Scripture). But when writers prove repeatedly reliable where they can be tested, they should be given the benefit of the doubt where they cannot be checked. Christian belief in the full trustworthiness, authority, and inspiration or inerrancy of the text requires a leap of faith beyond what historical evidence alone can demonstrate. But it is not a leap in the dark, flying in the face of the evidence. It is a conscious choice consistent with the evidence that does exist.

John Study Notes

1:1 There is no definite article ("the") in the Greek before "God," so the Jehovah's Witnesses' New World Translation reads, "The Word was a god." But sentences of this form in Greek (two nouns joined by a form of the verb "to be") normally placed the article only before the subject of the sentence, regardless of word order. So the traditional translation, "The Word was God," is to be preferred.

1:4,7,9 Each of these three verses could suggest that all people will be saved. But verses 5, 10, and 11 all make it clear that not everyone accepted Jesus. So John must have meant that salvation was available through Jesus for all people, not that salvation automatically is applied to all people.

1:11 "He came to His own" probably referred first of all to the Jews. But if the Jews rejected the one claiming to be their Messiah, why should anyone else believe in Him? We must remember that throughout the OT period the majority of the Jewish people, more often than not, rebelled against God. But there was always a righteous remnant, as there was in the days of Jesus and the apostles. The number of people who believe something is not always related to the truth of what is believed.

1:14 Ancient Gnostics and modern "New Agers" have often challenged the idea of God taking on human flesh, since "flesh" is seen as inherently corrupt. But Gn 1 stresses that God created the world and everything in it to be completely good. Only later did sin corrupt everything. Jesus, however, was God's "new creation" and free from sin. God Himself became incarnate in order to redeem sinful humanity.

1:17 This verse could suggest a complete dichotomy between OT and NT times, but in the context of verse 16 it must refer to a relative contrast. A literal translation from the Greek of verse 16 says (NT) grace "instead of" (OT) grace. Grace appears throughout the OT. God's deliverance of Israel from Egypt was an act of grace. Comparatively, however, the NT focuses on grace even more because it describes the completed plan of salvation in Christ.

1:18 If no one has ever seen God the Father, how could the Lord appear to OT saints, wrestle with Jacob, show His back to Moses, etc.? Because "God is spirit" (4:24) and because a spirit "does not have flesh and bones" (Lk 24:39), God is not inherently embodied. But He appeared to people temporarily in bodily form in OT times as a precursor to His full incarnation in Jesus.

1:21 How could John deny that he was Elijah, when Jesus called him precisely that in Mt 11:14? Presumably he was denying that he was the literal Elijah returned from heaven that some Jews looked for. Luke 1:17 harmonizes the two texts: John came "in the spirit and power of Elijah."

1:28 The only Bethany we know of was close to Jerusalem, not "across" the Jordan River (to the east). This doesn't mean that John made a mistake, but it highlights our incomplete understanding of the archaeological history of the region. For example, there is a place called Batanea farther to the north, and east of Galilee, which may have been the place John called Bethany.

1:31 How could John have not previously known Jesus, since they were relatives and each had had a special birth (see Lk 1–2)? John must have meant that after years had gone by and Jesus had done nothing extraordinary as a youth, he was not at all sure what the various prophecies about Jesus meant, until God further revealed things to him at Jesus' baptism.

1:36,41,45,49 In a short span of time Jesus was called the "Lamb of God," "Messiah," the "One Moses wrote about," the "Son of God," and the "King of Israel." How could Jesus' first followers know so much about Him so quickly, especially when the other Gospels do not include such understanding until much later in His ministry? Actually, all these titles carried with them the common Jewish expectation of a kingly, militaristic deliverer who would overthrow Rome. A full understanding of who Jesus was came slowly.

1:42 Doesn't this verse contradict Mt 16:18, in which Jesus much later called Simon "the Rock" (Kepha [Cephas] in Aramaic and Petros [Peter] in Greek)? No, because in this verse Jesus used the future tense "will be called" and in the event at Caesarea Philippi He simply said, "You are . . ."

1:45 Jesus' being called "son of Joseph" does not contradict the traditions of a virginal conception. Joseph would have legally adopted Jesus and become His stepfather. Nathanael is probably the same person as Bartholomew (Mk 3:18).

1:46 It is sometimes claimed that we have no evidence of Nazareth existing as a town in Jesus' day. Yet artifacts show evidence of a settlement even before Roman times, as well as during the early Roman period, while a first-century inscription contains the name of Nazareth in Hebrew. But Nazareth was a small, out-of-the-way place that no one later wanting to honor Jesus would likely have made up. It is mentioned because that is where He really lived.

1:51 John's language sounds confused. We might expect angels coming and going from heaven to "descend and ascend," not the reverse. But John was alluding to Gn 28:12, in which Jacob dreamed about a stairway on which angels were "going up and down." Heaven will again open at Christ's resurrection and at His return; angels will accompany Him to heaven and one day usher Him back to earth.

2:4 Jesus' literal words to Mary sound brusque: "What has this concern of yours to do with Me, woman?" But another translation would be "Dear woman, why do you involve me?" It was not yet His time to provide for all the needs of all the world's people through His sacrificial death, but His turning water into wine was a sign that the messianic times had arrived (see Jl 3:13; Am 9:13-14).

2:6-7 Creating this much wine would seem to encourage drunkenness. Worse, this miracle seems to be frivolous from start to finish, hardly meeting any acute human need. On the other hand, wedding festivities often lasted for a week and an entire village could have been involved, so the amounts consumed by any individual at one time may have been quite moderate. Furthermore, one of the points of the miracle was to stress the new joy associated with Jesus' ministry and the kingdom He was inaugurating. Mark 2:21-22 makes much the same point in the parable of the wineskins.

2:13-25 At first glance this passage seems out of place since the other Gospels all have Jesus clearing the temple during the last week of His life (Mk 11:15-17). But John may have thematically relocated this passage as a kind of "headline" over his entire Gospel (there are no precise chronological links with previous or subsequent material in the Greek), or Jesus may have cleared the temple twice—once at the outset of His ministry when He had the people's sympathies and once later when it proved too much for the authorities to tolerate.

2:15-16 Doesn't Jesus' "temple tantrum" show a cruel, vindictive side to Him—abusing animals and exhibiting uncontrollable rage? Actually, the Greek text says He applied the whip only to the wicked people He was confronting. Rabbinic sources suggest that using the temple for trading in sacrificial animals was a recent development; the Kidron Valley below had been the earlier site. Commercial convenience created the change, but it prevented the Court of the Gentiles from being used as God had intended it—as a place of worship. Godly wrath is eternal opposition to what is evil. As such, it is not at all opposed to love but is really the action of holy love in the face of evil. Love for those who are outcast often requires judgment against their oppressors.

3:1 Despite no apparent non-Christian evidence for the existence of this Nicodemus, the rabbinic writings do refer to two different men by that name, one generation on either side of Jesus' life. They are listed as part of the Gurion family and were wealthy, powerful, Pharisaic teachers—just like the character described here. Given the Jewish propensity for reusing favorite names, the name and attributes of this Nicodemus are entirely plausible.

3:2-9 Nicodemus started out so promisingly yet ended up not understanding Jesus at all. Is this conceivable for one who was called a teacher in Israel (v. 10)? Yes, and it was typical of the responses of various Jewish authorities to Jesus. John narrated a number of miracles ("signs") to try to convince people that Jesus was the Jewish Messiah (20:31), but he also recognized that signs by themselves can mislead (2:23-25). That John did not turn Nicodemus into a follower of Jesus (at least in this passage) contrasts with later Christian legends that did, making the historical plausibility of this episode all the greater.

3:3,7 It is sometimes argued that Jesus could not have said, "You must be born again," because this relies on a play on words between "born again" and "born from above" that works only in Greek, not in Aramaic. But whichever phrase Jesus used, He still clearly was talking about a second birth after a person's first, biological birth.

3:16 Muslims claim that God could not have a Son because they think Christians are talking about a literal biological offspring of the Father and Mary. However, throughout the NT, and especially in John, sonship refers to the intimate spiritual relationship between God and Jesus.

3:17 John said that Jesus didn't come to judge or condemn the world (12:47), but elsewhere we clearly read that Jesus will function as Judge on the last day, condemning some to hell (e.g., Mt 25:31-46). This is scarcely a contradiction, since John himself recorded that Jesus had all judgment entrusted to Him (Jn 5:22). The purpose of the incarnation was to offer a plan of salvation for all who would receive it. Those who refuse it simply remain in the condemned state they were already in. Or, in C. S. Lewis's words, "There are only two kinds of people in the end; those who say to God, 'Thy will be done,' and those to whom God says, 'Thy will be done.' "

3:32 Here John made it sound as if no one ever accepted Jesus' testimony. Yet clearly Christ did gain followers. We must understand these words as a sweeping generalization about the growing reaction of Jesus' contemporaries. John was probably echoing Jesus' remark in verse 11 to Nicodemus: "You do not accept Our testimony," referring to the majority of the Jewish leaders.

4:1-2 Some have accused John of contradicting himself in the span of two verses by saying that Jesus baptized and then that He didn't. It is possible, however, that John penned verse 1 referring to Jesus and His followers together and then realized he needed to clarify more precisely that it was the followers who performed the actual ritual. Given that John was more interested in contrasting Jesus and John the Baptist than in comparing them, his Gospel's comment that the two for a time had parallel ministries of baptism is not likely to be without historical foundation.

4:4 Jesus didn't have to go through Samaria. Jews in fact preferred to cross over and travel north on the eastern bank of the Jordan to avoid Samaria. But the compulsion was a theological one; it was God's will that Jesus go this way to have His appointed encounter with the woman at the well.

4:9 Jews associated with Samaritans in numerous contexts, especially for commercial transactions. So either this is another sweeping generalization—Jews preferred to avoid Samaritans whenever they could—or the verb for "associate" should be translated "use the same dishes as," referring to the Jewish laws of ritual purity.

4:21-24 Verse 21 could sound like Jesus was discouraging worship anywhere, when in fact He was encouraging it everywhere. No longer will there be one uniquely holy land or place in God's kingdom. On God as Spirit, see note on 1:18.

4:26 How could Jesus reveal Himself so plainly to this Samaritan woman when He was so coy with the Jewish leaders in Israel, especially as seen in the other three Gospels? Because the Samaritans were not looking for a militaristic ruler but expected a Messiah who would be more like a prophet and a teacher.

4:43-54 How does this episode fit with a similar miracle of healing in Mt 8:5-13 and Lk 7:1-10? It is hard to know for sure. On close examination there are no outright contradictions between the two, even though the Gospel writers have selected different portions to narrate. But they also may be two separate but similar incidents.

5:2 Until the 1890s, critics doubted this detail. Then the pool of Bethesda was excavated in Jerusalem and it turned out to have had five covered colonnades—four around the perimeter and one dividing the water into two compartments down the middle.

5:14 Sometimes this verse is used as a proof text for blaming all illness on someone's personal sin. But John contradicted this in 9:1-3. All Jesus was saying here was that this man's affliction seemed to have stemmed from some sin of his. Times of calamity are always good for personal stocktaking (Lk 13:1-9), but many tragedies are simply the results of life in a fallen world (Rm 8:22).

5:16-30 Throughout this passage it seems as if Jesus went back and forth between claiming He was equal to God and saying He was subordinate to His Father. Actually, both were true. There was essential equality with functional subordination. All three persons of the Trinity are fully divine and united as one God in three persons, but they have distinct as well as overlapping roles. The Son never commands the Father; He only obeys Him.

5:31 Of course, Christ's testimony about Himself was valid because He spoke the truth. But Jesus was here alluding to the Jewish principle that self-witness wasillegitimate on its own, so He went on to cite others who could testify on His behalf.

6:14-15 In addition to specifying that it was Passover (v. 4), the attempt to make Jesus king was one of the distinctive features of John's account of the feeding of the 5,000. But even though these details do not appear in the other Gospels, many scholars (including some who are generally skeptical of John) accept them as accurate, because they fit so well the common Jewish misconception of the role of the Messiah and because no later Christian would likely have invented the unflattering picture of Jesus "running away" from would-be subjects of an earthly kingdom.

6:17 Mark 6:45 had the disciples set out for Bethsaida; John here said it was Capernaum. Yet if they were far enough to the northeast corner of the Sea of Galilee, then given the undulating northern coastline, both cities would have lain in a basically west-southwesterly direction of travel.

6:30 How could the crowds ask for anything more beyond the feeding of the 5,000? In part, this was a different gathering, but more importantly, they were looking for someone to replicate the ongoing miracle of manna from heaven that had sustained the Israelites in the wilderness in the years after the exodus from Egypt(v. 31).

6:52-59 Based on these verses, critics of the early church thought Christians condoned a form of cannibalism. This is not the case. The reference here is twofold, both foreshadowing the Lord's Supper and emphasizing complete submission to Jesus as Lord. To many insiders, it has seemed as if the Lord's Supper was a requirement for salvation. But verse 63 makes plain that only the Spirit gives life; Jesus' flesh does not do so. These are simply striking metaphors for identifying with Christ in His atoning death for the sins of humanity.

6:68-69 It is not clear whether this is a drastically abbreviated version of the same conversation that the other Gospels narrate—Peter's confession on the road to Caesarea Philippi (Mt 16:16-20). More probably it is a forerunner of that later, more extensive conversation.

7:5 If Jesus was truly the Messiah who Christians claim He was, surely His own family members would have believed in Him? Not necessarily, especially if He had seemed like an ordinary boy when growing up. In fact, it's unlikely John would have reported this kind of skepticism if it weren't accurate. In the case of James, it may have taken a personal resurrection appearance to bring him to faith (1 Co 15:7).

7:8 The manuscripts vary as to whether John wrote the word "yet" before "going up to this Feast." But the events imply that Jesus did not go immediately but rather waited until halfway through it before making His appearance (v. 14). As in His response to Mary at Cana (2:3-4), Jesus followed the Father's timing, not the commands of His own family.

7:15 If Jesus hadn't "been trained," does this mean He was illiterate or didn't have the detailed familiarity with Hebrew Scripture that the Gospels claim He did? No, He would have attended an elementary school of some sort in the synagogue, learned to read and write, and memorized much of the OT, like other Jewish boys between the ages of 5 and 12. But He had no formal, subsequent training with a rabbi that would qualify Him to act as an official rabbi.

7:27 If no one was supposed to know where the Messiah came from, how could Jesus—born in Bethlehem and raised in Nazareth—qualify? Actually, the Jewish belief that the Messiah would emerge "out of nowhere" was a tradition with no OT support. That said, it is true that the skeptics didn't know where Jesus truly came from—i.e., from God (v. 28).

7:34-36 How do we answer the authorities' question about Jesus' claim to be going away where no one could find Him? By understanding Him to have been referring to His death, resurrection, and ascension. They would look for Him later, but physically they would not be able to find Him. His Holy Spirit would be with His followers (see 8:21-22).

7:39 The Holy Spirit had been given frequently, but only temporarily, to various people throughout the OT. But He would permanently indwell God's people only after Jesus' death and exaltation (14:17; cp. Ac 2).

7:41-42,52 These verses do not contradict Mt 2:1 and Lk 2:4 on Jesus' being born in Bethlehem. Rather, they point out (ironically) how Jesus was rejected because people mistakenly think He was born in Nazareth, where He grew up. Some prophets did in fact come from Galilee (Hosea, Jonah, Nahum), but not "the Prophet"—i.e., the Messiah, as the textual variant clarifies.

7:53–8:11 This event is not found in the oldest and best manuscripts, It is, however, widely believed to be a true story about Jesus that was preserved in the oral tradition and eventually added by well-meaning scribes.

8:14 Earlier Jesus accepted, for the sake of argument, the Jewish belief that self-testimony was illegitimate (5:31). Here He pointed out explicitly what had been true all along, that He did in fact tell the truth about Himself, whether or not anyone else supported Him. And in verse 18 He did go on to provide another witness.

8:15-16 Jesus was not contradicting Himself in the span of two verses—first not judging, then judging. Rather, He passed judgment on no one of His own accord; His judgment was always mirroring the Father's judgment (v. 16).

8:30-59 In verses 30-31, various listeners seem to have believed in Jesus, but by the end of the chapter they were ready to stone Him. As verse 31 stresses, appearance of belief must be matched by perseverance in following Jesus and His teaching. Much of the belief attested to in verse 30 was probably superficial. There may also have been a narrowing of the audience Jesus was addressing, starting in verse 48—"the Jews" here may include some of the authorities who had never claimed to believe in Him at any level.

8:33 Of course the Jews had frequently been slaves—in Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, and Persia as well as under Greece and now under Rome. Presumably they were claiming here that they were never spiritually enslaved.

8:44 Surely this was the height of anti-Semitism? Actually, Jesus was calling only one specific group of Jews sons of the devil. Jesus was a Jew, as were all His first followers. The OT prophetic books contain many equally sharp rebukes (e.g., Jr 9:7-9), and they are certainly not anti-Semitic.

8:58 This is not bad grammar but an allusion to the divine name "I AM" of Yahweh, God of Israel (Ex 3:14). The Greek text uses the present tense, and thus the Jehovah's Witnesses' New World Translation is wrong to render it, "I have been," as if Jesus were claiming only to have existed some time before Abraham.

9:1-3 If 5:14 is taken to mean that all sick and disabled persons are being punished for their own sin, then we have a contradiction. Rather, this incident shows that 5:14 cannot be made a universal principle. Often God has specific purposes in allowing His people to remain unwell (2 Co 12:9). In this case, God will grant healing, but primarily to bring Himself the glory.

9:6-7 Here and in Mk 7:33-35 Jesus used saliva rather than just His spoken word in healing someone. Spittle was often believed to have medicinal value in the ancient world. God can heal directly or through all kinds of indirect means, including modern medicine (and, occasionally, mud packs). The pool of Siloam is another location, once doubted, that archaeology has confirmed.

9:22; 12:42; 16:2 It is often alleged that these three verses anachronistically refer to a later Jewish practice of excommunicating synagogue members who became followers of Jesus. But even then the practice was at best only sporadic throughout the empire. Indeed, John's references may not refer to anything more widespread than a policy in Jerusalem, precisely where such persecution would have started at a very early date (Ac 4–5).

9:33 Like Gamaliel's advice to the Sanhedrin later (Ac 5:38), this man's logic is not watertight. Satan can counterfeit many miracles. But God providentially used this reasoning to help the man come to faith in this situation. The trustworthiness of Scripture does not mean that every human opinion narrated is true, just that those opinions have been accurately reported.

9:41 All people are sinners, but if these Pharisees acknowledged their spiritual blindness, they would not be guilty of the specific sin of claiming to be innocent when they were not.

10:8 "All who came before Me" obviously cannot refer to godly leaders in OT times. Note that the text says "are thieves and robbers" (as in the Gk), which may suggest that Jesus had just His contemporaries in view.

10:10 In context, this is no promise of health, wealth, or easy living by worldly standards. The abundant Christian life means salvation (v. 9); in this world, however, it may involve martyrdom (15:13).

10:16 When Jesus addressed Jews and spoke about "other sheep," He would have had Gentiles in mind. His church would unite Jew and Gentile (Gl 3:28). There is no reason to believe the Mormon claim that He was speaking here of Native Americans and an appearance in the New World.

10:24 This verse is a good reminder that all of Jesus' "I am" statements—"bread of life," "light of the world," etc.—were primarily metaphors. They were not intended to be unambiguous revelations of His deity, as they seem to Christians today with "20/20 hindsight."

10:30 Jesus' claims to be one with God transgressed boundaries that some Jewish authorities believed no human should ever cross, lest one be arrogating to himself divine prerogatives. That some wanted to stone Jesus (vv. 31-33) shows that His was more than a claim to be one with God in mind, will, or purpose.

10:34-36 This is not an acknowledgement of polytheism or a claim that human beings are gods; it is an argument "from the lesser to the greater." Human judges in Israel were called "gods" because of their exalted (though abused) roles in Ps 82:6, so it could not automatically have been blasphemy for Jesus to refer to Himself as God's Son.

11:6,37 Jesus did not contradict His love for Lazarus(v. 5) by delaying His departure. Instead, Jesus magnified the miracle of raising someone four days dead, and God received even more glory (vv. 4,15). Thematically, John used this miracle as an implied response to the question Jesus posed in 10:36.

11:27,39 There was no Jewish tradition of anyone being resurrected apart from or in advance of the general resurrection of all people on the last day. So Martha could easily hold this view (v. 24), believe in Jesus (v. 27), and still not expect Lazarus to be raised on the spot (v. 39).

11:43-44 It is often argued that the other Gospels could scarcely have left out this greatest of all Jesus' miracles if it really happened. But they do record two other resurrections Jesus performed (Mk 5:21-42; Lk 7:11-17), and by choosing to omit all but Jesus' final journey to Jerusalem, they have no place in their outline for other events in and around the holy city.

11:51-52 It is unlikely that John would view Caiaphas as a true prophet. Rather, he was referring to the Jewish tradition that high priests could prophesy and was pointing out (ironically) how Caiaphas spoke better than he knew. Caiaphas only wanted to protect his people from the Romans; Jesus' death would actually make possible the forgiveness of anyone's sins.

11:53 Does this contradict the claim in the other Gospels that Jesus' cleansing of the temple was the reason the authorities finally decided to take His life (Mk 12:12)? No, because both John and the other Gospels recognize a series of events that eventually sealed Jesus' fate (Mk 3:6; Jn 5:18; 7:32; 8:59; 10:31).

12:1 Mark (14:3-9) and Matthew (26:6-13) seem to place this account on the last night of Jesus' life. But there is no explicit chronological connection there, so they probably relocated this passage thematically because of its message—preparation for burial. John preserved the exact chronology. Luke 7:36-50 is an entirely separate incident with some similar details.

12:3 Did the perfume cover Jesus' feet, as here, or His head (Mk 14:3)? Probably both, since anointinga body for burial required covering the entire corpse.

12:12-19 The way people acted on Palm Sunday contrasted dramatically with the crowd's clamoring for Jesus' crucifixion five days later. Some in the two crowds would have differed, but this was also the last time the onlookers thought that maybe Jesus was going to assume an earthly kingship and free His nation. When it became clear that was not His purpose, disillusionment and hostility reappeared.

12:27-28 These verses sound like an equivalent to Gethsemane reported in Mt, Mk, and Lk. But here the context was public, so this must have been a separate, earlier incident. If Jesus really did believe He was to be crucified (v. 32), He surely would have wrestled with that fact more than once.

12:32 This is not universalism (saving everyone) but the gospel offer to all without distinction—drawing people of every kind to Himself. Some will not receive Jesus, but for all who do, they will have the right to be children of God (1:12).

12:39-40 Is this deterministic predestination? No, for in Is 6 (quoted here) God was responding to prolonged unbelief and rebellion by Israel and still held out hope for a righteous remnant who repented (v. 13). The same was true here, as some did in fact believe (v. 42). For those who didn't, God merely confirmed their freely chosen disobedience.

12:41 In context, Is 6:10 wasn't even a prediction, much less one about Jesus. But Jews recognized typological as well as predictive prophecy. Typology is the repetition of a significant pattern of God's activity in redemptive history that can properly be ascribed only to Him. Isaiah did make predictions about the Messiah on numerous occasions, and the context of Is 6 looked beyond the present, evil generation of Isaiah, so it is understandable why John would believe that Isaiah previewed Jesus' glory.

13:1 If it was just before the Passover feast in verse 1, did John intend for the meal of verse 2 to be a different one from the Passover? Probably not. Verse 1 is a small paragraph that functions as a headline over all of chapters 13–17. Verse 2 then describes the very Passover meal that had just been mentioned. Not only did various details match the accounts from the other Gospels that are more clearly based on Passover, but only on that night would anyone have imagined that Judas was leaving to give something for the poor (v. 29). The feast lasted for a week, so he could also have needed to buy more provisions (v. 29).

13:2-17 Only John describes the foot washing; only the other Gospels present Jesus' words over the bread and the cup. But both fit neatly together as part of the same meal, a Jewish Passover feast, which Jesus reinterpreted as symbolizing His upcoming, self-giving death for the sins of humanity.

13:16 In other contexts, servants can become greater than their masters. But this is not true with Jesus and His followers, especially when the issues are those of menial service or persecution, which naturally we wish we could avoid (15:20).

13:18-30 Jesus would have shared His bread with all of the Twelve, so verse 18 means merely that one of His most intimate followers would betray Him. Verses 23-26 describe what probably were whispered remarks among those seated closest to Jesus. Jesus' words in verse 27 may then have been spoken loudly enough for all to hear—but not to understand.

14:6 Can we really believe that all those who have never even heard of Jesus are lost? This is a question to which orthodox Christians have given several different answers throughout history. However, this verse does not directly answer it. At the very least John affirmed that, if God forgives anyone, it will be because of Christ's atoning work on the cross. As for whether people have to have heard of Jesus for God to apply the benefits of Christ's death to them, that will have to be decided on the basis of other texts and themes.

14:9-11 Two errors are guarded against here. Verse 9 by itself could suggest that the Son is the Father incarnate, that there are no distinctions between the two persons. But verses 10-11 make it clear that is not the case. These verses also guard against fully separating the Father and the Son into distinct gods. Each interpenetrates the other—what the ancient Greeks called perichoresis.

14:14; 15:16; 16:23 These are not "blank checks"—promises to supply everything anyone requests. "In My name" corresponds to "according to My character" and thus is parallel to other texts that require us to leave room for God's will to overrule ours (e.g., Mt 6:10; Jms 4:15).

14:26; 15:26-27; 16:13 Two themes are balanced in these texts. The Spirit would lead the disciples into further truth after Jesus was gone, but it would be based on what they already knew about Him and had learned from Him. Denying that the Spirit can still give believers the gift of prophecy is unwarranted, but allegations of such prophecies must always be tested and can never contradict, or be elevated to the same level as, Scripture (see 1 Co 14:29-33).

14:28 This is a clear statement of Jesus' functional subordination to the Father described in the note on 5:16-30. It does not deny the simultaneous essential equality of Father and Son.

14:31 Jesus seems to have been ready to leave the upper room but continued talking for another three chapters. Many see an editorially imposed unity of different sources here, but it may be better to see chapters 15–17 as having been spoken after the group had left the house and was headed for the garden. They would have passed vineyards en route, along with the temple and its golden carving of a vine on it, perhaps inspiring 15:1-8. After all, 18:1 doesn't say they left "the house," just that they "went out." In fact, it sounds like they were already on the edge of the Kidron Valley beneath the temple.

15:2-8 Do verses 2 and 6 deny John's promise that God will protect those who are truly His (6:39; 10:29)? No, but they are reminders that true believers will persevere (v. 4; see note on 8:30-31). Those who don't persevere show that they were never truly Christ's (1 Jn 2:19).

15:22,24 There are different kinds of guilt. Unwitting sins can be excused more readily than intentional ones. All people sin and are guilty in God's eyes as a result, but not all are held equally accountable (Lk 12:47-48; Rm 5:13-14).

16:5 How could Jesus say no one was asking Him where He was going when that was precisely Thomas's question in 14:5? Probably the focus is on the present tense. No one was asking right now, and they should have been, since they still didn't understand. This solution is made plausible by the fact that the disciples, whose questions had punctuated the narrative throughout 13:36–14:22, had fallen silent since then.

16:24 Obviously, the disciples had asked Jesus about and for many things, but here He was referring to arrangements after His death and resurrection. Then, since He would be physically absent, they would ask God "in My name"—that is, through Jesus' power and in keeping with His character. This was even less a blank check than 14:14, 15:16, and 16:23, since Jesus did not specify what God would grant in response to their asking, merely that they would "receive."

16:29-31 Finally the disciples claimed to understand. But verse 31 is either an ironic exclamation or a question, implying that they really still hadn't caught on. They were going to abandon Jesus in the garden that very night (v. 32). Only after the resurrection would they fully understand.

17:1-5 Isn't this the height of mutual self-serving behavior—the Father and the Son glorifying each other for eternity? There are deities in the religions of the world who behave that way, but here it is crucial to observe that what brings glory to the Godhead is the opportunity of eternal life for anyone who believes (v. 2)—an opportunity no other religion provides.

17:7-8 Did they really know so much and "for certain"? This verse does not deny the many things the disciples still did not understand. But compared to those who had not followed Jesus, it is true that they had "received" His "words." The original text of "with certainty" can also be translated "truly."

17:9 That Jesus was not praying for the world on this specific occasion does not mean that He never prayed for fallen humanity or that we shouldn't pray for them either. Indeed, He was praying for those who would come to faith through the apostles' message, that their unity would be a sign to a lost world that would watch what they do (v. 23).

17:12 Judas was not an exception to the principle that Jesus would lose none of those God gave Him (6:39; 10:29), for he was doomed from the outset—never truly one of Christ's followers (6:70-71). Yet even here predestination never overrides free will and human accountability (Mk 14:20-21). No one Scripture is specifically mentioned, though there are echoes of Ps 41:9 and 109:4-13. If Judas had chosen not to betray Jesus, someone else likely would have stepped forward.

17:21-23 Obviously, believers cannot be one with either the Father or the Son in every way the persons of the Godhead are one with each other, for we are not God. On the other hand, the unity among Christians is more than the invisible oneness of all believers; it is something that demonstrates itself in outward, tangible, loving cooperation for powerful evangelistic purposes and results.

18:3 A "company of soldiers" would most naturally refer to Romans. But the other Gospels describe no Romans involved in the arresting party. On the other hand, it is hard to believe the Jews would undertake so strategic an arrest without approval from the Roman governor. If any fear of a mob uprising remained, the Romans would want to be involved.

18:6 It is hard to know if we are to take this as a miraculous event or not. Did Jesus' would-be attackers recoil and unwittingly bow down before Him? Or perhaps the imagery is much more mundane. Surprised by the forthrightness of Jesus' self-disclosure, some soldiers may have stumbled backward on the hillside, causing others to fall down as well.

18:12-14,19-23 John described a hearing before Annas, whereas the other Gospels set the trial before the Sanhedrin. Both are plausible, in sequence. As the prior high priest, deposed by Rome, Annas would have still been respected by the Jewish leaders, since the office was supposed to be for life. "That year" (v. 13) didn't imply that Caiaphas was high priest only that year; it probably carried the force of "that fateful year." John knew the subsequent trial (vv. 24,28) but chose not to narrate it in detail, probably because it was already well known from the other Gospels.

18:15-18,25-27 The identities of those who accused Peter of being one of Jesus' disciples vary a little from one Gospel to the next. In the confused and frantic activity surrounding a nighttime arrest and interrogation, it would be natural for numerous people to confront Peter. But all four Gospels agree that Peter denied Christ exactly three times, even as He had predicted (13:38).

18:28 This verse does not imply that it was still the day on which the initial evening Passover meal would be eaten. Ritual uncleanness would no longer apply on a new day, and a new day began, in Jewish thinking, at every sundown. Jewish leaders, who were worried about defiling themselves by entering a Gentile home (the palace), must have been concerned about the festive lunch that same day. There is no contradiction with the chronology in the other Gospels.

18:31 It has been argued that the Jews did have the right to execute capital offenders—witness the stoning of Stephen (Ac 7:54–8:1) and the execution of James the brother of Jesus in A.D. 62 (Josephus, Antiquities 20.197-203). But the former execution appears to have degenerated into a mob action and the latter occurred between Roman procurators occupying the government seat in Judea. Josephus's wording also suggests that, in all but a handful of cases, Rome had taken away the privilege of capital punishment (War 2.117; 6.124-126).

18:36 This verse does not mean that Jesus' "kingdom" had no earthly manifestations but that its origin was not of this world.

18:39 Because there is no unambiguous evidence for this "custom" in non-biblical sources, many doubt that it existed. On the other hand, the writings of the Jewish historian Josephus (Antiquities 20.209), the Roman historian Livy (5.13), and the rabbinical authors of the Talmud (b. Pes. 91a) may attest to the custom or, more likely, to partially analogous Roman practices, making this biblical account plausible.

19:1 Was Jesus flogged once or twice? Probably only once; He might not even have survived two such punishments. Mark described the incident later in his narrative (Mk 15:15). However, he introduced the incident with "After having Jesus flogged . . . ," allowing for it to have occurred earlier in Jesus' trial.

19:12,15 Jewish authorities were hardly friends of Caesar (v. 12); could they really have affirmed their allegiance to him (v. 15)? Probably only in the sense that they would have said just about anything to get Pilate to crucify Jesus. Pilate would have cared deeply about how the emperor viewed him, so these statements were ploys to get him to look favorably on their request.

19:14,31,42 The Greek of verse 14 reads literally, "Now it was the preparation of the Passover." But in light of verse 31, this must have meant the day of preparation for the Sabbath (i.e., Friday before Saturday) of Passover week. John spoke of the sixth hour, but Mk 15:25 has Jesus on the cross already by the third hour. Some think John was following Roman reckoning of hours, beginning at midnight, and referring to 6:00 A.M., while Mark was following Jewish reckoning, beginning at dawn and thus referring to 9:00 A.M. Others believe both writers were using round numbers, following Jewish reckoning, in a world where the days and nights were often divided into fourths. A midmorning time of roughly 10:30 could then get rounded either down or up to the nearest three-hour marker.

19:17 John said Jesus carried His own cross (as crucified people usually did), but Mk 15:21 describes the authorities conscripting Simon of Cyrene for that task. Presumably, Jesus started out carrying it, but the weight of the wood could have made it difficult for Jesus, weakened by the flogging, to walk far with it.

19:24,36 This is another passage that is typological in the OT (Ps 22:18). Psalm 22 contains numerous details strikingly paralleled in Jesus' life, even though it was originally describing the afflictions of the psalmist. To the believing Jew, this was no coincidence but a sign of God's hand at work

19:25-27 Why would Jesus entrust His mother to "the disciple He loved"—the Apostle John—rather than to her husband, Joseph, or to one of Jesus' half brothers? Presumably because Joseph had died by this time and Jesus' brothers had not yet become His followers. It is possible that John was Jesus' cousin, so they had a biological as well as spiritual relationship. In John's account, Mary and her sister are named as witnesses at the crucifixion. John didn't name Mary's sister, but Mark says that Salome was among the women present. Salome was the mother of Zebedee's sons, James and John (Mk 15:40).

19:39 This is the amount of anointing material that was used at the funeral for a king. Would Joseph and Nicodemus really have brought so much? If they had come to believe Jesus was a true king, then why not?

20:1-2 Who went to the tomb when? All the Gospels agree that Mary Magdalene went along with several other women. She may have run ahead to be the first to see the empty tomb, or else John just didn't mention the other women with her. Verse 2, after all, has Mary saying, "We don't know where they have put Him" (emphasis added). Similarly, she may have been the first to get back to the disciples, or else John simply left out Jesus' first appearance to the women as a group. As for going while it was still dark, this scarcely contradicts Mk 16:2 ("at sunrise"), since the minutes before and after dawn always resemble "twilight"—part dark, part light.

20:11 Mary obviously went back to the tomb, this time probably alone, for this separate special encounter with Jesus. That so much emphasis is placed on her witness (vv. 2,18) is doubly significant, since women's testimony was not often admitted in ancient law courts. Early Christians, if they were making up a story about Jesus' resurrection, would not likely have had a woman, and especially not one with a history of being demon possessed (Lk 8:2), as their primary witness.

20:12 Matthew referred to "an angel" (Mt 28:2); Mark, to "a young man" (Mk 16:5); and Luke, to "two men" (Lk 24:4). John harmonized the three accounts. Two angels, appearing like men (as consistently in Scripture), were present. Only one is ever said to speak, so abbreviated accounts could easily have left the second one out. Since no Gospel says that only one angel or man was present, there is no contradiction.

20:17 The Greek reads literally, "Don't touch me," but the sense is "Stop clinging to me." It's not that there was something dangerous about Jesus' body (or that it was not really a body) but that Jesus had not come back to be with Mary permanently in bodily form. These were temporary appearances en route to His ascension and were not to be prolonged.

20:19-23 Is this John's massively reworked counterpart to Pentecost (Ac 2)? No. Only ten of the disciples were present and nothing "spiritual" happened afterward. They simply went fishing (21:3). More likely, this was a dramatic object lesson or initial bestowal of the Spirit to prepare them for the more dramatic filling that would happen seven weeks later in Jerusalem. The authority He bestowed parallels that given first to Peter (Mt 16:16-19) and then to the Twelve (Mt 18:18). It was fulfilled in the disciples' preaching ministry in Ac. Nothing is taught here about papal infallibility or apostolic succession.

20:25-29 This story depicts Thomas in so poor a light that it was not likely invented by the disciples. It also portrays the disciples cowering behind locked doors for fear of the authorities, hardly in any psychological frame of mind to receive visions of a resurrected Christ. The text also confirms that Jesus was genuinely, bodily raised from the dead. Two theological themes coalesce: This kind of miracle (or sign) should have been adequate to convince people that Jesus was truly Lord and God (v. 28), and the testimony of the disciples should have been adequate to demonstrate that even without firsthand empirical proof (v. 29).

20:30-31 These verses explain the highly selective nature of this Gospel's contents as well as its purpose. The book is one of testimony to the identity of Jesus as Messiah and divine Son. Because these verses seem like an appropriate ending, some have wondered if chapter 21 was added later as a kind of appendix. But it contains numerous references to "unfinished business" from the rest of the Gospel, and other ancient works also exhibit the phenomenon of seeming to end a little bit before they actually do (cp. the location of the purpose statements in John's other writings—1 Jn 5:13; Rv 22:6).

21:1 Why do we suddenly find the disciples back north in Galilee? One week after the beginning of Passover in Jerusalem, the Feast ended. They were heading home. Matthew and Mark described resurrection appearances only in Galilee; Luke, only in Judea. John recognized that Jesus appeared to His followers in both locations.

21:4-14 Is this a doublet (two stories created from one incident) of Lk 5:1-11? Both were miraculous fish catches, but it makes sense to see them as two separate events. The disciples had abandoned Jesus, so He needed to "re-call" them. What better way than via a miracle resembling the one that led to the original call of several of them? Verses 15-19 are, after all, clearly about reinstatement.

21:14 But John already narrated four appearances! Presumably the one to Mary didn't count as "to the disciples," which leaves three—on Easter Sunday night (20:19-23), one week later (20:24-29) and now later still in Galilee (21:1-14).

21:18-19 Jesus' cryptic prophecy seems to have been fulfilled when Peter was martyred by crucifixion during Nero's persecutions of A.D. 64 and 68, as attested by early church tradition.

21:22-23 The dominant early church tradition attests that John was the one disciple who did not die a martyr's death but lived out his life in old age to virtually the end of the first century, ministering in and around Ephesus (including a brief exile in the mid-90s on the island of Patmos, during which he wrote the book of Rv). It is possible that John died shortly after completing a draft of his Gospel and that, because of the misinterpreted report described here, his followers added this closing information by way of clarification.

21:24-25 These verses also read most naturally as an addition of John's followers—note the first person singular and plural pronouns versus the third-person reference to the beloved disciple. At the same time they attribute the book itself to John and certify its accuracy. If this reconstruction is accurate, it means merely that God inspired multiple authors, no differently than with the books of Ps or Pr or with the addition of the account of Moses' death to Dt.

Acts Articles

Can Naturalistic Theories Account for the Resurrection?

by Gary R. Habermas

One of our first thoughts when we hear someone claim to have witnessed a miracle is that there must be some sort of natural explanation. After all, even if they do occur, miracles are not the norm in nature.

In the Gospels we are told there was a similar response relating to Christ's resurrection. When the Jewish priests were told the report of the empty tomb, they spread the tale that Jesus' disciples had stolen His body (Mt 28:12-15).

Even believers reacted this way. When Mary Magdalene initially saw Jesus, she made a natural assumption, supposing He was the gardener (Jn 20:10-15). When the disciples heard the report of the women who had gone to Jesus' tomb, they thought the women were spreading rumors or false tales (Lk 24:11). Later, when they saw the risen Jesus, these same followers thought they were seeing a ghost or hallucination (Lk 24:36-43).

Throughout history many have had similar responses regarding Jesus' resurrection, attempting to come up with naturalistic theories to explain away the resurrection. These attempts were far more common in the nineteenth century than they are today. Even if we were to ignore the majority of the information in the Gospels, appealing only to those historical facts that are acknowledged by virtually every scholar who studies this subject, both conservative and liberal, we still have many major responses to each of the naturalistic theories. Not surprisingly, comparatively few scholars today think any of these alternative hypotheses really works.

For example, few critics have proposed that Jesus never died on the cross but instead "swooned"—fainted and only appeared dead. Dozens of medical studies have shown how death by crucifixion really kills and how this would be recognized by those present. Most of these reports argue that the chief cause of death in crucifixion was asphyxiation (death from being unable to breathe). It is even easy to ascertain when the victim was dead—he remained hanging in the down position without pushing up to breathe. Additionally, a death blow frequently ensured the victim's demise. The prevailing medical explanation of Jesus' chest wound is that the presence of blood and water indicated He was stabbed through the heart, thereby ensuring His death.

But many scholars think another serious problem dooms the swoon theory. If Jesus had not died on the cross, He would have been in exceptionally bad shape when His followers saw Him. Limping profusely, bleeding from His many wounds and probably even leaving a bloody trail, stoop-shouldered and pale, He hardly would have been able to convince His disciples that He was their risen Lord—and in a transformed body at that! Many historical reasons and the near unanimity of scholarly opinion indicate that Jesus' disciples at least truly believed they had seen Him resurrected. On such grounds the swoon thesis is actually self-refuting. It pre-sents a Jesus who would have contradicted the disciples' belief in His resurrection simply by appearing in the horrible physical shape that is demanded by this view!

But could the disciples have stolen His dead body? This approach has been almost ignored for more than 200 years because it would not explain the disciples' sincere belief that they had seen the risen Jesus—a belief for which they were clearly willing to die. Their transformations need an adequate explanation. Neither would the theft hypothesis explain the conversions from skepticism by James, the brother of Jesus, or Paul, occasioned by their own beliefs that they had also seen the risen Jesus. These facts are noted even by critical scholars.

Might someone else have stolen Jesus' body? This approach addresses nothing but the empty tomb. It provides no explanation for Jesus' appearances, which are the best evidence for the resurrection.

Further, it fails to account for the conversions of James and Paul. Besides, many candidates for the body stealers would have had no motivation for taking the body. This alternative accounts for far too little of the known data. It is no wonder that critics virtually never opt for it.

There are myriads of problems with hallucination theories, too. We will mention just a few. Hallucinations are private experiences, whereas our earliest accounts report that Jesus appeared to groups as well as to individuals. Further, the dissimilar personalities witnessing the appearances clearly militate against everyone's inventing a mental image, often at the same time. So do the reactions of those disciples who responded to reports of the resurrection by doubting. The conversions of James and Paul are extremely problematic for this view, since unbelieving skeptics would hardly desire to hallucinate about the risen Jesus. And if hallucinations are the best explanation, then the tomb should not have been empty!

Could the resurrection accounts have developed later as mere stories that grew over time? A few of the potential responses should be adequate. Here again, the fact that the disciples truly believed they had seen the risen Jesus is highly problematic for this view, since it indicates the original accounts were derived from the eyewitnesses themselves, not from some later stories. Further, the fact that these appearances were reported extremely early, within just a few years of the crucifixion, attests that at least the core message was intact from the outset. Moreover, the empty tomb would be a constant physical reminder that this was not just some ungrounded tale. Both James and Paul again provide even more insurmountable problems for this view, for these skeptics were convinced that they had also seen the risen Jesus; tales developing years later fail to account for their conversions.

For reasons such as these, most critical scholars today reject the naturalistic theories as adequate accounts of Jesus' resurrection. They simply do not explain the known historical data. In fact, many liberal scholars even critique the alternatives that are periodically suggested!

Here we have a strong witness to the historical nature of Jesus' resurrection. Naturalistic theories have failed. Further, many historical evidences favor the resurrection. Taking all this together, we have strong reasons to believe that this event actually occurred in history. After all, the more thoroughly the alternative theories fail, the more we are left with the evidences themselves, and they are powerful indicators that Jesus rose from the dead.

Does the Disciples' Conviction That They Saw the Risen Jesus Establish the Truth of the Resurrection?

by Gary R. Habermas

Virtually all scholars studying Jesus' resurrection, whether conservative, moderate, or liberal, acknowledge that Jesus' earliest followers were convinced not only that Jesus was raised from the dead but also that He had appeared alive to many of them on several occasions. Further, scholars also almost unanimously recognize that two former skeptics, James the brother of Jesus and Saul of Tarsus (Paul), became believers after they, too, were convinced that they had seen the risen Jesus.

Multiple grounds support this early Christian conviction. Even today's most critical scholars agree that Paul, the author of undisputed NT letters, provided eyewitness testimony to Jesus' resurrection appearance. Further, Paul included a crucial report concerning other appearances of Jesus in the exceptionally early creed in 1 Co 15, which is usually dated to the A.D. 30s. Paul carefully checked out this material with other key apostles in Jerusalem on at least two occasions (Gal 1:18–2:10). Paul also knew that the other apostles were preaching the same message regarding the risen Jesus (1 Co 15:10-15). Paul's eyewitness testimony at each of these points is crucial.

Moreover, the conversion of James from skepticism, the willingness of the earliest disciples to suffer persecution and even martyrdom, the empty tomb, and the presence of other early reports of Jesus' resurrection especially in Acts are further indications of the apostolic conviction that Jesus had been raised. In brief, the earliest Christian message was that Jesus had appeared to His followers after His death.

Of the many evidences for the resurrection, the most significant is that the earliest disciples were utterly convinced they had seen the risen Jesus. The reason is straightforward. Virtually every contemporary scholar recognizes the strong data showing that Jesus died by crucifixion. So if a number of persons (both individuals and groups) actually saw Him afterward, this would constitute the clearest indication that He had been raised. No other evidence provides such a direct indication of this event. This is clearly what the witnesses proclaimed.

Some critics may counter that, while the early disciples truly thought Jesus had been raised, a natural hypothesis explains their beliefs.

However, now the questioner has a major dilemma. Natural theories have been proposed for centuries and each fails by a large margin to explain the recognized historical data. Incredibly, most contemporary scholars even recognize this failure. Few critics even propose alternative hypotheses!

The earliest disciples clearly taught that they saw the risen Jesus, for which there are plenty of supporting details. What happens when these facts are not naturally explained, as even the majority of contemporary critical scholars admit? The resurrection of Jesus becomes the best explanation of the known data.

All the evidence favors the view that the disciples actually saw the risen Jesus. There is no viable evidence to the contrary. So we are left with a succinct conclusion. When the many reasons supporting the conviction that Jesus actually appeared to the early Christians are combined with the failure of naturalistic alternative theses, we are justified in concluding that Jesus was actually raised from the dead.

What is the Christian Identity Movement?

by R. Alan Streett

The Christian Identity movement (CI), formerly called British or Anglo Israelism, teaches that God indeed respects persons based on their bloodline or nationality. Many of these groups are anti-Semitic, claiming that white Anglo-Saxons constitute the Israel of God and that ethnic Jews are the children of the devil. Also, all CI sects make a distinction between Israel and the Jews. They base their beliefs on one of two theories: (1) the ten lost tribes theory, or (2) the serpent seed theory.

According to the former theory, after the fall of Israel (the northern kingdom, consisting of 10 tribes) in 722 B.C., the tribes migrated westward into Europe and eventually to America. None returned to their homeland. They assimilated into the culture and hence lost their identity. They now constitute the Anglo-Saxon peoples of the world. The southern kingdom, consisting of two tribes (Judah and Benjamin), fell to Babylon in 586 B.C. After captivity, many returned to their homeland. According to the CI theory, they became known as Jews. They were responsible for the death of Christ and therefore are the targets of God's wrath.

The lost tribes theory may sound plausible to a biblical novice, but Scripture proves the theory to be bankrupt (see Ezr 3:1; 6:16-17; Lk 1:54,67-68,80; 2:36; Jn 3:1,10; Ac 2:14,22,36; 5:21; 13:24, which indicates that Israel returned to its homeland). Peter said Israel crucified Jesus (Ac 4:8-10). There are no lost tribes. James addressed all 12 of them (Jms 1:1). After the Babylonian captivity, the terms Israel and Jews are used interchangeably. No longer is the nation considered to be divided. In the NT Jew is used 174 times and Israel is used 75 times to designate the same people. The Apostle Paul used both Jew (Ac 21:39; 22:3) and Israelite (Rm 11:1; 2 Co 11:22) to identify himself.

Other CI groups look to the serpent seed theory to validate their anti-Semitic beliefs. According to this scenario, the sexual union between Adam and Eve produced Abel, the father of the Israelite or Aryan people. Those in this godly line are God's children by birth; hence there is no need for a new birth. A second union, this time between Eve and the serpent produced Cain, who became the father of the Jews. After the great flood, his descendants cohabited with beasts, producing a mongrelized race of people, now consisting of Semites, Asians, and Africans. They are the enemies of God.

The problems with this theory are obvious. First, Israel traces its origin to Jacob, not Abel, when the former's name was changed to Israel. Second, Abraham, not Cain, is called the father of the Jews. Third, all must be born again. Fourth, Jesus reminded the woman of Samaria that "salvation is from the Jews" (Jn 4:22). Fifth, and most important, Jesus was a Jew from the tribe of Judah; thus, according to this theory, He would be the enemy, not the Son of God.

Both the ten lost tribes and serpent seed theories are attempts to provide theological and scriptural support for anti-Semitism.

How Should a Christian Relate to Those in Non-Christian Movements and Religions?

by Alan W. Gomes

As we witness to those in non-Christian religions, we must guard against a formulaic approach that would treat them all as if cut from the same cloth. At the same time, we must not ignore the commonalities underlying religious allegiance, whether Christian or not. So long as we are appropriately sensitive to individual differences, we can identify some helpful strategies for winning adherents of non-Christian religious movements.

Address the personal motivations underlying religious commitment. Often people commit to a religion in order to meet personal needs. In new religious manifestations, in particular, there is a focus on the transformation of the self. Adherents of false religions often join to address intellectual, emotional, social, and spiritual needs. People are looking for loving relationships and a sense of connectedness; a family atmosphere (particularly attractive for those who are without family or whose family is dysfunctional); a sense of acceptance and self-worth (sometimes by being part of "God's great work" through the religious movement or false religion); an opportunity to achieve idealistic goals (e.g., doing works of philanthropy and charity); a way to meet deep spiritual longings (e.g., to experience a sense of the "divine" or the "transcendent"); and a belief system that will provide answers to life's deepest questions ("Why am I here?" "What is the purpose of life?").

These aspirations hardly are unique to members in false religious movements. Nor is there anything necessarily sinister in the fact that people have and seek to meet these needs. Indeed many people become involved in biblically based Christian churches for the same reasons—joining our churches, e.g., because of the caring and committed relationships they experience as part of God's family. The problem with false religions, is that they cannot ultimately satisfy the deepest longings of the human spirit; only the true gospel can do that.

One of the most important things we can do in reaching out to those ensnared in false religion is to provide an environment where these spiritual, social, emotional, and intellectual needs can be met. The church should and generally does provide such an environment anyway, but for those emerging from false religions, the need is especially acute. Some new religious movements can be harsh on those who leave, shunning or "disfellowshiping" them. The person who leaves such a group may experience in one fell swoop the loss of his entire support system of family and friends. The church needs to be sensitive to this and be prepared to go the extra mile in embracing such individuals, enfolding them into the body of Christ with loving arms.

Properly classify, understand, and refute the false belief system. As important as the interpersonal factors mentioned above are, it is also necessary to understand correctly and then refute biblically the false belief system.

The first step is to classify accurately the type of belief system in question. A basic distinction should be made between new religious movements dependent upon Christianity and religious groups that make no claim of Christian allegiance. The former claim to be Christian but deny one or more central doctrines of the Christian faith. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons), Jehovah's Witnesses, and Christian Science are such examples. World religions, such as Islam, also deny core Christian beliefs, including the doctrine of the Trinity and the deity of Christ. But unlike new religious movements of Christianity, world religions do not claim to be Christian and in fact would explicitly repudiate such a label.

The distinction between new religious movements dependent upon Christianity and world religions is not merely academic. One would approach a Mormon differently from a Muslim. For example, one does not have to convince a Mormon that Jesus Christ is the Savior and that Christianity is true. Indeed, the Mormon already thinks that Jesus is his Savior and that his church is the true restoration of Christianity under Joseph Smith. The task is to show that Mormonism is a counterfeit form of Christianity, with a false Jesus who cannot save. A Muslim, on the other hand, not only will have faulty views of what true Christianity teaches but also will need to be convinced that Christianity is the true religion.

We must also understand the non-Christian belief system we are confronting as accurately and in as much detail as is practicable. Failure to do so can quickly short-circuit a witnessing opportunity, for the followers of false religion will soon tune out a Christian who imputes beliefs to them that they do not hold. It is important, as Robert and Gretchen Passantino point out, to observe a kind of golden rule when discussing non-Christian belief systems: represent their belief system as accurately as you would have them represent yours. Only then can we hope to be taken seriously as we confront the errors of the false religions with the claims of Jesus Christ.

What Should a Christian Think About Near-death Experiences?

by Gary R. Habermas

Reports of near-death experiences have occasioned much interest. These reports abound from those who claim to have hovered above their nearly dead bodies and journeyed down dark tunnels toward a beautiful light, often in the presence of deceased loved ones.

The most interesting near-death accounts are the dozens claiming that the dying person, during his turmoil, actually observed events that were later reported and verified. These events may have taken place some distance away and could not have been observed from the individual's location even if he had been completely well. Sometimes the near-death individual had extended periods without a heartbeat during these observations. On a few occasions, no brain activity was reported. A number of blind persons have also produced accurate descriptions of their surroundings.

Attempts have been made to explain these experiences naturally, especially by medical or psychological factors, such as hallucinations. However, none of these subjective approaches can account for the evidential cases just mentioned. For example, internal brain phenomena cannot explain accurate descriptions of events, particularly when they happened a distance away or when the person's heart or brain had failed.

How should Christians think about such accounts? To be sure, some tough questions surround this topic. For example, some non-Christians have declared that they had wonderful experiences during a near-death state. But negative experiences, including graphic visions of hell, have also been reported. Further, these persons were not biologically (irreversibly) dead but only near death. So, how can we be sure of their final state? Last, we are dealing here not with the experiences themselves but with personal interpretations of the experiences, which are notoriously inaccurate during highly emotional times. In these cases, serious evidence is lacking.

What about reports of experiences that have satanic or occultic aspects? Undeniably, such do exist and caution is definitely necessary. But it appears that there is nothing inherently occultic about near-death experiences. People are simply reporting their perceptions.

The carefully observed and documented cases provide some evidence for at least the initial moments of afterlife. This is contrary to the dictates of naturalism, which claims that the material world is all there is to reality. So near-death experiences can be both well evidenced and valuable. At the same time, Christians must be careful not to endorse non-biblical interpretations of these experiences or accept them as revealing truth on a par with the Bible.

Introduction to Acts

AUTHOR

The book of Acts stands at the heart of the NT. Rich in detail, it bridges the gap between the four Gospel accounts and the Epistles that follow. In this long book Luke recounted the history of the growth of the early church, tracing events from Jesus' ascension to the conversion of Paul to the spread of Christianity throughout the Mediterranean region. The book provides an exciting glimpse into the ups and downs, setbacks and struggles faced by the first followers of Christ as they obediently took the message of salvation to the ends of the earth. The many miracles provide solid evidence for God's blessing on their work and the power of His divine plan. Whatever human obstacles may stand in the way, nothing can stop the will of God.

Although the book is technically anonymous, strong evidence points to Luke as the author. Tradition holds that he wrote Acts as a sequel to his Gospel and that the two should be read together. Indeed many scholars refer to Luke's work as a single entity: Luke-Acts. This is supported by the opening paragraph of Acts, where the author refers to a "first narrative" written to Theophilus, presumed to be Luke's Gospel (cp. Lk 1:1-4). Although some of the material in Acts was no doubt collected from different sources by Luke, much of the material comes from his own experiences traveling with Paul (Col 4:14; 2 Tm 4:11; Phm 24). Indeed Irenaeus (A.D. 130–200) was the first to point out the many instances in Acts where the point of view changes from "he/they" to "we," implying that the author himself was there with Paul during those periods. These are commonly referred to now as the "we" passages (Ac 16:10-17; 20:5-15; 21:1-18; 27:1-29; 28:1-16). Although some critical scholars have argued that Acts was not written by Luke and was instead a second-century fabrication intended to unite rival factions of Gentiles and Jews in the early church, the overwhelming body of evidence supports Lukan authorship.

The choice of when we date the book is largely dependent on who we think wrote it. Some critical scholars claim it wasn't written until A.D. 125–30, while others date it to A.D. 80–90. The strongest evidence however dates Acts to the early 60s. The book closes with Paul in prison in Rome (Ac 28:30-31). Given that Luke mentioned several key martyrs in early Christianity, such as Stephen and James, it would be highly unlikely for him to have omitted Paul's martyrdom, which most likely happened in A.D. 63 or 64.

CLASSIFYING THE BOOK OF ACTS

Acts was clearly written in a different style than that of the Gospels, and yet it doesn't fit into the genre of epistle either. How, then, should we classify it? The recounting of various adventures, escapes, and miracles is reminiscent of ancient fictional stories. The scientific details of healings resemble those in scientific treatises. The details about all the people read like a biography. However, the most likely option for the genre of this book is a historical account. Luke recorded eyewitness accounts of real events, real people, and real miracles. It is a vivid account of the power of God at work in the hearts, minds, and lives of the first followers of Christ.

Acts Study Notes

1:1 The reference to Theophilus ("lover of God") links Ac to Luke's Gospel. Luke and Ac were published separately probably due to (a) their different genres (biography of Jesus vs. history of early church [1:8]) and (b) their length (each work was large enough to fill a single scroll). Acts has some literary attributes that are found in the classical Greek historians, Herodotus and Thucydides. Daniel Marguerat argues that Ac has eight of the ten attributes that have been identified as belonging to histories of the Greco-Roman era. The structure of Ac is that of a Greco-Roman history but the content is closer to Jewish history. (See Daniel Marguerat, The First Christian Historian, page 16.)

1:6-11 This fuller Olivet ascension account (than Lk 24:50-52) makes the transition from Jesus' life (Lk) to the purpose of the apostles and the Church (Ac).

1:8 Luke's purpose in Ac was the empowerment by the Spirit to be Christ's witnesses in Jerusalem first, but expanding to reach "the ends of the earth"—the furthest extensions of the Roman Empire of the time (Ro 15:19; Col 1:6,23).

1:11 Christ's return will be in the same manner as He departed—bodily and visible.

1:18 Judas's death in Acts—his falling headfirst and bursting open—pictured his hanging (Mt 27:5).

1:26 Although it might seem strange to contemporary Christians, at the time casting lots was an acceptable means of decision-making. The point, however, is that through prayer, the Lord's superintending influence guided the disciples in selecting Judas's replacement.

2:1-12 The supernatural phenomena at Pentecost (rushing wind, tongues of fire, and the filling of the Spirit) marked the church's formal, public beginning.

2:4 Interpretations of "tongues" differ here: (a) a supernatural/divine language given specifically to communicate with the variety of people gathered from throughout the Roman Empire; (b) a variety of known human languages distinctly heard by each individual; or (c) the Greek language, common to all who had gathered.

2:14 None of the major speeches in Acts are entire; they are summaries, accurately preserving the gist of their content. Their rhetorical style is similar to how the ancients delivered speeches.

2:23 Jesus' death was due to God's plan and foreknowledge, but human beings were also held responsible. The NT often affirms both divine purpose and human involvement without necessarily explaining how they work together (or minimizing either).

2:24 Jesus' bodily resurrection is Christianity's fundamental event and the basis of the gospel message.

2:32 Given the centrality of Jesus' bodily resurrection, and that Jesus' disciples/friends were "witnesses," gives crucial support to Christianity's foundations (e.g., 3:15; 4:13,20; 5:32).

2:38 Though repentance/faith and baptism go together in Ac, baptism is an indication of belonging to Christ, not a condition for it. For example, Cornelius and his relatives believed and received the Spirit before receiving water baptism (10:44-48).

2:41 The large number (3,000) who responded to Peter is believable since Jews throughout the empire traveled to Jerusalem at Passover; the city's population grew to several times its normal size.

2:44-45 For a limited time, Jerusalem Christians distributed possessions according to need. This experiment did not last long due to contribution/distribution problems (see chaps. 4–6).

3:1 Peter and John continued practicing Jewish rituals/worship at this time. Christianity was one "sect" (hairesis) of several within Judaism (24:5; Josephus used this word of Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, Zealots)—a form of contemporary Judaism that believed that Jesus was the Messiah. The progressive split with Judaism was to a large extent mirrored in Acts, with a significant split coming by the time of the first Jewish revolt (A.D. 66–70) but made definite at the second one (A.D. 134–135). Between these periods, it was not clear that rabbinic Judaism would prevail as the standard representative.

3:7 Acts presents many healing miracles, but did they really happen? We have plenty of evidence to prove that the ancients understood physiology sufficiently enough to recognize a miraculous cure when they saw one. In this case the miracle was directly linked to God's power through Jesus and to faith that comes through Him(v. 16).

3:18-19 The suffering-Messiah prophecy was likely Is 52:13–53:12. The Servant's suffering for sins (Is 53:10) is the basis for sinners' repentance and forgiveness.

3:21-24 Early Christians anticipated Jesus' return to establish His earthly kingdom. In support, Peter, citing Moses (Dt 18:15-19) and the entire prophetic tradition, presented Jesus as a Moses-like prophet.

4:1-3 Having legal authority over the temple area, the Sanhedrin had the apostles placed in custody for preaching the resurrection. (A Sanhedrin trial was not to take place at night.) The Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection, claiming they did not find it in the OT.

4:9 Peter boldly proclaimed that the lame man had been healed through the name of Jesus. The worshipers who witnessed what happened praised God while the religious leaders were more concerned with how he was healed than that he was well.

4:12 Peter's message of salvation only through Christ echoed Jesus' own words in Jn 14:6.

4:19 Disobedience to the Sanhedrin was based on what the apostles themselves had witnessed. Despite threats, they prayed for divinely empowered boldness (v. 29).

4:32-36 Christians distributing possessions was no problem while their unified purpose was to provide for those in need. The wealthy Joseph (Barnabas) serves as a positive example of this Christian communalism.

5:2-5 Ananias and Sapphira's sin was knowingly withholding part of their land sale proceeds (to be given to the church) while claiming to give the church everything. Their lie to the church and God brought divine punishment, serving as a sober warning to all. Ananias lied to the Holy Spirit in the same way he lied to God (vv. 3-4). The phrasing indicates Peter considered the Spirit to be God and to be obeyed as God. Similar Trinitarian language is found elsewhere in Ac (20:28). F. F.Bruce has compared the hypocrisy of Ananias and Sapphira with that of Achan in the conquest of Canaan(Jos 7). In both cases God's people were at a critical point in His mission. In both cases hypocrisy threatened the mission. Both of these events are graphic reminders of how God perceives sin. For those who see the God of the OT and NT as different, the judgment of Ananias and Sapphira shows that "His burning anger" (Jos 7:26) against all that is unholy is an essential and eternal part of God's nature. It's not that those who haven't experience the judgments of Achan and Ananias are better than they; only God's grace has been the difference. These events at very different times in biblical history serve as reminders of the reverential awe with which we are to live before God. Such was the effect on the early church (5:11) and those who first read Ac.

5:15 Did God heal through talismans? Not exactly. God may heal through various devices: Peter's shadow, face cloths and aprons that touched Paul (19:12), and the hem of Jesus' robe (Lk 8:44) were all mediums for healing. However, the healing power was not contained in the device itself, but came only from God.

5:19 The apostles' angelic release from prison probably involved being transported directly to the temple complex, where they preached again (8:39-40).

5:29 Although Christians should, as best they can, obey civil laws, human laws may conflict with God's law (e.g., proclaiming the gospel).

5:34 Gamaliel (Gamaliel I) was Paul's teacher (22:3), a major rabbinic leader, member of the Sanhedrin, and grandson of Hillel, one of major interpreters of the Jewish law during the Roman era.

5:36-37 Many Jewish revolts against Roman rule, some with messianic dimensions, occurred in the first century, but they all failed. Jewish historian Josephus recorded a number of them. He mentioned this Judas the Galilean (Judas of Gamala) who rebelled against Quirinius's census (Lk 2:1; Antiquities 18:1). Both revolts ended in defeat.

6:1-3 These verses are heavily debated and the exact meaning of Hellenistic Jew vs. Hebraic Jew is unclear. The Hellenistic-Hebraic tension perhaps reflected the primary language of those involved. Some Greek-speaking Jews who had converted to Christianity (Paul in chap. 9) were apparently neglected in the Jerusalem church's organization. So that the apostles could devote themselves to prayer and preaching, they appointed seven reputable Greek-speakers to distribute food. Whatever the precise definition, this organization (perhaps the beginning of "deacons") does not imply a late date for the book of Acts, but rather addressed a practical logistical need in the early church at itsoutset.

6:6 The laying on of hands is used in several different ways in Ac (8:17; 13:3; 19:6). Here, as in 13:3, it indicated the recognition that God called particular people for a particular purpose and served to confirm them in their task.

6:11 Stephen's "blasphemous" words reflect themes in his chapter 7 speech: Israel's disobedience, OT fulfillment in Jesus' ministry—including His replacing the temple and law. This would arouse resentment in those not accepting Jesus as Messiah. False witnesses (to rouse the crowd) were called in since Stephen's "blasphemy" was not obvious (6:13).

7:2 Some have argued that Stephen's speech is not authentic, but reflects later Judaic thought (especially after A.D. 70, when the temple was destroyed). However, OT prophets often declared that God cannot be confined to a single space (vv. 49-50 citing Is 66:1-2; Paul in chap. 17).

7:51 Stephen used OT language to condemn Jews for resisting God's Spirit with their uncircumcised hearts and ears (e.g. Lv 26:41; Jr 4:4; 6:10; 9:26; Ezk 44:7,9). Similarly, Paul singled out Jews for relying on outward signs and not having transformed hearts (Rm 2; Gl 5).

7:53 Stephen did not denigrate the law by mentioning angelic mediation (see Gl 3:19; Heb 2:2). He appears to emphasize the law's particular importance because God entrusted its delivery to angels.

7:56 "Son of Man," Jesus' favorite self-designation, interestingly drops from usage in the rest of the NT (suggesting an earlier dating for the book). Jesus considered Himself to be Dn 7:13-14's "son of man." Stephen's claim to see Him alongside God in heaven implied Jesus' divine status and equality with God. It provoked the mob to violence (which overrode any formal trial).

7:58 Saul (Jewish) is not called Paul (Roman) until 13:9. He supported Stephen's death and may have been a member of the Sanhedrin—or simply a young, zealous rabbinic student. Roman citizens (22:28) had three names: Paul (Paulus) would have been his "last name," but his first two were unknown.

8:1 As the persecution of the Jerusalem church did not target the apostles, the focus was probably Hellenistic Jewish Christians—a fact consistent with Jerusalem's continuing to remain Hebraic Christianity's focal point.

8:9 Though Simon Magus was well known in post-apostolic Christianity as a heretic and the founder of Gnosticism, little can be drawn from this brief reference. Although he was baptized, his belief seems inadequate, being fixated on signs and miracles (vv. 13,18). Peter later discerned that Simon's heart was not right before God (v. 21).

8:32-33 Reading aloud was commonly practiced in the ancient world; only centuries later did reading to oneself become more common. The Ethiopian was reading Is 53:7-8 (probably in Greek). Philip pointed to Jesus as the servant who suffered humanity's sins.

8:38-39 Baptism—an outward, visible response accepting the gospel—was apparently by immersion. Later, copyists added the Ethiopian's explicit response of faith (v. 37).

9:1 Saul's murderous anger was no exaggeration. Ananias (v. 13) knew it well (see Php 3:6).

9:2 Saul desired to bring Christians from Damascus to Jerusalem, which remained the center of Judaism. "The Way" (Jesus, Jn 14:6) was a common name for early Christians (19:9,23; 22:4; 24:22).

9:5 How did Saul know who spoke to him? Saul recognized this as Jesus' voice (the divine "Lord" [kyrios], rather than "sir") since: (1) the voice asked, "Why are you persecuting Me?"; (2) Saul knew he was persecuting Christians; (3) there were sensational phenomena (flashing light, Saul got knocked down); (4) Ananias, recognizing Jesus' voice, also used "Lord" (vv. 10,13). The voice spoke in Aramaic (26:14).

9:7 Paul's other conversion accounts (22:6-11; 26:12-18) revealed that his traveling companions heard something but did not recognize what was said since the comments were directed to Paul.

9:10 Ananias was a Christian in the Damascus church (perhaps begun as a result of Pentecost or those fleeing persecution, 8:1). Saul's travels to Damascus to persecute Christians indicates a known Christian community there.

9:17-18 The ordering of events in Saul's conversion may have been altered from the standard pattern so that baptism was the final event (indicating full initiation into the Christian faith).

9:20 Paul's missionary strategy—from start to finish (28:17)—was to begin in Jewish synagogues to present Jesus as "Son of God" (used here as a messianic title for God's unique representative) to Jews.

9:29 Saul, born in Tarsus with Greek as his first language, engaged in discussion with Hellenistic Jews.

9:32 The gospel may have come to Lydda just after Pentecost (2:9-11) following the persecution that scattered believers throughout Judea (8:1) or through Philip's ministry (8:40).

9:43 Tanners were often considered impure because of contact with dead animals. Apparently, either Jewish law became more relaxed on this trade, or Peter was perhaps enjoying freedom from the Jewish law based on liberty in Christ (10:6,32).

10:1 Evangelized by Philip, Caesarea had knowledge of Christianity. Centurions were distinguished by their leadership abilities (although soldiers often extorted and brutalized local populations). The Italian Regiment was probably an auxiliary force of local soldiers (not Italians or Romans), although the original group may have consisted of Italian soldiers.

10:2-3 God-fearers (like Cornelius) respected Jewish customs and beliefs (e.g., food laws, special days), often associating with them but remaining unwilling to become proselytes (which required circumcision). The book of Acts, along with other ancient documents (e.g., an important inscription from Aphrodisias), reveals significant numbers of God-fearers like Cornelius.

10:19 Divine messages were varyingly communicated: the Spirit directly to Peter; an angel to Cornelius; the Lord's vision to Peter earlier (v. 13).

10:28 Contact with Gentiles meant risking ceremonial uncleanness. Peter indicated that his vision taught him that these standards had been superseded.

10:34-35 God's impartiality means that He does not treat any group of people differently. He seeks out thosewho humbly respond to His grace, whether Jew or Gentile. Sincerity is the result, not the cause, of God's grace.

10:44-47 Belief, receiving the Spirit, and baptism are again equated with "conversion." The Jewish believers who were with Peter expressed surprise that Gentiles had received the Holy Spirit (as at Pentecost, 11:16-17). Salvation is extended fully to Gentiles.

11:1-3 Some Jews emphasized circumcision for all, fearing that association with uncircumcised men would lead to ritual uncleanness. These men were not pleased that Gentile believers were receiving the Spirit. Peter and Paul would confront this recurring source of conflict in the early church.

11:20 Cypriots and Cyrenians (Greek-speaking converts) evangelized Antioch's Hellenists, making it the center for Gentile mission and the church that sent Paul (13:1-3).

11:25 After conversion (c. A.D. 32–33) and initial preaching, Paul withdrew to Arabia (until c. 46; see Gl 1:17) and then to Tarsus and Antioch. He fades from the picture in the book while Peter is again highlighted.

11:26 The Antioch believers were first called "Christians" (little Christs), probably labeled by Romans as those sufficiently recognizable by beliefs and actions in keeping with their Leader.

11:28 A Jerusalem prophet, Agabus (who reappears in 21:10), predicted famine (probably A.D. 46–47). Claudius's reign (A.D. 41–54) was filled with numerous famines throughout the empire (see Suetonius, Claudius 18; Josephus, Antiquities 20).

11:30 Despite objections that the early church was strictly guided by the Spirit, elders/overseers (by necessity) held formal positions very early on, as did deacons (see 14:23; 15:2,4,6,22,23; 16:4; 20:17; 21:18; Php 1:1; 1 Tm 3:1-13; 4:14; 5:17,19; Ti 1:5-9). Appointed human leaders and the Spirit's leadership are not incompatible (see note on 6:1-3).

12:1-2 King Herod (Agrippa I) ruled from A.D. 37–44. His attack seems focused upon the apostles in Jerusalem. He killed James, the "Son of Thunder" (Mk 3:17) who was John's brother. No reason is mentioned. This anticipates further persecution and Peter's threatened execution (v. 6).

12:6-10 Peter's rescue is different from the previous one, being led out by an angel past the guards. Used to seeing visions, Peter only afterwards realized he had been rescued.

12:15 Some of those inside thought that Rhoda was seeing things, while others thought that she was seeing the angel or ghost of the executed Peter. Peter's persistence led them to answer the door and see that he was, in fact, still alive, having been rescued by God.

12:17 James (Jesus' brother) was not a follower of Jesusduring His ministry (Jn 7:5); he became a believer upon Jesus' resurrection (Ac 1:14; 1 Co 15:7) and later emerged as a leader in the Jerusalem church (Ac 21:18; Gl 2:19).

12:23 Herod Agrippa's arrogance resulted in God justly striking him down. Estimations of the disease range from appendicitis to poisoning to an intestinal blockage. Josephus also recounted this incident (Antiquities 19).

13:1 Prophets and teachers were likely functions (possibly offices) in the early church. Teachers continued the apostolic function of transmitting the message of Jesus (6:2); prophets conveyed divine revelation (reporting what God brought to mind), either interpreting the OT or giving new insights (11:27-28). Teachers are only mentioned here in Acts, although the function of teacher is known elsewhere in the NT (e.g., 1 Co 12:28,29; Eph 4:11; 1 Tm 1:7; 2:7; 3:2; 2 Tm 1:11; 2:24).

13:4 Paul's three missionary journeys began in Antioch, a center for Christianity (especially for Gentile evangelization). The exception (third journey) ended with Paul's arrest in Jerusalem (chap. 21). Paul's letters do not provide a travelogue; they deal with specific issues in the churches.

13:6 Peter's confrontation with a magician (Simon; chap. 8) parallels Saul's confrontation in Cyprus. Scholars have noted Peter-Paul parallels in Ac: healing a lame man (3:2-8 and 14:8-10; cp. 5:15 and 19:12), exorcising (5:16 and 16:18), being divinely freed from prison (12:6-11 and 16:25-26), receiving the Spirit by the laying on of hands (8:17 and 19:6), and raising the dead (9:36-41 and 20:9-12). Though not parallel lives, they experienced similar events related to the spread of early Christianity, with Paul continuing and expanding the work the original apostles began.

13:8 Bar-Jesus (v. 6) is now called Elymas without explanation. It has been suggested that Elymas, like Bar-Jesus, was an Aramaic word meaning "sorcerer."

13:9 From here Paul is no longer called Saul (except when recounting his conversion in chaps. 22 and 26) since his missionary ventures moved him outside of a more distinctly Jewish context and into the larger Greco-Roman world.

13:13 John Mark (12:12,25), nephew of Barnabas, left Paul and Barnabas—probably under unfortunate circumstances, and Paul refused to take him on the next missionary journey (15:37-38). The Jerusalem church met in the home of John Mark's mother, Mary.

13:14 Antioch in Pisidia actually refers to Antioch near (not "in") Pisidia. Pisidia then was a region of the Roman province of Galatia; Antioch was actually located in the adjoining region of Phrygia. The Greek phrasing in the best manuscripts makes this clear.

13:15 Despite the debate regarding OT canon formation, "the Law and the Prophets"—with the third part, "the Psalms" (Lk 24:44)—were likely fixed. Josephus (Against Apion 1) mentions "22 books," and 4 Ezra 14 (c. A.D. 100) mentions "24 books"—perhaps referring to the same body of Scripture. Today these same books are categorized in such a way that there are 39. In the listing of 22 books, the 12 minor prophets were counted as one book. The following pairs of books were counted as one book each: Jdg and Ru, 1 and 2 Sm, 1 and 2 Kg, 1 and 2 Ch, Ezr and Neh, Jr and Lm.

13:16-41 Paul's first public speech recorded in Ac took place in a Jewish synagogue. This speech was probably representative of Paul's evangelistic style: Jesus' coming fulfilled God's promises as revealed in the OT (v. 23), and His resurrection confirmed His identity (v. 33).

13:46-47 There is no anti-Semitism here. The Gospel writers emphasized that Jesus proclaimed the gospel to the Jews first. Luke reinforced this in the book of Ac. Paul and Barnabas recognized their duty to bring the good news to Jews first. When the Jews rejected the gospel, Paul and Barnabas took the message to the Gentiles (anticipated by Is 49:6). Gentile believers received the good news with great joy. Rejection of the gospel by Paul's kinsmen was a source of profound grief for him (Rm 9–11).

14:11 Confusion stems from the fact that some Lystrans spoke Lycaonian—one of many indigenous languages that continued to be used in this region until the second century.

14:12 Lystra apparently had a mythological tradition of previous visitations by Greek gods—such as Zeus and Hermes (Roman: Jupiter and Mercury)—whom they continued to worship (v. 13). Barnabas may have been equated with Zeus and Paul with Hermes because (1) Barnabas was the leader of the group (Zeus was Hermes's father and leader of the Greek pantheon),(2) Barnabas appeared to be a more imposing figure than Paul, or (3) the messenger god Hermes may have more aptly described Paul, the group's spokesman.

14:15-18 Paul used arguments based on natural theology in his speech to the pagans—arguments derived from God's self-revelation in creation (cp. similarities with 17:16-32). This approach was especially fitting because these pagans saw their (Greco-Roman) gods as part of nature. Similarly, in Rm 1:18-32, Paul addressed a mixed audience with the same kind of arguments.

14:19 In 2 Co 11:23-5, Paul may be referring to this event of stoning—a severe bodily trauma (he was left for dead).

14:21 The churches founded in this first journey were all in the province of Galatia (and most likely whom his letter to the Galatians addressed). The problems addressed in Galatians were consistent with the reaction Paul and Barnabas incited when evangelizing there.

14:23 Paul and Barnabas appointed elders—a necessary function within the early church (20:17). There is no reason to doubt this development.

15:1 After Paul reported God's blessing upon Gentile evangelization (14:27), some came from Judea, teaching circumcision to become a Christian. They were likely people without direct or official authorization, which prompted a meeting in Jerusalem with the apostles, who appeared unaware of the controversy.

15:2 Though some doubt the historicity of this Jerusalem meeting, the conditions depicted suggest otherwise: (1) these issues had already been raised regarding the conversion of Jews and then Gentiles in the early church, (2) the response Paul and Barnabas elicited on their first journey, (3) though shifting the missionary center from Jerusalem to Antioch, Jerusalem remained the mother church, as Paul indicated in his later visit (chap. 21).

15:5-6 The central issue was whether Gentiles had to be circumcised and keep the Mosaic law (become Jewish first) to become Christians: the first Christians (and Jesus) were Jews, and Jews first evangelized Gentiles. However, faith in Christ was the common criterion for salvation: Peter witnessed Gentile conversion by faith (vv. 7-11); Paul and Barnabas concurred (v. 12); James noted OT precedent (vv. 16-18, citing Am 9:11-12).

15:20 Although salvation for all is by faith (v. 19), restrictions were introduced (v. 29; 21:25) either to provide Christian Jews and Gentiles with a common basis for contact or, more likely, to lift up Gentile moral standards by prohibiting practices associated with pagan temple worship (idolatry, sexual immorality, and sacrifices of animals).

15:28 Luke underscored the apostles' recognition of the relationship between the Holy Spirit and human initiative in arriving at this important decision. Throughout the NT, there is a complex interplay of divine guidance working together with human action that accomplished God's purpose. The complex interplay between divine guidance and human action is harmonious when humans (as here) humbly and trustingly respond to the Spirit's guidance.

15:36,39-40 This marks Paul's second missionary journey, parting with Barnabas over taking John Mark (13:13). Paul took Silas, who had helped take the Jerusalem letter to Antioch (vv. 23-29). Paul later reconciled with John Mark (Co 4:10; Phm 24; 2 Tm 4:11).

16:1,3 At Lystra, Paul took Timothy (Rm 16:21; 1 Co 4:17; 16:10; 2 Co 1:1,19; Php 1:1; 2:19; Co 1:1; 1 Th 1:1; 3:2,6; 2 Th 1:1; 1 Tm 1:2,18; 6:20; 2 Tm 1:1; Phm 1) as a protégé. Timothy was the son of a Jewish mother and Greek father. Being a Jew to the Jews (1 Co 9:20), Paul had Timothy (who was half-Jewish) circumcised for the sake of contextualized witness to Jews.

16:6-8 Paul and his companions passed through Phrygian Galatia. They were prevented by the Spirit from speaking the word of God in Asia. The hindrance need not have taken place earlier, as some have thought. The Greek syntax indicates this could have taken place as they completed their journey through Phrygian Galatia and entered into Asia. Mysia was a part of the province of Asia, so this verse may indicate that although Paul and his companions traveled through Asia, they were not permitted to preach; or it may have taken a more narrow definition of Asia based on earlier usage, distinguishing it from Mysia. They were also prevented by the Spirit of Jesus from going north to Bithynia. The purpose was to get them to Troas in as direct a way as possible.

16:10 Here begins the first "we" section (see the Introduction), indicating that Luke joined the journey in Troas.

16:12 Philippi was a leading city in Macedonia and aRoman colony where many veterans lived; Thessalonica was Macedonia's capital; Amphipolis was the lead city of its administrative district. (Some have amended the text based on later Latin manuscripts to indicate that Philippi was in Macedonia's first district.)

16:13 "Place of prayer" indicated where Philippi's Jews gathered. Apparently the Jewish population of Philippi was too small to have a synagogue. Ten males were required to have a synagogue.

16:14 Lydia, indicating a personal name (or that she was from the city of Lydia), apparently was a prominent woman (as she sold purple cloth, which had important uses in the empire).

16:15 Household baptisms are mentioned in Ac (11:14; 18:8); what was involved is not known. Probably the household leader converted and other members (adults and servants) responded similarly. Faith appears to precede such baptism (v. 31).

16:17-18 The fortune-telling slave girl (v. 16) was not inaccurate in what she shouted; rather, Paul was bothered by her apparently uncontrolled manner (and that her prophetic utterances profited her owner).

16:21 Practicing various religions was not in itself illegal in the empire, but the Romans greatly feared civil disturbances. Any unrest was usually severely crushed.

16:27 If their prisoners escaped, Roman guards would likely pay the same penalty as the prisoner.

16:35 Some speculate that since the magistrates showed no awareness of either the earthquake or the jailer's conversion, v. 35 naturally follows immediately after 24. The intervening verses are therefore considered to be a later insertion from a body of mythological literature involving natural phenomena. However, this is an argument from silence. The magistrates' action to release Paul and Silas may very well have been in response to the earthquake and its possible consequences.

16:37 Paul's Roman citizenship is first mentioned here (22:25-29; 23:27; 25:11), though understandably not in his letters since Paul only invoked his citizenship at places where his legal rights were threatened and due process was ignored. Paul's citizenship was probably registered in Tarsus, but citizens also often carried small wooden tablets like "passports" (some of which have been found) to prove their identification. Paul may well have carried such a document, producing it at key times.

17:6 Turning "the world upside down" was a phrase used of Jewish nationalists causing riots in the empire. Here it referred to the effects of spreading the gospel.

17:7 Declaring another king besides Caesar was a serious crime; Romans feared any competing ruler. Jesus was condemned by Pilate for this (note the inscription on the cross, Lk 23:38).

17:16 Athens was a center of intellectual, philosophical, and religious discussion. Many of its monuments were connected to pagan worship (e.g., the Parthenon), which greatly dismayed Paul, who knew the one true God and His Son Jesus Christ.

17:18-19 Two leading philosophical schools—Epicureans and Stoics—attracted many followers who discussed contemporary issues. Epicureans were practical materialists, believing that gods were uninvolved in human affairs, that humans should pursue pleasure, and that there was no afterlife/judgment. Stoics were pantheists (God was the Soul of the universe) and determinists (virtue consisted in dispassionately enduring life's inevitable hardships). Some listeners—with noticeable arrogance—considered Paul a pseudo-intellectual, a "seed-picker," picking up a few insignificant ideas here and there.

17:19,22 Paul's informal speeches and conversations in Athens resulted in an invitation to address the Areopagus—originally a court. Paul was not on trial in a formal sense. At this time in the history of Athens the Areopagus was a place where new ideas where heard and tested.

17:22-31 A model apologist, Paul developed an argument (natural theology) based on God's self-revelation in nature (natural revelation; see Rm 1:19-32) to build bridges—and to challenge prevailing beliefs. He complimented the Athenians' evident religious inclinations, drew upon observable data from the natural world regarding the God's nature, identified this God for them, established a relationship between God and humans, announced the coming judgment by God of the world, and even marshaled evidence from the pagan (Stoic) poets for his analysis (Epimenides; Aratus, who hailed from Paul's own Cilicia).

17:23 Although no inscription with the singular "to an unknown god" has been found, Paul likely saw such an inscription in Athens. Many parallels exist in inscriptions and literary writers to unknown gods in case any gods were overlooked.

17:27 Paul proclaimed in terms understandable to Athenians that God was near to each human, who (through God-given faculties) could get some indication of who God is.

17:34 Though the response to Paul was less dramatic than elsewhere (partly due to the disparity of Paul's worldview with that of the Athenians) and no church was apparently founded, some of the converts included Dionysius (a member of the prestigious Areopagus) and Damaris (a woman of distinction, being singled out by name). Some charge that Paul's visit was a dismal failure, prompting Paul to change his methods. However, this is most likely incorrect because: (1) this is an argument from silence; (2) Paul had utilized a similar tactic—which appealed to natural revelation—at Lystra (14:15-17); (3) why would Luke have devoted so much space to a failed approach?

18:2 Aquila and Priscilla had recently been expelled from Rome with the other Jews. Although sorting out the evidence for dating is complex, in A.D. 41 Claudius prohibited Jews from gathering together (as historian Dio Cassius observed). In A.D. 49 he expelled them altogether, probably because the earlier measures did not work (according to the historian Suetonius). Paul then arrived in Corinth about A.D. 50.

18:3 A "tentmaker" worked with leather; Paul may have worked with a variety of materials, including goats' hair cloth made in Cilicia, Paul's home region. Later rabbinic writing confirms the importance of a teacher having a trade or other means of support. In Greco-Roman circles, trades and trade associations were deemed important.

18:4 An inscription "synagogue of the Hebrews" (i.e., Jews) was found in Corinth, dated probably after Paul.

18:12 The date of Gallio's time as proconsul of Achaia (Corinth was its capital) is a firm one in NT chronology. An inscription dated to A.D. 52 refers to him when he was no longer proconsul. Thus, Gallio was installed as proconsul in early A.D. 51 and Paul appeared before him later that year. Gallio noted nothing that defied Rome's tolerant religious laws.

18:18 Paul's going to Jerusalem (chap. 22) may have included completing the Nazirite vow, giving his cut hair as an offering. Although unusual for Paul, especially outside of Judea (21:26), it was consistent with Paul as a faithful Jew in the midst of Gentile missionary efforts.

18:19-20 Paul's visit probably lasted less than a week. His initial visit to the synagogue in Ephesus was apparently without incident. The discussions he had with the Jews showed promise. They urged him to stay. He promised to return if God willed. Paul would stay in Ephesus (19:10) longer than most other cities. The work there would impact not only Ephesus itself but the entire province of Asia. Paul had been prevented from staying in Asia earlier (16:6). He gave evidence of having envisioned an extensive work in Ephesus because of its strategic location. Paul planned and strategized but was under the authority and guidance of the Holy Spirit. He would come to Ephesus on God's timetable.

18:22-23 Paul greeted the Jerusalem church, having gone down from there to Antioch, marking the second missionary journey's end and the third journey's beginning (see textual footnote on v. 22).

18:24-26 Being from Alexandria (the most important city of letters in the Greco-Roman world), Apollos is depicted as learned and eloquent. Christianity had already reached Alexandria by this time. As with the Ephesians Paul encounters in chapter 19, Apollos's knowledge was deficient; he knew only John's baptism and had not yet received the Spirit or been baptized into Christ. Apollos was then given more accurate instruction.

19:9 Perhaps Tyrannus owned the hall or regularly taught there. The name Tyrannus is known in inscriptions from Ephesus during this time, although the actual lecture hall has not been discovered.

19:10 After three months of regularly speaking in the Ephesian synagogue (v. 8), Paul spent another two years teaching there; this had a significant impact throughout the Asian province. Some believe many events unrecorded here but taking place during this time may be referred to elsewhere in Paul's letters, including temporary imprisonments and beatings (2 Co 1:8-10; 11:23-25).

19:11-12 God's power through faith was at work in these healings, even if physical devices were a part of the process, see note on 5:15.

19:13-14 The magical tradition of the ancient world often involved invoking names of divine figures (as magical papyri and amulets indicate). There are numerous Jewish magical texts that attest to the interplay of magic and Judaism. Here some itinerant Jewish exorcists, apparently traveling around the countryside in search of money for performing magical acts, stumbled upon the (unsuccessful) use of Jesus' name.

19:19 Ephesus had a reputation for magical practices so notable that magical texts were called "Ephesian letters" (Athenagoras). When these magicians became believers, they burned their magical texts.

19:21 As in Rm 15:23-29, Paul believed his missionary work in the East was done—and after taking the collection to Jerusalem, he proceeded to Rome and possibly as far west as Spain.

19:22 Though disputed, some think that the Erastus here is the same Erastus mentioned in Rm 16:23. Indeed, it is possible that this same Erastus is mentioned in a Corinthian inscription. However, it should be noted that Erastus was a popular name at that time.

19:24,27 The Artemis cult here was part of a larger Greek Artemis cult (the "Great mother"). Small silver artifacts honoring Artemis have been found in Ephesus. In the 1950s, several large Artemis statues—with clear fertility associations—were also discovered here. Typical in the ancient world, money was to be made or lost by those associated with the cult, and Paul's preaching clearly jeopardized their practices (vv. 25-26). This temple of Artemis (its foundations dating to the eighth century B.C.) was considered one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. The temple eventually fell into disrepute and ruin—what these Ephesians wanted to avoid (v. 27); it was rediscovered in the nineteenth century, with an altar uncovered in 1965.

19:29 The Ephesian amphitheater (seating 24,000) was thoroughly remodeled in the first century A.D.—a suitable place for a large crowd.

19:33-34 Wanting to distance themselves from the controversy Paul and his followers caused, the Jews shoved forward one of their own, Alexander (a Hellenistic Jew, as indicated by his name), to offer an apology on their behalf. Since the Jews would have had the same view of the Artemis cult as Paul and his followers, the Ephesian crowd clearly rejected him when it was recognized that he was a Jew.

19:35 Perhaps the Artemis cult in Ephesus was started when a meteorite fell there, or maybe the reference to falling from heaven included any divine cult that was thought to originate with the gods.

19:40 The city clerk (v. 35) urged the disbanding of the disorderly gathering, appealing to Rome's fear of public unrest and its decisive response to it. No mention of further legal action indicates that Paul and his followers did nothing unlawful; they simply upset those profiting from the Artemis cult.

20:3,6 This plot by Jewish opponents prompted Paul to change travel plans from taking a ship from Greece (Achaia) to Syria to traveling overland from Greece to Macedonia, where he got a boat in Philippi.

20:5 The "we" narrative resumes (to v. 15).

20:9-10 Like Peter (9:36-41), Paul apparently raised a person from the dead (though, possibly, he was merely stunned).

20:16 Miletus was 30 miles from Ephesus, so how did going to Miletus and then summoning the Ephesian elders save him time, since he wished to get to Jerusalem for Pentecost? Perhaps Paul wanted to avoided Ephesus because, among other reasons: (1) there may not have been a ship going to Ephesus for some time (21:3); and (2) further unrest would have been generated by his presence (19:23-41).

20:17 Ephesian church leaders were called elders here, but overseers in verse 28. These apparently interchangeable terms (Ti 1:5,7) designated a functional and formal title of leadership in the Ephesian church.

20:18 Although Paul's speech differed from his others in Ac, note that (1) this was the only speech delivered to already-believing Christians; (2) it had many parallels with language in Pauline letters (e.g., reference to his serving the Lord, his persecution, his not shrinking from teaching them, his ministry to both Jews and Greeks, the need for repentance, his not caring about his own life, and language regarding finishing the course, etc.).

20:25 Either Paul realized things might go badly for him in Jerusalem, or he had no intention of returning to this part of the Mediterranean. Instead, after Jerusalem he intended to head to Rome and beyond.

20:28 Reference to redemption through Jesus' blood (i.e., death) is unique in Ac, though reflecting Paul's language in his letters (e.g., Rm 3:25; 5:9; Eph 2:13).

20:35 This saying ("it is more blessed to give than to receive") is not found in the Gospels—only here—although it is like some of Jesus' sayings (Lk 6:38). Obviously, Jesus said more than what the Gospels record, and some of the agrapha (sayings of Jesus not included in the Gospels, such as this one) originated with Jesus.

21:1 This third "we" section extends until verse 18.

21:4 The Christians in Tyre had knowledge from the Holy Spirit that Paul would have trouble in Jerusalem, and hence he should not go—though Paul was convinced he must go (v. 13). Unlike the authority of Christ's apostles, the NT prophetic gift—reporting what God brings to mind—was not infallible, but needed to be weighed and sifted. While the revelation that Paul would have trouble in Jerusalem was accurate, Agabus misapplied it by saying Paul should not go there. Paul knew he had to go (20:23).

21:8 Philip—likely called "the evangelist" to distinguish him from other contemporary Philips of the time—was one of those designated to serve in the Jerusalem church (6:5). Later, they apparently went their own way; Philip settled with his prophetess daughters in Caesarea. Some have thought he was one of the original Twelve (Mt 10:3; Mk 3:18; Lk 6:14).

21:10 Here Agabus (11:28) explicitly announced Paul would fall into Gentile hands in Jerusalem (21:30-36, where he was delivered by Gentiles out of Jewish hands).

21:18 While it is not clear how many original apostles were still in Jerusalem (they do not appear in the ensuing events), James is noted as the Jerusalem church leader.

21:19-25 Paul told James and his elders of God's work among the Gentiles. Although they glorified God in response, they claimed thousands (lit. "myriads") of Jews had believed (something of an overstatement since Jerusalem had 25,000–50,000 inhabitants). These were zealous for the law, reflecting a more restrictive (Pharisee-like) view of it. They heard that Paul taught dispersion Jews not to follow the Mosaic law. Thus, they were concerned that Paul display devotion to the law by taking four men into the temple and paying for their Nazirite vow—although this action seemed to confuse matters in light of what Paul had done among the Gentiles. James was unfortunately apparently succumbing to pressures from those in Jerusalem and setting Paul up for betrayal (v. 27).

21:28-29 Paul was apparently with Trophimus, an Ephesian (20:4; 21:29). Despite his views on the optional nature of circumcision, Paul, a Jew, was not consciously ignoring it. He well knew this would have endangered Trophimus's life. This is attested by temple inscriptions that put Gentiles on notice that they would have only themselves to blame for their deaths if they transgressed the boundary of the sanctuary. Josephus (chap. 15, Antiquities of the Jews) describes this inscription. In 1877, two archaeologists discovered what has come to be called the Soreg Inscription.

21:31-32 The Romans had a cohort of soldiers stationed in the Antonia Fortress, located on the west side of the temple area, for just such eventualities. They desired to keep peace in Jerusalem and would restore peace at the first sign of trouble.

21:37-38 The Roman commander thought Paul was an Egyptian rebel, an unnamed messianic pretender who, according to Josephus, had gathered a number of people at the Mount of Olives to attack Jerusalem (c. A.D. 54). The Romans put them to flight, but the leader escaped. This commander thought the rebel perhaps had reappeared. Instead, Paul spoke to the commander in Greek, his native language, entirely appropriate and to be expected for the Hellenistic Jew that he was. However, he also knew Aramaic and addressed the crowd in that language, not because they would not possibly have known Greek, but because the politically sensitive situation demanded use of the "native" language (v. 40; 22:2).

21:39 Paul gave an apt, accurate presentation of himself: a Jew by ethnicity and religion, a citizen of Tarsus in Cilicia, a city of importance in the Greco-Roman world (which accounted for his knowledge of Greek), noting later his Roman citizenship (22:27-29).

22:3 Paul offered four further facts in temporal sequential order: He was born in Tarsus of Cilicia, brought up in this city, taught at the feet of Gamaliel according to the strictest order of the patriarchal law, and zealous for God. Was "this city" Tarsus or Jerusalem? Most scholars interpret it as Jerusalem since Paul apparently spent much of his youth there (26:4), had relatives there (23:16), and was educated as a Pharisee and hence in Jerusalem.

22:9 Acts 9:7 says Paul's traveling companions heard the voice but did not see anyone, but here Paul himself said that they did not hear the voice of the One who was speaking to him. The grammar here supports the idea that Paul's traveling companions may have heard the voice but did not understand it—or at least did not understand it as the voice of the Lord speaking to him. The charge that Paul flagrantly contradicted himself is unnecessarily uncharitable and unlikely given Luke's concern for precision.

22:12 Paul indicated that Ananias was a devout Jew who followed the law, which is confirmed in v. 14.

22:18-21 Paul's vision in the temple was related only here, though still consistent with his treatment in Jerusalem (9:26-29). Mention of ministry to Gentiles revived the crowd's ire.

22:28 In this episode, in which Paul relied upon his Roman citizenship so that he was not punished without due process, we gain insight into how citizenship was secured. In the first century, a number of different ways for gaining citizenship were opened up, including the payment of large bribes to appropriate officials (equal to as much as a year's wages), the emancipation of slaves, and the granting of citizenship to entire cities. Other means included people performing honorable or meritorious service for the empire. Whereas the centurion had purchased his citizenship, Paul had inherited his. One of Paul's ancestors may have performed such service, including having served in the army or having provided supplies for the army, such as making tents.

22:30 This verse indicates that Paul was either released from his chains or released from Roman imprisonment while the Sanhedrin convened in order to try Paul on charges regarding Jewish law. In either case, he remained under the protection of the Romans.

23:1 The use of "conscience" here was in a manner similar to the way the word is currently used, that is, as an internal judge of good or bad behavior.

23:5 Paul's failure to recognize the high priest (who presided over the proceedings) included: (1) not knowing the current high priest, (2) not thinking the command to be struck was appropriate behavior for the high priest, (3) not seeing clearly because of his possibly poor eyesight. Paul's comment, however, may have been ironic, actually condemning the high priest's actions.

23:6 Paul's belief in the resurrection of the dead divided his accusers. The Pharisees, like Paul, believed in the resurrection, while the Sadducees, of which the high priest Ananias was a member, did not. Resurrection was fundamental to Paul's theology, as his letters (e.g., 1 Co 15) and Ac (e.g., 24:15; 26:6-8; 28:20) indicate. Some scribes associated with the Pharisees claimed to find no basis for charges against Paul (23:9).

23:8 Scholars acknowledge that the Sadducees did not believe in resurrection. Some think that this passage indicates that they did not believe in an angelic or spiritual intermediate state between death and resurrection either. The Greek syntax indicates that the Sadducees were said here not to believe in all three—resurrection, angels, or spirits, in other words, any spiritual state or spiritual beings—while the Pharisees acknowledged the existence of them all.

23:16 It is unclear how many of Paul's family members were in Jerusalem (vv. 17,22). The term "son of Paul's sister" could indicate a man in his twenties or even older, although it is possible that he was younger (see v. 19, where the commander took him by the hand). It is likely that Paul's sister also resided in Jerusalem. The fact that this relative of Paul may have been present during the plotting against Paul's life (the grammar can be taken this way) has led some scholars to wonder whether Paul's family itself may have been strongly opposed to him.

23:23 Paul was to be accompanied by two centurions and troops, including infantrymen, cavalry, and a group of soldiers over which there is debate, since the word used for them is found only here in the NT. Scholars speculate that they may have been spearmen or javelin throwers.

23:24 Felix, the governor, originally a slave, became procurator of Judea in A.D. 52, succeeding Cumanus. He was eventually removed from office c. A.D. 59 for bungling Jewish-Gentile conflicts in Caesarea. He was brother to one of the most important civil servants of the time.

23:25-30 How did the author get a copy of this letter (with standard greetings, body, and closing)? Most likely, Luke heard it when it was read before Felix (and Paul) in Caesarea (v. 34); at least Paul heard it and communicated its contents to Luke. Possibly, Luke reconstructed the letter from knowledge of the events or saw the official documents for Paul's trial.

23:27 Some have questioned whether the commander had enhanced his account by claiming to have learned that Paul was a Roman citizen before he rescued him, and thus this knowledge served as the basis of the rescue. The grammar of the passage, however, indicates that the commander rescued Paul and then learned he was a Roman citizen, which is exactly what happened in the account.

23:31 A Roman road connected Jerusalem with Antipatris—a distance of 35 miles. This was not too great a distance to travel in a single night; there is substantial evidence that much longer distances were traveled by troops. Also, the trip from Jerusalem to Antipatris would have been downhill.

23:35 Felix told Paul he would give him a hearing when his accusers arrived, and then (as the grammar indicates) he ordered that Paul be kept in custody in the procurator's palace, originally built by Herod the Great.

24:1 Luke's report of the case against Paul followed standard Roman legal procedure. Included in this was the prosecution brought by a "rhetor" (lawyer). Tertullus (a well-known Roman name) may have been a Jew (v. 6), although he referred to the Jews (in vv. 5,9) more objectively. He delivered his speech, though abbreviated by Luke, with the conventional concessions to Felix.

24:5-7 Tertullus accused Paul of far more than simply bringing a Gentile into the temple: he was, the Jews charged, an agitator of Jews throughout the empire, a ringleader of the Nazarene sect (on this, cp. 3:1), and a desecrater of the temple. Although the first two would have aroused a Roman governor's curiosity and suspicion, only the last would have had real significance. Tertullus implied that the Jewish authorities in Jerusalem would have been able to handle the situation if the Roman commander, Lysias, had not interfered. Perhaps so, but this clearly glossed over Paul's innocence and that he would have been unfairly convicted by a lynch-mob.

24:11 The twelve days Paul mentioned did not include the time he spent in Caesarea.

24:14 "The Way" is used throughout Ac as a self-designation by Christians (9:2; 19:9,23; 24:22), while Jews apparently referred to them as a sect of Judaism. The spread of Christianity to the Gentiles eventually led to its independence from and rejection by the Jews.

24:17 The charitable gifts and offerings Paul brought to his nation probably refer to the collection that he had been gathering for the Jerusalem church. Although the collection is significantly mentioned in Paul's letters (e.g., Rm 15:25-6; 1 Co 16:3; 2 Co 8:1–9:15; cp. Gl 2:10), it is not emphasized in Ac.

24:22 How Felix gained his knowledge of Christianity is uncertain—perhaps through his wife, Drusilla, the daughter of Herod Agrippa (v. 24), but we cannot be sure. Just as likely is that, as procurator for over five years, he had heard about this new movement.

24:25 Felix was not known for his righteous practices, including taking Drusilla from her first husband Azizus. Paul possibly focused his comments regarding righteousness, self-control, and the coming judgment specifically on Felix.

24:26 Further evidence of Felix's corruption was his desire for a bribe—even though he was both attracted to and repulsed by what Paul told him. Though bribery was illegal according to Roman law, it occurred in many cases.

24:27 Paul remained in Roman custody (particularly Felix's) for two years. Given the reason he was relieved of office (23:26), Felix understandably wanted to curry Jewish favor. As a result, he left Paul (who committed no punishable offense) in prison. Festus became the new proconsul c. A.D. 59–62.

25:1-3 The new governor went from Caesarea to Jerusalem, no doubt to get a sense of the most important Jewish city in the realm. While there, Jewish leaders made their case to him so that they could get the chance to try Paul in Jerusalem. The real reason was so that they could ambush and kill him.

25:6-8 This passage encapsulates the conflict between Paul and the Jewish leaders to date. Paul was accused of many different charges that he refuted by pointing out that he had not violated Jewish law, the temple, or Roman law.

25:9-11 When Festus suggested, as a favor to the Jews, that Paul be tried in Jerusalem, Paul invoked his right as a Roman citizen to appeal directly to Caesar. Not all appeals to Caesar were granted by local governors, but Paul's was. The Caesar himself did not always hear cases, depending upon the level of involvement of the individual emperor. Nevertheless, this was an avenue open to a citizen. Festus was probably glad to shift this long-standing case to another jurisdiction—and to relieve himself of Jewish pressure (26:32).

25:13 Herod Agrippa II—the last of the Herodian rulers—visited Caesarea with his sister Bernice. His territory generally expanded during his lifetime (he died near the end of the century). Bernice had a checkered sexual and marital history. The reason that Herod was brought into this situation by Festus was not only because they happened to be in the area, but because Herod had responsibility for the temple and appointing the high priest, among other duties. He would have had an interest in the charges against Paul as one who had violated the temple.

25:19 Festus's description of the heart of the matter—especially as an outsider would look on it—was apt. Disagreements between the Jews and Paul concerned whether a certain dead man, Jesus, had been resurrected.

25:25-27 Festus had not publicly made known that he could find nothing against Paul. Festus intended to have Paul tried in Jerusalem when Paul made his appeal to Caesar (v. 9). Once the appeal to Caesar had been made, Festus was free to admit that the charges were groundless (and perplexing). Festus hoped Agrippa (perhaps because of Agrippa's ties to the Jews and his responsibilities regarding the temple) would help him send an informed letter with Paul, specifying the charges.

26:3 Perhaps Agrippa had a reputation for being informed about Jewish customs and practices (and the controversies they aroused), or perhaps Paul was simply addressing him in an honorable way befitting his position in order to get a fair hearing.

26:5 Paul may have been emphasizing the strictness of the Pharisees to highlight his own background, but calling it the strictest sect (even in relation to theEssenes or Sadducees) is consistent with Josephus's descriptions of these groups (Antiquities 18, where he said Pharisees shed themselves of all luxury).

26:10-11 What Paul did to oppose Jerusalem Christians is not known (except being at the stoning of Stephen). Clearly he did more than is recorded in Ac, including going to foreign cities to persecute Christians (chap. 9 gives one instance of this).

26:14 Only here are we told that the heavenly voice spoke in a Semitic language—most likely, Aramaic—which is consistent with Paul being addressed by his Jewish name Saul. The Lord's words—"It is hard for you to kick against the goads"—were not Aramaic, but probably reflected the classical literature of the time. Though some suggest that Paul was troubled by a bad conscience over persecuting Christians, more likely it indicated that Paul should not resist the divine force moving him in another direction.

26:16-18 These verses were not included in earlier conversion accounts (chaps. 9; 22), even though mention of Paul's ministry to the Gentiles was declared to Ananias (9:15; 22:15). Many scholars think the essence of Paul's mission was given to him during his conversion experience. This would have included his mission to the Gentiles, as well as to his own people, even if they would both ultimately reject him. Nevertheless, God had promised Paul his protection (26:22).

26:22-23 Paul insisted his message of Christ's suffering, death, and resurrection did not go beyond what was found within the OT itself. He probably had in mind passages such as Is 52:13–53:12.

26:24 Paul's interruption can be interpreted variously: (1) Festus may have thought that Paul had lost his mind because of what he was saying. (2) With reference to Paul's knowledge, it may mean that Paul's learning or writings had driven him to speculation beyond what Festus as a judge of the facts could accept. (3) Jewish sacred writings—the OT—had driven Paul to conclusions that went beyond a naturalistic worldview. In any case, Festus was not willing to follow Paul to his logical conclusion. Perhaps Paul had moved outside Festus's area of competence. He was a judge and not a theologian. Or Festus may have seen where Paul was going but was not prepared to adjust his life to the truth that Paul presented so compellingly. The emotion behind Festus's interruption may be a clue that he was understanding more than he wanted to.

26:26 Paul's declaration that what he was talking about did not take place "in a corner" indicates Paul's public and open preaching of the gospel in synagogues and elsewhere—unlike some other religious groups of the time (e.g., Mediterranean mystery religions). Only two decades had passed since Jesus' arrest, conviction, crucifixion, and resurrection. A number of eyewitnesses of these events were available to give testimony to what they had experienced.

26:27 Paul asked Agrippa whether he believed the prophets, implying they had foretold Jesus' coming. If he was a good Jew, Agrippa should then have accepted the prophets and the implications regarding Jesus.

26:28 Before Paul could go further, Agrippa interrupted Paul—perhaps in a sarcastic or jesting manner, out of anger, or seriously (in light of Paul's logic). Given the "short" amount of time (or perhaps the modest amount of evidence presented), Agrippa claimed that he was not ready to become a Christian.

26:32 Like Festus, Agrippa concluded there was no sustainable charge against Paul; he went further, suggesting Paul should be released. Both Roman and Jewish authorities found the charges groundless. Nevertheless, Paul's appeal to Caesar put his case in a special category that was now to be discharged by Caesar himself.

27:1 This is the fourth "we" section, which extends through verse 29. It is entirely possible that the author of the "we" passages was in some way linked to the journey, since there were a number besides Paul and the other prisoners on the boat with the centurion, including Aristarchus (v. 2).

27:2 The ship was from Adramyttium, located in western Asia near the island of Lesbos and the cities of Mitylene, Assos, and Troas. The ship was probably a small grain ship, which would have stayed relatively near the coast, here working its way from Caesarea along the coast until it reached Adramyttium.

27:3 Though Acts does not tell us when Sidon was evangelized—perhaps through Pentecost (2:9) or the result of persecution (11:19), Christians were there. We have no record of Paul visiting there, but he appears to have had friends there who provided for him, possibly friends made during an unrecorded visit as he traveled between Jerusalem and Antioch.

27:6 At Myra, on the southern coast of Asia Minor, the centurion put the men on a ship from Alexandria that was going to Rome; he did this as opposed to putting them on a ship bound for Adramyttium, which would have taken them out of their way. The Alexandrian ship would have been part of the grain supply trade from Egypt to Rome. Rome was heavily dependent upon Egypt for its grain, and so the fleet of ships that were conscripted for such service was well organized and very important. The route from Alexandria to Rome went by way of Myra due to the winds.

27:7-9 The ship was having difficulty along its voyage because the journey was being undertaken at the end of the sailing season, and the winds were already unpredictable. The sailing season was deemed to be dangerous from mid-September to mid-November, and the waterways closed for travel from then until February, a period of about three months (28:11). It appears that Paul's journey was taking place in roughly mid-October. Fair Havens, despite the name, was not a suitable place to stay the winter since the harbor was exposed to the open sea (27:12).

27:11 The centurion chose to pay more attention to the captain of the ship, who was determined to make his destination during the sailing season, than to Paul's warning. The centurion did not realize that Paul had divinely-given insight into the situation, nor did he understand that as an experienced traveler Paul was well acquainted with the potential dangers.

27:12 Luke mentioned Phoenix, a port on the island of Crete; it had two inlets to its port, one on the southwest and another on the northwest.

27:17-19 Caught in the wind, the sailors virtually lost control of the vessel. In efforts to save the ship and themselves, they took preventive measures, which are well known from other ancient sources: tying ropes around the ship's hull so that it did not come apart, lowering an anchor, jettisoning some of the cargo (although probably not the grain).

27:22-26 An angel gave Paul insight into their situation. Despite their attempts, the angel made clear that Paul had a greater destiny than death by shipwreck. The divine plan was not going to be thwarted.

27:27 The Adriatic Sea mentioned here was not the (now called) Adriatic Sea between Italy and the former Yugoslavia, but apparently the sea between Crete, Malta, Italy, and Greece that extended into the midst of the Mediterranean.

27:28-29 The soldiers took soundings by letting down lengths of rope with weights on them; they determined that they were approaching land at a fast pace, even though they could not see it. In an effort to slow down the ship, they took the unusual measure of lowering four anchors all from the stern, rather than dropping anchors from the bow, which would have swung the ship around.

27:30-32 The danger prompted some sailors to plan an escape. Paul's wisdom in not permitting these sailors to abandon ship is seen in the next episode, when all of the sailors were needed. However, the soldiers probably acted unwisely by cutting the ropes to the skiff in an attempt to thwart any further escape plans by the sailors, as this eliminated a useful means of escape when the occasion warranted.

27:35 Following Jewish custom, Paul gave thanks to God for the food that they ate. It is unlikely that Paul's thanksgiving and breaking of bread is a celebration of the Lord's Supper, given the pagan context. Paul was simply encouraging all to eat in preparation for the rigors of abandoning ship.

27:38 At this point, the crew threw out the grain, which had served as ballast for the ship, so that they could run it aground (v. 39).

27:41 The attempt to beach the ship was thwarted by hitting a sandbar before they had reached shore, rendering the bow immovable. The pounding waves began to break up the stern, requiring them to abandon the ship.

27:42 The soldiers' intention to kill the prisoners was probably motivated by their personal responsibility for the prisoners. If any of the prisoners got away while they abandoned the ship, the soldiers feared being punished in their stead.

27:44 Everyone miraculously got to shore, some by swimming and others by holding on to pieces of debris from the ship.

28:1 This is the fifth "we" section, extending to verse 16. The shipwreck took place on Malta, a small island south of Sicily.

28:3-4 Although there are reportedly no poisonous snakes on Malta today, that does not mean that there were none then. Apparently everyone (apart from some modern critical scholars) knew that there were. Note that the people thought that Paul had been singled out by Justice, the Greek goddess, to be bitten (v. 6).

28:6 Once it became clear that Paul was not affected by the snakebite, sentiment changed from thinking him a criminal to saying he was a god. This quick reversal of fortune appears to have been just as easily shrugged off by Paul as he shrugged off the snake. Nothing more was made of it.

28:7 Publius is referred to as the "leading man" or "first man" of Malta, a title reflected in inscriptional evidence from the island. He may have been a leading citizen or even a political leader. He entertained at least some of those from the boat, including the author of the "we" passage.

28:8-9 Publius's father may have been suffering from what has been called Malta fever, caused by impure goats' milk. This healing involved both prayer and laying on of hands. As a result, a number of others with diseases were brought and cured.

28:10 The honors that Paul received may have been monetary rewards or even payment, as the same word is used elsewhere in Ac to indicate money (4:34; 5:2-3; 7:16; 19:19).

28:11 This indicates that, probably in February or shortly thereafter, the journey recommenced, this time aboard another Alexandrian grain ship headed for Rome. (The first one had been torn apart by the sea.) The "Twin Brothers" were Castor and Pollux (Gemini), the patrons of sailors. The ship would have wanted to be underway as soon as possible since it had been delayed due to the winter break.

28:12 Syracuse was a port on the eastern side of Sicily.

28:13 Puteoli was a major port in southern Italy with a very important shipping harbor for bringing grain from Egypt to Rome.

28:14 Luke wrote that they found "brothers" in Puteoli—probably Christian believers (rather than Jews). It is not known how believers came to be in Puteoli, just as it is not known how Christians came to be in Rome itself. Apparently there was a Jewish community there, and they may have had contact with Christians elsewhere. A seaport would also have been a natural place for such contact to be made. In answer to the question of how it is that the centurion would have allowed Paul to stay with the believers in Puteoli for seven days, when one recounts how Paul helped the centurion at several key junctures and proved himself a reliable and trustworthy person, it is not surprising at all. The centurion probably had business to attend to in the area, perhaps related to the journey itself and what had happened along the way.

28:15 "Brothers" had come to meet Paul from as far away as the Forum of Appius and Three Taverns, both small towns along the Appian Way on the way to Rome. The Appius Forum was about 43 miles and Three Taverns 33 miles south of Rome.

28:16 The statement "when we entered Rome" is thought by some to be redundant of v. 14: "And so we came to Rome." There is the possibility that v. 14 refers to entering the general region of Rome, and v. 16 to Rome proper. There is also the possibility that v. 14 is to be understood as "in this way we came to Rome," with v. 16 indicating the actual arrival. While in Roman custody, Paul appears to have been staying on his own and at his own expense (vv. 23,30), guarded only by a common soldier. This may reflect the fact that Paul's case was already at this stage—perhaps because of the description of the case provided by Festus—considered of little importance, and Paul of little danger. We know nothing more of Paul's contact with the Roman government or the disposition of his case from the book of Ac.

28:17 This is the final episode in Acts in which Paul began his ministry in a new city with contact with the Jews. Since he was in custody, instead of visiting a synagogue he invited the Jewish leaders to come to him and explained his situation.

28:21-22 The Jews in Rome had clearly heard of the "sect" of Christians, but they had not received word regarding Paul. This may have been because communication from Jerusalem to Rome had been delayed, or it may indicate that the Jewish leaders in Jerusalem had lost interest in Paul's case, since he was now out of their sight.

28:25-28 Paul's citation of Is 6:9-10 aroused disagreement among some of his listeners because it implied that the coming of Jesus Christ was foretold in the OT and that He would be rejected by his own people. Paul's conclusion from the OT passage was that God's saving word had then been extended to Gentiles, who would listen and understand.

28:30-31 Acts ends with Paul still a prisoner after two years of captivity, during which time he lived at his own expense and was allowed to have visitors, to whom he proclaimed the gospel of Jesus Christ. The book of Ac ends at this point, and it may be that he was convicted and died in Rome at this time. There is testimony from other early church writers, however, that Paul was released, presumably because his case was either dismissed or found to be without merit, and that he engaged in active ministry for another several years before he was re-arrested and sent to Rome, where he died under the persecution of Nero.

Romans Articles

What Is Natural Law?

by Paul Copan

From a jail in Birmingham, Alabama, Martin Luther King Jr. discussed civil disobedience, noting that "there are two kinds of laws: just and unjust" and that there is a "natural law" to which we are subject. He was right: We shouldn't say we know right and wrong only because "the Bible says so." Romans 2:15 states that God's moral law has been written on the hearts of all human beings. This innate or intuitive awareness is beautifully illustrated in C. S. Lewis's Abolition of Man. There he lists various universally recognized moral laws and virtues—impartial justice, truthfulness, kindness, mercy, marital fidelity, respect for human life. They have been regarded as true for all from ancient Babylon and Greece to Native America, from Jews and Christians to Hindus and Confucians. Yet while humans are capable of recognizing basic moral principles, they may suppress their conscience, harden their hearts, and become morally dull.

Medieval theologian Thomas Aquinas spoke of certain "laws." He said there is an eternal law, which God alone knows and by which God created and governs the universe. Because God created us in His image (as moral, reasoning beings), we are capable of recognizing a self-evident natural law, the reflection of God's eternal law in the created order. This law is known by all human beings whether or not they are aware of God's special revelation through Israel and Jesus Christ, as inscripted in the Bible. God has placed within us a disposition to have moral knowledge. Unless we suppress our conscience, we naturally know basic moral truths. General virtues and vices, Thomas Reid wrote, "must appear self-evident to every man who has a conscience, and has taken the pains to exercise this natural power of his mind"
("Of Morals").

Some will respond, "There can be moral atheists. We don't need God for morality." However, atheists have been made in the image of God. Though they deny God's existence, they have still been designed by God to function properly and even to create human law for the good of society—the law that, to varying degrees, applies the natural law placed within us. Atheists ignore the very basis of goodness—God, who created them and who is the highest Good. (See J. Budziszewski, The Revenge of Conscience and Written on the Heart.)

Does the Moral Argument Show There Is a God?

by Paul Copan

Here's a good rule of thumb about morality: Never believe those who say murder or rape may not really be wrong. Such people haven't looked deeply enough into the basis for moral belief—and just aren't functioning properly. (Usually, when personally threatened with murder or rape, they change their tune!) Color-blind persons need help distinguishing red from green. Similarly, morally malfunctioning persons (those denying basic moral truths) don't need arguments; they need psychological and spiritual help. Like logical laws, moral laws and instincts are basic to well-functioning humans.

As part of God's general self-revelation, all people—unless they ignore or suppress their conscience—can and should have basic moral insight, knowing truths generally available to any morally sensitive person (Rm 2:14-15). We instinctively recognize the wrongness of torturing or murdering the innocent or committing rape. We just know the rightness of virtues (kindness, trustworthiness, unselfishness). A person's failure to recognize these insights reveals something defective; he hasn't looked deeply enough into the grounds of his moral beliefs.

Philosophers and theologians past and present have noted the connection between God's existence and objective moral values. A moral argument for God's existence goes like this: (a) If objective moral values exist, then God exists. (b) Objective moral values do exist. (c) Therefore, God exists. If objective moral values exist, where do they come from? The most plausible answer is God's nature or character. Even many atheists have admitted that objective moral values (which they deny) don't fit an atheistic world but would serve as evidence for God's existence.

We live in a time when many claim everything is relative, yet ironically they believe they have "rights." But if morality is just the product of evolution, culture, or personal choice, then rights—and moral responsibility—do not truly exist. But if they do, this assumes humans have value in and of themselves as persons, no matter what their culture or science textbooks say. But what, then, is the basis for this value? Could this intrinsic value just emerge from impersonal, mindless, valueless processes over time (naturalism)?

An Eastern philosophical approach to ethics is monism (sometimes called "pantheism"): because everything is one, no ultimate distinction between good and evil exists. This serves to support relativism. A more natural context for ethics is the theistic one, in which we've been made by a good God to resemble Him in certain important (though limited) ways. The Declaration of Independence correctly notes that we've been endowed by our Creator with "certain inalienable rights." Human dignity isn't just "there." Dignity and rights come from a good God (despite human sinfulness).

Can't atheists be moral? Yes! Like believers, they've been made in the image of God and thus have the ability to recognize right and wrong.

Doesn't God Himself conform to certain moral standards outside Himself? No, God's good character is the very standard; God simply acts and naturally does what is good. Universal moral standards have no basis if God doesn't exist.

Notable Christian Apologist: Cornelius Van Til

by John M. Frame

Cornelius Van Til (1895–1987), Reformed theologian and apologist, was born in the Netherlands and completed his Ph.D. at Princeton University in 1927. He taught apologetics for one year at Princeton Theological Seminary but left when the board voted for a reorganization to allow for liberal viewpoints. Van Til and other conservative professors who left Princeton founded Westminster Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. Van Til taught at Westminster from its beginning in 1929 for roughly a half century.

Van Til's studies of philosophical idealism convinced him that all human thought is governed by presuppositions. (Hence Van Til is sometimes called a "presuppositionalist," though he was not enthusiastic about that label.) Ultimate presuppositions, he believed, cannot be proved by usual methods, since they serve as the basis of all proof. But they can be proved "transcendentally," by showing that they are necessary for all rational thought and must be true if there is to be any meaning or order in the world. Van Til sought to reconstruct Christian apologetics so that it would establish the Christian God as the presupposition of human thought, rather than as one rational conclusion among many.

He disparaged the "traditional method" of defending Christianity by theistic proofs and historical evidences, because he believed that tradition began with data considered intelligible apart from God and thereby tried to prove God's existence. On the contrary, Van Til argued, if we concede that anything is intelligible apart from the God of Scripture, we have lost the battle at the outset. So we should, rather, use a transcendental method, showing that the various forms of non-Christian thought ("would-be autonomous reasoning," as he put it) reduce to meaninglessness and that only the Christian worldview can make sense of anything.

Some critics said that Van Til left no room for the use of evidence in apologetics. He replied that evidence is useful when employed within a transcendental argument based on biblical presuppositions.

But is this not circular, to prove Christianity on the basis of Christian presuppositions?

Yes, said Van Til, in a sense. But he offered two arguments in defense of his view. First, every system of thought is circular when arguing its most fundamental presuppositions (e.g., a rationalist can defend the authority of reason only by using reason). Second, the Christian circle is the only one that renders reality intelligible on its own terms.

Non-Christian thought, he argues, collapses into meaninglessness because of the effects of sin on human mental powers. The unbeliever knows God but suppresses the truth (Rm 1:18-32). There is therefore an antithesis between Christian thought and unbelieving thought, between the wisdom of God and the wisdom of the world. Although the unbeliever knows and states truth occasionally, he does that only by inconsistency with his presuppositions and by relying inconsistently on the Christian worldview.

What About Those Who Have Never Heard About Christ?

by William Lane Craig

The conviction that salvation is available through Christ alone permeates the NT (see, e.g., Ac 4:12; Eph 2:12). This raises the troubling question of the fate of those who never hear the gospel.

What, exactly, is the problem here supposed to be? The universalist alleges that the following statements are logically inconsistent:

1. God is all powerful and all loving.
2. Some people never hear the gospel and are lost.

But why think that 1 and 2 are logically incompatible? There is no explicit contradiction between them. If the universalist is claiming that they are implicitly contradictory, he must be assuming some hidden premises that would bring out this contradiction.

Although universalists have not been forthcoming about their hidden assumptions, the logic of the problem would suggest something akin to these points:

3. If God is all powerful, He can create a world in which everybody hears the gospel and is freely saved.
4. If God is all loving, He prefers a world in which everybody hears the gospel and is freely saved.

But are these premises necessarily true?

Consider 3. It seems incontrovertible that God could create a world in which everybody hears the gospel. But so long as people are free, there is no guarantee that everybody in such a world would be freely saved. In fact, there is no reason to think the balance between saved and lost in such a world would be any better than is that balance in the actual world. Hence 3 is not necessarily true, and the universalist's argument is false.

But what about 4? Is it necessarily true? Let us suppose for the sake of argument that there are possible worlds that are feasible for God in which everyone hears the gospel and freely accepts it. Does God's being all loving compel Him to prefer one of these worlds over a world in which some persons are lost? Not necessarily, for these worlds might have other, overriding deficiencies that make them less preferable. For example, suppose that the only worlds in which everybody freely believes the gospel and is saved are worlds with only a handful of people in them. Must God prefer one of these sparsely populated worlds over a world in which multitudes believe in the gospel and are saved, even though other persons freely reject His grace and are lost? No. Thus the universalist's second assumption is not necessarily true, so that his argument is doubly invalid.

As a loving God, God wants as many people as possible to be freely saved and as few as possible to be lost. His goal, then, is to achieve an optimal balance between these, to create no more of the lost than are necessary to attain a certain number of the saved. It is possible that in order to create this many people who will be freely saved, God also had to create this many people who will be freely lost.

It might be objected that an all-loving God would not create people whom He knew will be lost but who would have been saved if only they had heard the gospel. But how do we know there are any such persons? It is reasonable to assume that many people who never hear the gospel would not have believed the gospel if they had heard it. Suppose, then, that God has so ordered the world that all persons who never hear the gospel are precisely such people. In that case, anybody who never hears the gospel and is lost would have rejected the gospel and been lost even if he had heard it. Thus, it is possible that:

5. God has created a world that has an optimal balance between saved and lost, and those who never hear the gospel and are lost would not have believed in it even if they had heard it.

So long as 5 is even possibly true, it shows that there is no incompatibility between an all-powerful, all-loving God and some people's never hearing the gospel and being lost.

(For another perspective, see the article in Luke 10.)

How Does One Develop a Christian Mind?

by J. P. Moreland

"I want to develop a Christian mind, but I don't know how." This attitude is both common and understandable. That we are to develop our minds as Christians is not in doubt. We are admonished to love God with our mind (Mt 22:37), be transformed by its renewal (Rm 12:2), and be prepared to give thoughtful answers to questions about the faith (1 Pt 3:15).

A mature Christian mind has two aspects to it. First, it is a mind that has formed the habit of being focused on God constantly throughout the day. It is a mind preoccupied with God and directed regularly toward Him in prayer and meditation (Ps 16:8; Is 26:3; Lk 18:1; Rm 12:12; 1 Th 5:16-18). But how can one do this and still perform one's daily tasks? Fortunately, people can do more than one thing at the same time. While driving or centering one's attention on a task, one can still be aware of God in the boundaries of one's attention. And one can bring God to the center of prayerful focus at various times throughout the day.

Two habits can make it easier for you to focus on God constantly. First, memorize four or five Bible passages that really speak to you. Each passage can be from one to several verses in length. Now, make it a practice to pray these passages to the Lord throughout the day. As you pray through a passage phrase by phrase, use it to pray about things of concern to you. Second, regularly ponder these passages or other scriptural readings, thinking of what they mean, of how you can internalize them, and of how you can promote them to others.

The second aspect of a mature Christian mind is one that sees all of life in light of a Christian worldview and is growing in intellectual excellence. A worldview is the sum total of all the things one believes, especially in regard to reality, truth, knowledge, and value. A Christian worldview is a biblically grounded set of beliefs about all of life, from work, recreation, and finances to God, life after death, and morality. One tries to think of all of life in light of the teachings of holy Scripture and, more specifically, of the Lord Jesus. There is no secular/sacred separation in such a mind.

All of life is an occasion for discipleship and worship for a mature Christian mind. Further, an intellectually excellent mind is one that is informed, that makes important distinctions when a less mature mind fails to do so, and that has deeper and deeper insights into issues of importance. To develop such excellence, one must regularly read, listen to tapes, and expose oneself to excellent teaching. One must also be willing to engage others—believers and unbelievers—in conversations about important worldview issues. Such regular practice, if combined with a growing ability to listen nondefensively, will bring motivation and opportunity for regular growth in intellectual excellence.

Introduction to Romans

DATE

Paul penned this, his most influential letter, while staying in Corinth during his third missionary journey in A.D. 57 (Ac 20:2-3). Though Paul had not yet visited Rome, he knew many people there (chap. 16) and hoped he might visit soon (1:10-15; 15:32). He welcomed an opportunity to serve them and for them to speed him on his way to further ministry in the west (15:23-24,28-29). Before this rendezvous, however, he needed to deliver collected contributions from Macedonian and Achaian Christians for Jerusalem's believers (15:25-28), and he solicited their prayers for the success of these plans and for protection from his enemies (15:30-32).

Some wonder how Paul could know so many Roman Christians—26 mentioned in chapter 16—without ever having visited the city himself. That can be explained. The huge imperial capital, Rome, attracted large numbers of people. During his years of ministry, Paul became acquainted with many believers who now resided in Rome. So naturally he greeted them in a letter designed to solicit the church's aid in his ministry. Priscilla and Aquila illustrate the phenomenon. We know from the book of Acts and Paul's letters that he had spent time with this couple in Asia and in Greece (Ac 18:1-3,18-19; cp. 1 Co 16:19; 2 Tm 4:19), and now they were in Rome (Rm 16:3-5).

ORIGIN OF THE CHURCH IN ROME

The origin of the Roman church is unknown. It may have started as a group of Jewish believers and may even have begun not long after Pentecost. Over the years it had grown and was made up of sizeable Jewish and Gentile constituencies.

This important letter gave Paul the opportunity to instruct the believers in the essentials of salvation. Some specific issues existed among the mixed racial makeup of the church, so he spoke both to Jews (2:17–4:25) and Gentiles (e.g., 1:13-15; 11:13; cp. 14:1–15:13). Yet the message of salvation is the major theme of Romans. From 1:18–8:39, Paul described the human condition from God's perspective and set forth what God has done to forgive and restore human beings to right relationship with Himself. Not only that, God has given His Spirit to those who trust His grace. Through the Holy Spirit those who have been justified by faith are able to live holy lives, walking in ways that are pleasing to God. After discussing how Jews and Gentiles fit into God's overall plan for the ages (chaps. 9–11), Paul spelled out some ethical implications of salvation in Christ (12:1–15:13).

Romans Study Notes

1:6-7 "Call" refers not to God's selection of some individuals rather than others for salvation but to His identification of those whom He names as His own. Later, Paul quoted Hs 2:23, that says God will call them "My-People" who were not His people; they will be called children of the living God (9:26). Thus, God Himself called the Roman Christians to belong to Christ.

"Saints" ("holy ones") does not designate some rank of Christians superior to others but describes all those God has set apart for Himself. In the NT it designates believers in Christ. All Christians are saints—those who belongto Him (Ac 9:13; Rm 8:27; 15:25-26; 16:2; 1 Co 14:33).

1:17 "Righteousness" is blamelessness before God. Contrary to the widely held view that righteousness is a human achievement, Paul's position is that righteousness is a gift that can't be earned. God declares guilty sinners righteous and so puts them in right relationship with Himself. Those who respond to God's gracious offer to be made right with Him receive the Holy Spirit. Through the Spirit's power those who have been declared righteous are in the process of being transformed into the image of Christ (8:29).

1:18 God's wrath is not an uncontrollable, destructive emotion directed against those God dislikes. Wrath describes His just, holy response to sin and rebellion. From human perspective shaped in a world permeated by sin and injustice, wrath and love are seen as polar opposites. In God, however, there is no conflict between His great love and His terrible wrath. Most human beings know that something is wrong with the world, and there is a deep longing that it be put right. The multiplicity of religions and sects give a variety of explanations of why the world isn't as it should be. They also prescribe a variety of logically incompatible solutions to right the wrongs. Both God's love and His wrath are the guarantors that what is wrong will be put right. To deny or minimize God's wrath is to obscure what He revealed in the death of His Son who bore God's wrath in our place.

1:20 Is everyone really without excuse? What about remote tribal people who never hear the gospel? This seems unduly harsh, doesn't it? Paul was clear that no one can claim ignorance of God's existence and power. Why? God has clearly revealed many of His attributes in the natural world, enough for people to respond in some manner. Certainly people cannot know all there is to know about God from nature. However, they can know enough for God to hold them accountable for responding to this knowledge. Paul affirmed that God will render just judgment to each person according to whatever light that person received—whether natural revelation, the Jewish law, or the gospel of Christ. No Scripture hints of a second chance to trust in Christ after death; equally, the NT is clear that salvation resides solely in Christ (Jn 14:6; Ac 4:12). If God is willing to go to such great lengths to reveal Himself and rescue us from sin, then surely we can be confident of His just, loving attitude toward the unevangelized.

1:24 Does God cause people to sin? At some point He may "deliver them over" to their sinful choices, giving them what they want (cp. also vv. 26,28). They abandon God's ways, and He abandons them, further intensifying their awful condition.

1:26-27 Is homosexuality wrong? Paul appealed to what is "natural" (physis—used in 2:27; 11:21,24; Gl 2:15) to contrast natural sexual relations—men with women with same-sex acts. His reasoning is not solely biological, however. Rather, the problem is people abandoning God's created order—the topic in this context (v. 20). Those engaging in homosexuality are not simply abandoning what is "natural," biologically speaking; they are rejecting the way God intended all of His creation to operate. Paul was not discussing pederastic or homosexual acts merely in connection with idol worship (cp. 1 Co 6:9-11), but instead was saying that human beings are created for natural, heterosexual relationships—the only kind of sexual relationships the Bible recognizes as acceptable.

2:6 God's judgment is not based on people's action toward others but on how people act toward Him. Those who do good in relation to God obtain eternal life (vv, 7,10,13), while those who do evil toward God receive God's wrath (vv. 8,9,12). Since justification comes by faith, not works (3:21-24) and because "there is no one righteous, not even one" (3:10), Paul could not mean that people secure salvation by self-effort. Rather he appealed to the principle: "Actions reveal a person's heart." Jesus noted that righteous actions will emerge from within (Mt 12:35).

2:14-15 One of two options is likely in understanding this difficult section, which people have sometimes interpreted as saying that a salvation exists outside of Jesus Christ. One option is that Gentile Christians are those who have the "law" written on their hearts, corresponding to Jeremiah's depiction of the new covenant (Jr 31:33). Gentiles do what the law requires without having it. Though not ethnic Jews, they are the "true Jews" because of their circumcised hearts (Rm 2:28-29). They obey the law and are declared righteous (v. 13). A second option is that Paul was speaking of Gentiles in general who respond positively to their moral sense and the light they have in ways that correspond to God's intentions, which correspond to the law Jews received.

3:10-18 That no one is righteous indicates human inability to secure salvation apart from God's provision. This does not mean that people are as bad as they can be, or that they cannot do good things from a human perspective. However, as to eternal salvation, their situation is hopeless so long as they are left to themselves. God's initiating grace must come first. Righteousness must come from God (vv. 21-22).

3:25 What sins has God passed over? In Eden God threatened death as punishment for disobedience and sin (Gn 2:17). In the fall Adam and Eve died spiritually, being separated from God and subject to sin and death even though they did not immediately die physically. Implementing His plan to redeem His lost creatures, God sought out those who obediently trusted Him (e.g., Abel, Gn 4:4; Enoch, Gn 5:24; Noah, Gn 6:9; Abram, Gn 15:6; and their spiritual successors). Though they were sinners, God spared them from eternal damnation, the just punishment for their sin. Paul explained God's justice in passing over these sins: In due time, Christ would die in their place (Rm 5:6). Christ's death covers the sins of all believers both prior and subsequent to His atoning death.

But what kind of God (Father) sends His Son to such a horrific death to satisfy His own sense of justice? First, Jesus voluntarily gave His life (Jn 10:14-18). So this was the eternally agreed-upon plan by Father, Son, and Spirit. Second, the triune God—not just the Son—is involved in this world's suffering. The Father and Spirit were not undetached observers but were intimately involved with the Son's suffering on the cross. Third, consider God's holiness and sin's offensiveness to such a perfect, unsullied, personal Being. Sin elicits His just, wrathful response—the removal of all traces of both sin and sinner. Fourth, we must grasp God's limitless love for His human creatures made in His own image. Though He could justly write us off forever, in love God acted to save those who trust in Him. So while His holiness required the just payment of death for sinners, in love He paid the penalty Himself in the person of His only Son.

4:6 God considers those who trust Him as righteous. Expressing it in economic terms, God puts their sins on Christ's account and credits Christ's righteousness to their account (vv. 23-25). Believers are not suddenly made morally pure to live sinless lives thereafter; rather, they are now considered "in Christ," with all the blessings and benefits of that position.

5:12 Employing the concept of corporate solidarity, Paul explained that when Adam sinned all humanity was profoundly affected through that act of rebellion. There is a corresponding corporate solidarity in Christ. Whereas "in Adam all die, so also in Christ all will be made alive" (1 Co 15:22). Therefore, Paul said later that "no condemnation" comes to "those in Christ Jesus" (Rm 8:1, emphasis added). So while the damaging consequences of Adam's sin, including an inherited tendency to sin, were passed on to all of Adam's descendants, justification likewise passes on to all who receive God's gift of righteousness secured through Christ's death (vv. 17-19). Note, however, that Paul did not teach universalism here. God forces His righteousness on no one; people must receive the offered gift through faith.

6:1 Paul opposed the prevalent idea (which some espouse even today) of antinomianism. That is, since God saves people by grace (5:21), it does not matter how people live. Paul found this idea abhorrent—completely inconsistent with salvation's purpose, which is to produce holy lives. The result of entering into Christ should be victory over sin—ultimately but also presently. This mandates every effort to counter sin's effects in a believer's life.

6:16,22 Paul's positive use of the metaphor of slavery may strike Christians today as offensive. However, slavery's pervasiveness in the ancient world helped convey his point graphically. In fact, everyone is a slave either to sin—an evil, malicious slave master —or to God. God grants His slaves eternal life and freedom from sin's destructive power. Sin pays death as wages; God grants life (v. 23).

7:15-25 This section is hotly debated. In one view, the internal struggle was Paul's (and others') personal Christian experience. In Christ, all Christians want to do what pleases God (vv. 18,22) but find themselves frustrated in their efforts because of the lingering presence of sin's power within (vv. 17,20,23). The struggle continues in this age, with progress and victory possible only through the power of the Holy Spirit (8:2,5,11) and ultimately when Christ returns (8:23). Alternatively, some scholars argue that here Paul spoke of the position of Jewish people (and thus of himself as a formerly unbelieving Jew) living in frustration under the law. In this view Paul described the unbeliever's struggle, experiencing defeat apart from Christ. He was a slave to the law of sin (cp. 7:25 and 8:2) and struggled with the body of death (cp. 7:24 and 6:6).

8:9 Paul identified the indispensable constituent of those in Christ: the Holy Spirit (vv. 15-17). There are no Spiritless Christians. They are no longer "in the flesh" but are freed from a merely human, powerless life. The Spirit grants spiritual life to believers at the point of salvation. The Spirit indwells believers (v. 11) and provides to believers the capacity to please God and to put to death the sinful behaviors opposed to the life of Christ (v. 13).

8:20-23 Evil in the world resulted from human sin and selfishness (Gn 3:17). Now the creation struggles in "bondage of corruption" and groans, awaiting its restoration. Christians still corrupted by sin await the redemption of their bodies. Christians value the creation as God's handiwork and groan with it in eager anticipation of the better days of the new creation (see 2 Pt 3:13; Rv 21:1).

8:28 Paul did not say all things are good—an absurd claim in view of both natural tragedies and human atrocities. When suffering, Christians might conclude either that God does not love them or that He is not sufficiently protecting them. Paul thus insisted that in all things God works to accomplish what is good for His people. Clearly God does not always spare His people from tragedies, illnesses, and other adverse circumstances of life, or even shield them from their opponents' persecution (v. 36). In any of these difficulties—and Paul listed some awful ones (vv. 35,38-39)—God is working for His people's good.

Prosperity theology maintains that "good" means God always physically heals or protects trusting, praying believers from tragedies. But this teaching runs counter to the tenor of this passage. In fact, to say that God always prospers His people borders on heresy, calling into question God's working of His sovereign purposes through His people's suffering (5:3-5; see Jms 1:2-4,9-11). Rather than promising escape, Paul intended here to provide hope for the afflicted. God will accomplish "good": His loving purposes for His creation and glory to His people. The "good" concerns their final salvation.

Despite any alleged evidence to the contrary, nothing can separate God's people from His perpetual love.

8:29-30 Paul assured his readers that God would accomplish His saving purposes for them. Paul listed five distinct aspects of salvation, each building on the former. "Foreknew" denotes possession of prior knowledge, which humans or God may possess. God has previously known who His people will be. Some argue that when predicated of God, this is a special knowledge, equivalent to election: the Hebrew "knowing" implies establishing an intimate relationship. While God knows His people in a special way, it is not certain Paul here intended "foreknew" to equal "elect," since he knew and used terms for election elsewhere in Rm (8:33; 9:11; 11:5). Besides, how might God have had a special relationship with people before they even existed? In either case, certainly God intimately knows His church (see 2 Tm 2:19).

Beyond God's foreknowledge of His people, He has "predestined" a general outcome for them: being "conformed to the image of His Son," so that at His coming Christ will exult with His many brothers and sisters who bear His family resemblance. So God "calls" these His own people (9:24-26); He invites them to be His. Before the bar of justice, God declares them "not guilty." They are "justified." At Christ's return, God will "glorify" His people, restoring the glory diminished by sin (3:23; 8:17).

9:6 Here, and in what follows, Paul distinguished two kinds of Israel and two kinds of election. God chose physical, historical Israel by selecting Abraham and his descendants (the "election" mentioned in v. 11). God chose the historical nation Israel, through which He accomplished many purposes, including the establishment of both Scripture (v. 4; 3:2) and the line of the Messiah (v. 5). But not all of elect, ethnic Israel constitutes elect, spiritual (saved) Israel (v. 8). Paul distinguished two kinds of election: (1) the election of the nation Israel to achieve certain tasks (also why God chose individuals—the patriarchs and Pharaoh, v. 17), and (2) election to salvation. To be in the latter group (that is, to attain righteousness) requires faith in Christ (vv. 30-33; recall what makes a true Jew in 2:28-29).

9:13-14,21 These verses may give the impression that God acts arbitrarily and apart from human cooperation, suggesting God disregards human freedom, and consequently could not hold people responsible for their actions. None of this fairly represents Paul's point here. God's gracious and merciful plan does not violate human freedom. To select Jacob over Esau reflects God's choice to have the nation Israel come through Jacob's descendants, not Esau's. In saying God "hated" Esau, Paul did not imply that God excluded him from salvation.

For Messiah's line, God chose the tribe of Judah (not the most noble of characters), rather than the descendants of Joseph (a true believer). (In that sense, he "hated" Joseph but "loved" Judah.) God executes His redemptive, gracious plan as He pleases. Humans have no claim on God. So, on the national level, God sovereignly decided to have mercy on Israel (including the patriarchs). Nevertheless, Abraham's physical children cannot claim they are automatically "elected" for salvation and are therefore "righteous" apart from genuine faith in Christ (vv. 31-32). Yet God's gracious election also operates for salvation: God has determined to save those who trust in His Son. God will have mercy on whom He wills to have mercy, and no claim even of Jewish descent will override what the divine Potter chooses to do.

Interestingly, the prophet Jeremiah also used the potter as an illustration of how God works, clearly acknowledging that God may vary His response, given human reaction to His words (Jr 18:5-10). God desires people to repent and turn to Him. The potter illustration shows that God is not immovable nor impassive and that He does not carry out His plans willy-nilly.

9:22-23 Three interpretations diverge here. (1) Paul taught "double predestination": before creation, God determined to save some and damn others (a view often associated with Calvinists). God fixed the number He will glorify and the number He will destroy. Given that all sinners deserve condemnation, God's choice to save some demonstrates His mercy. (2) God elects some to save, leaving the rest to their deserved fate. In both of these views the non-elect, objects of His wrath, justly deserve their fate; so God is not unjust by not electing them. (3) God predetermined the general outcomes—either wrath or glory—but the saved or the destroyed determine their own fate (in response to God's initiating grace). In this view the criterion for inclusion or exclusion in "My-People" is whether sinners pursue righteousness by faith or in self-reliance (v. 32; 10:3-4,9-10). That is, those destroyed prepared themselves for their destruction. People are predestined to condemnation so long as they choose to continue in their ways and resist God's grace.

10:9-10 Merely mouthing "Jesus is Lord" and proclaiming that Jesus rose from the dead cannot secure salvation. Presumably the devil (see Jms 2:19) and many people (Mt 7:21-23) could meet these requirements and not be true followers of Christ. A heartfelt confession of Jesus' lordship designates a lifelong commitment that issues from the center of a person's being, the heart. What matters is not saying Jesus is Lord but making Him Lord at the core of one's existence. This is what Paul really meant by calling on the name of the Lord to be saved (10:13).

10:14-15 Since salvation comes by confessing Jesus as Lord, Christians must preach this good news. But what about those to whom no preacher came? Paul did not deal with that question here. His concern centered on God's message to the Israelites, to whom the message did go and who did hear, but who also, tragically, rejected the message (vv. 16-21).

Two points remain. First, those who know the truth must spare no effort to proclaim it to others, for salvation is at stake. Second, the fate of the unevangelized rests in the hands of a loving and just God who will judge people on the basis of the light they received. (See article on "What about Those Who Have Never Heard about Christ?" p. 1696.)

11:7-8 Though most Jews have rejected the message of salvation in Jesus, a remnant within the total population—the elect—did obtain salvation (vv. 5-6). The rest were "hardened"—a curious term. Since the entire point of 9:30–10:3 and 10:16-21 is that Israel was responsible for its rejection of God's salvation despite the prophets' best efforts to call them to repentance, Paul did not mean that God determined their obstinacy. If God Himself hardened some Jews' hearts so they could not believe, it makes no sense for God to say through Isaiah, "I spread out My hands all day long to a rebellious people who walk in the wrong path, following their own thoughts" (Rm 10:21; Is 65:2). This passage from Isaiah that Paul cited goes on to castigate Israel for provoking God and repudiating His laws.

Other uses of the hardening metaphor (a calcifying or callous-building effect) often make clear that hardening of the heart is a self-induced state (e.g., Mt 13:15; Mk 6:52; 8:17; 2 Co 3:14). Even the explicit statement that God hardened Pharaoh's heart follows a series of events showing that Pharaoh was hardening his own heart (Ex 8:15,19,32; 9:7,34-35; 1 Sm 6:6; cp. Ex 9:12; 10:1; 11:10; 14:8). Therefore, though God may indeed solidify people's resolve to reject the truth, apparently He does so because they have first resolved themselves to do so. God does not harden hearts that would otherwise have been responsive to Him. Jesus' quotation of Is 6:9-10 made this very point (Mt 13:14-15).

11:22 Paul's warning extends to the Christian church as a whole. On the one side, God's election of Israel did not guarantee each individual Jew's salvation. On the other side, we cannot presume that all members of a church are saved. The same God is both kind and stern—kind to those who follow Him but stern to those who wander off. Paul issued the warning to "remain in His kindness" or risk being cut off.

11:25-26 Paul showed here that hardening is not a permanent sentence against Israel, even though it resulted from their rejection of the message about Christ. First, he reaffirmed that only a part of Israel was hardened. That is, many Jews of Paul's day did acknowledgeJesus as Lord and were saved. Nevertheless, at the end of the age, the Jews will turn en masse to Christ (or some believe that Jews throughout the church age will respond to the gospel). When Paul stated that all Israel will be saved, he did not intend "all" without exception but "all" as in a very large number (see 1 Sm 25:1;1 Kg 12:1; 2 Ch 12:1; Is 45:25; Dn 9:11; Mk 1:5; Lk 3:21; Ac 13:24). Paul used similar connotations for "all" and "many" in Rm 5:18-19 (cp. a similar usage of "all" in 11:32).

12:19-20 Paul rejected revenge as a Christian response to injustice, but did he then imply another kind of revenge after all—heaping fiery coals on an enemy's head (perhaps an image of hell)? The first two lines of the quotation and its final statement of God's reward that Paul did not cite here (from Pr 25:21-22) argue for a positive meaning to this. The next verse confirms this: "Conquer evil with good." More likely, then, "fiery coals" envision a positive effect: shaming the enemy into repentance. The burning coals may refer to an Egyptian ritual during which one demonstrated genuine repentance by carrying hot coals in some container. Paul urged Christians to do good to enemies so they see their sins and repent. Obviously, repentance will not always follow, but this is the Christian response when injured (recall Mt 5:44-47).

13:1 Paul urged Christians to be submissive and model citizens because God has installed the governing authorities to keep the civil order and punish wrongdoers. Peter gave similar instructions about submission (1 Pt 2:13-14,17). However, submission to authorities is not absolute. Both Jesus and the writer of Ac established this central Christian principle. Jesus said, "Give back to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Mt 22:21). Peter and the apostles declared that they must obey God rather than human beings (Ac 5:29). Any submission to the authorities must pass through the filter of God's will and call upon a believer's life.

The difficulty here involves discerning God's will and call in those areas to which Scripture does not speak, which requires determining and applying biblical principles rather than explicit biblical statements. This is the Christian's crucial duty, for a failure to discern carefully God's will risks disobeying God and incurring His displeasure. Of course, obeying God against the government may result in incurring the government's anger—as the NT and subsequent church history well attest—but this puts a Christian in good company (Mt 5:10-12).

13:11-12 The "daylight" evokes the common biblical idea of the "Day of the Lord"—used in both testaments to refer to God's appearance, often to judge as well as vindicate (e.g., Is 13:6,9; Jl 2:1-2,11,31-32; Am 5:18-20; 1 Co 5:5; 1 Th 5:2; 2 Pt 3:10). Paul did not set a date for the "day" to arrive but instead asserted that soon God would assess all of their deeds (Rm 14:10). This is the time to live righteously in anticipation of the Lord's return and judgment. By "nearer" Paul did not mean "at any moment," since in chapter 11 he envisioned a long interlude until the end (e.g., 11:11-32).

14:4,13-14 When he forbade judging, Paul did not mean Christians must not call a sin a sin. (See the article "Who Are You to Judge Others?" p. 1417) The context concerns Jewish practices such as dietary regulations, Sabbath keeping, and feasts—"doubtful issues"(v. 1)—that troubled many new (especially Jewish) Christians. Some believed they should remain kosher, while others thought differently. Paul insisted these are individual, non-moral matters for each believer to decide, for each one will give an account to God, not to other Christians (vv. 10-11). Since Jesus declared that nothing is unclean in itself (see Mt 15:11; Mk 7:19), what one chooses to eat or not eat is a matter of personal preference.

But we cannot take Paul's conclusion to cover any and all actions. That is, we cannot say that believers may engage in anything they wish as long as they hold the personal opinion that it is acceptable. Sin is never permissible for a Christian. At the same time, mature Christians have a responsibility not to flaunt what they are free to do before God in ways that harm other Christians (14:15,20-21; 1 Co 8).

16:1-2 Paul called his helper Phoebe a diakonos of the church. Bible versions differ on whether to translate this term as "servant" or "minister" or to transliterate it as "deacon[ess]," since by the time Paul wrote to the Romans this term could already have designated the office of deacon (Php 1:1; 1 Ti 3:8,12). Probably the latter is more likely, though it is far from certain.

16:7 Many claim that Junia (or Junias), designating one of Paul's relatives, could be either a man's or a woman's name. In fact, the masculine form, Junias (as a contraction of Junianus), has not been located elsewhere, whereas the feminine Junia is common. Of course, if this person was a woman, this would be an intriguing fact, particularly since Paul called Andronicus and Junia "apostles." J. D. G. Dunn suggests they were husband and wife—a reasonable assumption.

The precise status of all who are called apostles isn't clear. Some were close associates of the apostles, such as Barnabas (Ac 14:14) and James (Gl 1:19), but also see the Greek term apostolos in 2 Co 8:23 and Php 2:25.

16:17 The term "the doctrine" implies that by this time the gospel had already been taught to the point that it could be followed and understood and also should have been defended against corruption (see 2 Th 3:6).

1 Corinthians Articles

Why So Many Denominations?

by Charles Draper

If you look in the telephone directory, you will find a huge diversity of churches. Even within individual denominations there often exists great variation. Jesus once prayed that His followers would be one (Jn 17). But what we see today is anything but unity. What are we to make of this disunity? Does this not demonstrate that Christianity is hopelessly divided? Perhaps. Then again, there may be another way of looking at it.

It is important to ask whether denominations are a good thing. Denominations generally developed out of churches seeking fellowship with one another and joint ministry. That is certainly a biblical idea (Ac 11:27-30).

Often denominations began as renewal movements. So the Reformed movements of the sixteenth century arose to restore teachings about justification by faith and God's sovereignty in salvation—teachings that had been eclipsed in the church for a long time. Later, some Presbyterians caved in to the pressures of liberalism and newer conservative Presbyterian groups emerged to preserve the traditions. Other denominations had similar experiences. Baptists came along within the Reformed tradition, contending that the Reformation principles of justification by faith ought to be applied to the church. In the twentieth century Pentecostals and charismatics formed new unions based on their view of the Spirit and spiritual gifts.

So is this diversity among the churches a good thing or a bad thing? It is always vital to avoid false teaching in the church. Often in the NT false teachers were either disciplined or left churches of their own accord (1 Tm 1:19-20; 1 Jn 2:19). In other cases the early church leaders predicted a future time of apostasy when false teachers would gain great influence (2 Tm 3:1-9). In such cases, it might be necessary for genuine Christians to separate themselves from the false church.

That is not to say that all denominational separations have been for the right reasons. The most important thing to do is to examine a church's teaching and practice to see if it is consistent with Scripture. And finally we have to realize that in this life Christians will not agree on everything.

How Does the Holy Spirit Relate to Evidence for Christianity?

by Gary R. Habermas

It is often assumed that the Holy Spirit's witness to a believer is not very helpful in a study of apologetics. After all, this testimony is given only to Christians and it is not verified or falsified by evidences. So does it follow that this witness is no more than a subjective conviction?

In the few NT passages that address this subject, we are told that, at a minimum, the witness of the Holy Spirit is a personal word to believers that they are children of God (Rm 8:15-17). The Holy Spirit testifies to believers as family members (Gl 4:6-7). So the believer will experience the presence of the Holy Spirit (Jn 14:16-17). This is one way to know that we are truly believers (1 Jn 3:24; 4:13).

Since the unbeliever cannot understand things pertaining to salvation (Jn 14:17; 1 Co 2:14), one might question the value of the Holy Spirit's witness in an apologetic context. But this seems to assume that dealing with unbelievers is the only purpose for defending the faith. Apologetics may have even more value in strengthening the faith of believers through a variety of avenues.

Since the chief purpose of the Holy Spirit's witness is to provide personal assurance of the believer's salvation, the resulting confidence can play a valuable role in convincing believers of their own relationship with the Lord. This might provide assistance, for example, in dealing with religious doubt.

Moreover, the witness of the Holy Spirit provides indirect confirmation of the truth of the Christian gospel. After all, if we are the children of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ as we suffer and are glorified with Him (Rm 8:17), then it would follow that God's gospel path—the basis of this assurance—is likewise true.

So when people become Christians and experience the Holy Spirit's presence, it ought not surprise them, since this is precisely what Scripture teaches! It should be normal fare for the believer. Briefly stated, the study of apologetics indicates that Christianity is true; the witness of the Holy Spirit performs the related function of identifying those who are members of the faith.

What Does the Bible Teach About Homosexuality?

by Scott B. Rae

In the OT, homosexuality is unequivocally condemned. Homosexual sex is prohibited in the law (Lv 18:22; 20:13) and called an abomination. However, of all the illicit sexual relations listed in Leviticus 18, homosexuality is not singled out as being any different or any more worthy of condemnation than any other sexual sin. God's attitude toward homosexuality is portrayed in the judgment on Sodom and Gomorrah (Gn 19). Ezekiel includes among the sins of Sodom "immoral acts," using the same term as in Leviticus 18 to describe homosexual acts (Ezk 16:43; cp. Jd 7). The law condemns all homosexual sex and does not distinguish between perverted and wholesome homosexual relationships.

The central NT passage that addresses homosexuality is Romans 1:24-27 (cp. 1 Co 6:9; 1 Tm 1:10). It is set in the context of the condemnation of those who reject God as revealed in creation, or through natural law. It is part of Paul's broader argument for the universality of sin and judgment, setting the need for the believer to be justified by faith in Christ's atoning death on the cross, outlined in Romans 4–5. Those who rejected the available knowledge of God and chose instead to worship the Greek and Roman idols faced lifestyle consequences. One of these consequences was homosexual behavior. Paul appealed to the natural order of creation to condemn homosexual behavior (Rm 1:27).

What's natural is objective and based on creation, not dependent upon an individual's sexual orientation. Male and female were created with an innate tendency toward opposite-sex attraction, but because of sin the human race developed the potential for homosexuality. This potential is often realized when certain developmental factors are present. Because of the reality of sin, every person has the potential for homosexuality, in the same way that we have the potential for any other kind of sin Scripture describes.

Some have suggested that Paul intended to condemn only certain types of homosexuality. For example, given the context of idolatry, some have argued that Paul was only condemning homosexuality in the context of idolatrous worship. Others have suggested that Paul intended to condemn perverse homosexuality, such as having multiple partners and engaging in nonconsensual homosexual sex. Still others argue that Paul was objecting to persons' reversing their natural sexual orientation and acting sexually in ways that violate a person's orientation.

There is little evidence in the text that Paul intended to limit his teaching to certain kinds of homosexual activity. Rather, Paul's appeal to a universal truth about sexual relations linked to the order of creation (cp. Jesus' teaching in Mt 19:4-6) should prevent us from seeing this passage as limited to certain kinds of homosexual behavior and from seeing Paul as culturally outdated in his teaching. His teaching provides an appropriate context for a judgment on all same-gender sexual relationships

In applying these passages that forbid homosexuality, some suggest that it is important to make a distinction between homosexual attraction and homosexual sexual relations. And indeed there is a difference between being attracted to a person of the same sex and acting sexually on that attraction. For a straight, married person to be attracted to someone of the opposite sex other than his or her spouse is not sin per se. It becomes sin when that attraction is acted upon, either in lust (the process of mentally having sex with a person) or in sexual overtures. Likewise, it may be that the homosexual attraction is not sin per se, though at variance with the order of creation. But when that attraction gives way to lust and ultimately to sexual activity, it is sin.

Some argue that what the Bible condemns in homosexual relationships is what it also condemns in heterosexual relationships—that is, lust and sexual involvement outside marriage. Thus the options for the Christian homosexual would be the same as for the Christian single person: either abstinence or heterosexual sex in marriage. Some Christians who struggle with their sexual identity have grasped this distinction and have rejected the gay lifestyle while attempting to work out issues related to their sexual identity.

It may be that failure to recognize a distinction between feeling a homosexual attraction and acting homosexually has kept the church from being a more accepting place for those struggling with their sexual orientation.

How Should a Christian Relate to Culture?

by Charles Colson

One writer in a psychological journal pondered what makes humans distinct from beasts. After discarding several possibilities—tool usage, language, ability to think—the author concluded that humans seem to be the only creatures who care about what makes them distinct.

On the surface, the outstanding trait of humanity is culture. Not everyone agrees. Some claim beasts have cultures: chimpanzees "harvest" termites with a "tool"—a stripped tree branch wrought by their own hands; termites cultivate mushrooms for consumption; birds create species-specific nests; whales sing. But such simple, largely instinctive practices (which neither change nor improve over time) hardly compare with humankind's achievements. Beasts haven't any arts or technologies, scientific institutes or historical archives, philosophers or physicians. Apparently culture is a distinguishing mark of humankind.

But what makes humans creatures of culture? Why has every recorded human society—however primitive—indulged a level of culture beyond anything beasts might produce? Whence this penchant for culture?

Scripture teaches that humanity's attachment to culture derives from two sources. First is the image of God. Humans aren't like beasts; we've been created in the image and likeness of God (Gn 1:26-28). We have a spiritual essence, being made for conscious communion with our Creator. God Himself is a being of culture. He communes within Himself in His triune being (Gn 1:26; Jn 17:5); He fashioned a universe of great wonder and diversity (Gn 1:1; Jn 1:1-3); and He continues to sustain that universe in exhaustive detail (Col 1:17; Heb 1:3). It shouldn't surprise us that a creature made in the likeness of such a God would be drawn toward cultural activities as well.

Second, humans have a mandate for culture, which, along with other works of God's law, is written on every human heart (Rm 2:14-15). God has created people to exercise dominion over other creatures (Gn 1:26-30)—the "cultural mandate." Rather than giving a license to tyranny and plunder, God intends that humans exercise the kind of responsible stewardship that allows for creatures to realize full potential and for God's goodness, beauty, and truth to flourish. In the process of carrying out this mandate, people create culture—language for communication; families for love and nurture; agriculture for sustenance; resource development for tools and pleasures; governments for social order; procedures, protocols, and practices; things useful and things beautiful—all part of our in-built, God-given drive to order our world and develop the beauty and potential of our environment.

Humans are made to employ hearts, minds, and hands in the creation, maintenance, and propagation of those artifacts, institutions, and conventions by which we define, sustain, and enrich our lives. Culture can be a rich means of bringing honor and glory to God, as God Himself knew in providing a specific and glorious design for His tabernacle and temple; as the psalmists showed in their skillful use of poetry and song; as Solomon demonstrated in government and public works to the astonishment of the world; and as Jesus showed through His powerful use of storytelling.

No human can be indifferent to culture. The key question for the disciple isn't whether to be involved in culture but how. Since Christ has been exalted as Lord, all culture must be put to use in a way that serves His interests and promotes His glory. Even down to the mundane details of table manners—"eating and drinking," we might say (1 Co 10:31)—all of culture is to be engaged and used for God's glory. The Christian church's heritage includes a vast repository of cultural firsts (hospitals, universities, musical notation); signal achievements (the music of Bach, the paintings of Rembrandt, the poetry of Hopkins); and everyday delights (hymns, books, inspiring stories). Such artifacts, institutions, and conventions—the stuff of culture—are the fruit of patient, deliberate labors of faithful believers who, understanding their duty as image bearers of God, and submitting to their Lord's cultural mandate, point the way for the rest of us to follow obediently in the path of culture to God's glory.

Does Scripture call us to engage culture? It certainly does. How can we ignore Scripture—the most significant cultural artifact in all of human history? And as God's image bearers, how can we ignore the calling to take every thought captive and offer all that we are and have to God's service and glory (2 Co 10:3-5; Rm 12:1-2)?

Did Jesus Really Rise from the Dead?

by William Lane Craig

To answer our question from a historical standpoint, we must first determine what facts concerning the fate of Jesus of Nazareth can be credibly established on the basis of the evidence and second consider what the best explanation of those facts is. At least four facts about the fate of the historical Jesus are widely accepted by NT historians today.

Fact 1: After His crucifixion, Jesus was buried by Joseph of Arimathea in a tomb. This fact is highly significant because it means that the location of Jesus' tomb was known in Jerusalem to Jews and Christians alike. New Testament scholars have established the fact of Jesus' entombment on the basis of evidence such as the following:

1. Jesus' burial is attested in the information (from before A.D. 36) that was handed on by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:3-5.
2. The burial story is independently attested in the source material that was used by Mark in writing his Gospel.
3. Given the understandable hostility in the early Christian movement toward the Jewish national leaders, Joseph of Arimathea, as a member of the Jewish high court that condemned Jesus, is unlikely to have been a Christian invention.
4. The burial story is simple and lacks any signs of being developed into a legend.
5. No other competing burial story exists.

For these and other reasons, the majority of NT critics concur that Jesus was in fact buried by Joseph of Arimathea in a tomb.

Fact 2: On the Sunday after the crucifixion, Jesus' tomb was found empty by a group of His women followers. Among the reasons that have led most scholars to this conclusion are the following:

1. In stating that Jesus "was buried, that He was raised on the third day," the old information transmitted by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:3-5 implies the empty tomb.
2. The empty tomb story also has multiple and independent attestation in Mark, Matthew, and John's source material, some of which is very early.
3. The empty tomb story as related in Mark, our earliest account, is simple and lacks signs of having been embellished as a legend.
4. Given that in Jewish patriarchal culture the testimony of women was regarded as unreliable, the fact that women, rather than men, were the chief witnesses to the empty tomb is best explained by the narrative's being true.
5. The earliest known Jewish response to the proclamation of Jesus' resurrection, namely, the "disciples came during the night and stole Him while we were sleeping" (Mt 28:12-15), was itself an attempt to explain why the body was missing and thus presupposes the empty tomb.

For these and other reasons, a majority of scholars hold firmly to the reliability of the biblical testimony to Jesus' empty tomb.

Fact 3: On multiple occasions, and under various circumstances, different individuals and groups saw Jesus alive after His death. This fact is almost universally acknowledged among NT scholars for the following reasons:

1. Given its early date as well as Paul's personal acquaintance with the people involved, the list of eyewitnesses to Jesus' resurrection appearances that is quoted by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:5-8 guarantees that such appearances occurred.

2. The appearance narratives in the Gospels provide multiple, independent attestations of the appearances.

Even the most skeptical critics acknowledge that the disciples had seen Jesus alive after His death.

Finally, fact 4: The original disciples suddenly and sincerely came to believe Jesus was risen from the dead, despite having every predisposition to the contrary. Consider the situation the disciples faced following Jesus' crucifixion:

1. Their leader was dead and Jewish messianic expectations did not expect a Messiah who, instead of triumphing over Israel's enemies, would be shamefully executed by them as a criminal.
2. According to OT law, Jesus' execution exposed Him as a heretic, a man accursed by God.
3. Jewish beliefs about the afterlife precluded anyone's rising from the dead to glory and immortality before the general resurrection of the dead at the end of the world.

Nevertheless, the original disciples suddenly came to believe so strongly that God had raised Jesus from the dead that they were willing to die for that belief.

We come now to our second concern: What is the best explanation of these four facts? In his book Justifying Historical Descriptions, historian C. B. McCullagh lists six tests historians use to determine the best explanation for a given body of historical facts. The hypothesis given by the eyewitnesses—"God raised Jesus from the dead"—passes all these tests:

1. It has great explanatory scope. It explains why the tomb was found empty, why the disciples saw postmortem appearances of Jesus, and why the Christian faith came into being.
2. It has great explanatory power. It explains why the body of Jesus was gone, why people repeatedly saw Jesus alive despite His earlier public execution, and so forth.
3. It is plausible. Given the historical context of Jesus' unparalleled life and claims, the resurrection makes sense as the divine confirmation of those radical claims.
4. It is not ad hoc or contrived. It requires only one additional hypothesis: that God exists.
5. It is in accord with accepted beliefs. The hypothesis "God raised Jesus from the dead" does not in any way conflict with the accepted belief that people do not rise naturally from the dead. The Christian accepts that belief as wholeheartedly as he accepts the hypothesis that God raised Jesus from the dead.
6. It far outstrips any of its rival theories in meeting conditions 1 through 5.

Down through history, various alternative explanations of the facts have been offered—the conspiracy theory, the apparent death theory, the hallucination theory, and so forth. Such hypotheses have been almost universally rejected by contemporary scholarship. No naturalistic hypothesis has, in fact, attracted a great number of scholars.

Therefore, the best explanation of the established facts seems to be that God raised Jesus from the dead.

We have firm historical grounds for answering our question in the affirmative. The historical route is not, however, the only avenue to a knowledge of Jesus' resurrection. The majority of Christians, who have had neither the resources, training, nor leisure to conduct a historical inquiry into this event, have come to a knowledge of Jesus' resurrection through a personal encounter with the living Lord (Rm 8:9-17).

Introduction to 1 Corinthians

AUTHOR

The first letter to the Corinthians was written by the Apostle Paul. Few scholars debate his authorship. Moreover, evidence from second-century manuscripts leaves no doubt about the integrity of the text as a whole.

Setting authorship and textual issues to one side, it should be noted that the initiative to write this letter was not entirely Paul's. The church in Corinth was in some degree of turmoil, and Paul wrote this letter in response to some disturbing reports he had heard from the church as well as by way of reply to a set of questions the church had sent to him. Paul used these questions and concerns to set the agenda for this masterly letter. He addressed the issues of wisdom (chaps. 1–4), sexual practices (chaps. 5–7), pagan sacrifices (chaps. 8–10), behavior in church (chaps. 11–14), and the resurrection of the body (chap. 15). As in other letters, Paul touched on personal issues in his final chapter.

DATE

Since Acts includes references to two datable events in the Roman world, we can use those to date the letters to the Corinthians. The first event was the expulsion of Jews from Rome in A.D. 49 by the Emperor Claudius (a date we can find reference to in the writings of the historian Suetonius, Claudius 25.4). This mass exodus brought Aquila and Priscilla to Corinth (Ac 18:2). The second datable event was the appointment of Gallio as governor of the province of Achaia in mid A.D. 51 (based on the Gallio inscription found at Delphi). Luke noted in Acts 18:12 that "Gallio was proconsul of Achaia" while Paul was in Corinth.

We are able to say, therefore, that Paul arrived in Corinth sometime in A.D. 50 and left about the middle of A.D. 52 (Ac 18:11). Some months later Paul came to Ephesus, where he remained for around three years. Toward the end of his ministry there, he wrote 1 Corinthians, most likely dated A.D. 54, although it appears that Paul also wrote an earlier letter that has not survived (1 Co 5:9).

THEMES

Many have observed that the powerful pagan culture of the city of Corinth affected the values and behavior of these new Christians and that 1 Corinthians is Paul's corrective to these pressures. In chapters 1–4 Paul engaged in debate over the "wisdom of this world"; in chapters 5–7 he addressed Corinth's prevalent sexuality and lawsuits; in chapters 8–10 the issue is the city's idol worship; in chapters 11–14 he confronted them for allowing worldliness into the church in the rich/poor division and the love of personal display in the church meetings; finally, in chapter 15, Paul responded to Greek skepticism about the resurrection of the body. In a sense, then, 1 Corinthians is about the clash in Greco-Roman Corinth between the gospel of the crucified and risen Christ and the multifaceted pagan culture of that day.

Perhaps not so often noticed is the likely underlying problem in Corinth and the reason Paul needed to write: this was a young church, and Paul had now been absent from them longer than he had been with them. The church appears to have been unsettled by visits from the gifted Apollos and the apostolic Peter—unsettled, that is, in regard to Paul's role as their "father" in the gospel. It also seems that local leaders had arisen in the past two or three years and were taking pride in their eloquence ("wisdom") and objecting to Paul's ongoing apostolic oversight exercised from a distance. Paul wrote to counteract these problems and to provide a clear vision for the direction of the young church.

1 Corinthians Study Notes

1:1-17 Here Paul identified three issues that dominate1 Co: (1) With his reference to the church as "sanctified in Christ Jesus" (v. 2), he anticipated the Corinthians' ongoing involvement with cult prostitutes. (2) His thanks to God for their gifts of "speaking" and "knowledge" sent an early signal for an issue to be addressed later (vv. 4-9). (3) His rebuke over divisions—both amongst them and against him—introduced a theme repeated throughout the letter (vv. 10-17).

The items mentioned—being desensitized in sexual matters, preoccupied with their gifts of knowing and speaking, and myopically focused on their favored leaders—were symptoms of a deep malaise among the Corinthian Christians. They were fascinated with themselves to the exclusion of one another and, more importantly, of God and His rule in their lives.

1:14-17 That Paul baptized only a few in Corinth does not imply that he had a low view of baptism or that he was somehow disobedient to the Great Commission—"Make disciples . . . baptizing them" (Mt 28:19). The gospel was Paul's priority, without which there can be no baptism; the "sign" depends on the "word." Paul did not say the Corinthians were not baptized, only that he himself did not baptize many. Presumably local elders baptized new converts.

1:18-25 Paul's theological response to the Corinthians' self-absorption (vv. 1-17) was as offensive to religious people ("Jews") and to intellectuals ("Greeks") then as it is now. The former seek miraculous "signs" in the heavens, and the latter demand "proof." God accommodates neither expression of self-centeredness. Rather, God has displayed His wisdom and power in the most unlikely place—the terrible crucifixion of the Messiah. In the message of the cross, God has reached down and dirtied His hands, revealing His inner character of love, mercy, and forgiveness and in the process humbling the proud and overturning human opinion about greatness. Ironically, God's greatness is evidenced by the depths to which He is willing to go to rescue humans from sin. To use John's language, the "lifting up" of Jesus (Jn 3:14; 12:32) in the literal sense (on the cross—a place of public shame and God's curse) is also the exaltation or "glorifying" of Jesus (Jn 12:23) in a spiritual sense (the cross magnificently displaying God's love).

1:26-27 God's unimaginable humility in identifying Himself with a crucified outcast Jew was reflected in the generally "ordinary" character of those who received this message and who assembled in the name of Jesus. "Not many [were] wise . . . powerful . . . ofnoble birth." Yet in the Lord they boasted due to their "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption" in Him (v. 30).

2:1-5 The slick, impressive style of speaking that dazzled some Corinthians was inappropriate to the message of Christ crucified. In repudiating "brilliance of speech or wisdom" (v. 1), Paul was not condemning effective speech or rigorous thinking per se. After all, elsewhere he exhorted his audience to be mature in their thinking (14:20; Eph 4:14). But rather he was saying that the flowery, pretentious rhetoric so much loved by the Greeks was inconsistent with the God whose word it was that men like Paul spoke. Paul was far more concerned with the message than with the medium.

If the "wisdom" of God for human history is the message of the crucified Messiah, then the hope for humanity arising from it is, by contrast, indescribably glorious (vv. 6-13). Paul knew firsthand what it was like to be blinded to the glory of Jesus Christ. Although there is no record he was part of those who called for Jesus' death, he was of the same mind in the early days of the church. God had been merciful to him and by the Spirit's special illumination, Paul had glimpsed—but only just glimpsed—the glory of Jesus Christ that far surpassed what humans are able to see apart from the Spirit's illumination.

3:1 Paul commented on three responses to the message of glory following crucifixion (2:14–3:4). First, there are those called "unspiritual"; the Greek term (psychikos) means "devoid of the Spirit" or "merely natural" (Jd 19). These are the typical citizens of the fallen age, the children of Adam blinded to God by Satan, the "god of this age" (2 Co 4:4), who fail completely to grasp the message of the cross. Second, at the opposite extreme, are those Paul called "spiritual" people; that is, they have the Spirit of God and should be expected to live lives submitted to the Spirit. Because they have the Spirit, they are "spiritual." Sadly, Paul could not address the Corinthians as "spiritual" since they were operating on a purely human level (v. 4). They were immature believers, "babies in Christ"—ready only for milk, not solids. Despite having gifts of the Spirit, they were troublingly like the outsiders, the rank unbelievers, in their values and behavior. This is evident in their preoccupation with the personalities who had preached to them (v. 4).

3:5 The way forward for the "babies" in Corinth was to grow up by adopting sensible, godly attitudes toward their ministers, who were merely "servants through whom [not in whom] you believed," according to the role God had assigned to them. Paul called the congregation "God's field" in which he and Apollos had their important functions co-working with God while being utterly dependent upon God for the growth.

Changing the imagery (vv. 10-15), Paul called the congregation a "building" for which he had laid the foundation. He implied that some builders who had come after him had not built with materials of the quality of the foundation. Paul had preached Christ as the only foundation of a church, implying that the superstructure must be of the same material. What is built on the foundation will be tested by fire, and that test will reveal the quality of the work. There is no contradiction here with Jesus' words to Peter as the "rock" on which He would build His church (Mt 16:18). Jesus was observing that Peter's confession of Jesus as the Christ would prove to be the "foundation" of the church. Historically, Peter was the first to identify Jesus as the Christ, the first to preach that message soon after the first Easter and to lay the foundations of Christianity in Israel. Paul's words are in complete agreement with those of Jesus.

3:16-17 Paul's reference to the church as a "building" prompted him to call it the "sanctuary" with a severe warning to the divisive Corinthians about destroying it by their factions. This is not to contradict the biblical teaching of "the endurance of the saints" (Rv 14:12). God causes His children to "persevere" by giving warnings, as here, but also by giving encouragements.

3:18-23 Paul rebuked those who were wise in their own eyes and were fascinated by various leaders. Let them understand God's good purposes for them, providing such ministers as Paul, Apollos, and Cephas (Peter). This called for humility and maturity, that the Corinthians might become the "spiritual" believers God intended them to be and not act like outsiders.

4:1-7 Continuing to address the nature of true Christian ministry, Paul directed attention to himself. This he did to save face for the local preachers in Corinth, who were clearly at fault in cultivating partisan support. Let them be like Paul—a "servant of Christ" and a "manager of God's mysteries" (that is, the gospel).

4:8-13 The Corinthians arrogantly believed their wisdom of speech was of such an order that (somehow) the kingdom of God had come already. They assumed no further need for Paul whose gifts and strength seemed to pale beside theirs. Paul had to return to the theme of Christ crucified, and applied that theme to himself as one who was suffering for the word of God. God's servant represented his God in faithfulness and humility, not with showy bravado. Let them—his children—be like him, their only father in the gospel. When he came, their big talk would melt away.

5:1 Corinth straddled a narrow isthmus between two waterways, with ports on each side bustling with seafarers. Aphrodite, the sexual goddess, was the city's patron deity. Inevitably, the promiscuity of the city shaped the minds and hearts of its citizens. So pervasive and deep was this influence that even when a person became a Christian, it did not easily go away. In chapters 5–7 Paul urged sexual purity in a city of low moral standards. Here a form of incest that caused even pagans to blush had to be confronted. A man was living with his father's wife—apparently his step-mother.

5:5 What did turning over the sexual offender "to Satan" mean? It was Paul's code for the exclusion of an unrepentant offender from the circle of redemption (the congregation) to the sphere where Satan dominated the children of Adam (the outside world), where this man indicated he really belonged. This exclusion, however, was redemptive in intent. Let the bitterness and darkness of the world outside bring its own impact on the man so that he might repent and be restored (cp. especially 2 Th 3:6,14-15).

6:1-11 Apparently Corinthian believers were quick to rush to the courts. They could not simply fall in with the litigious practices of their city but needed to sort out their differences among themselves.

6:12-20 While it was customary for Corinthian men to have sex with prostitutes at local temples, Paul argued that this should not be the practice of the followers of Christ.

Paul mentioned same-sex eroticism among the vices that bar the practitioners from the kingdom of God (vv. 9-11). The Greek words malakos ("soft [one]") and arsenokoites ("one who has coitus with a man") make clear that Paul was not talking about sexual inclination or orientation, but sodomy—the act of sexual penetration between men. Elsewhere Paul cited the homosexual/lesbian way of life as symptomatic of humanity's rejection of God and His design at creation (Rm 1:24-27). Unholy sexual practice easily becomes entrenched behavior; disengaging from it is difficult. Nonetheless, in Paul's words "some of you were like this" (italics ours), we see that such disengagement is both possible and necessary (v. 11). (See the article, "What Does the Bible Teach About Homosexuality?" p. 1716.)

7:8-16 The issue here relates to Paul's teaching about remarriage. In giving his own teaching, was he contradicting Jesus? Jesus' general teaching on lifelong marriage (Mt 5:31-32; 19:1-9) inevitably did not address the specific situations Paul encountered in Corinth, where a husband or wife had been converted to Christ out of paganism. Thus, if the unbelieving spouse abandoned the believer, then the believer should let that person go. If an unbelieving spouse wanted to continue with the believer in the marriage, the believer was not to send the unbeliever away. So Paul was not contradicting or adding to Jesus' teaching; he was applying it in a particular context.

Scripture presents two clear violations of the marriage covenant (Gn 2:24; Mt 19:5): desertion (which violates the command to "bond") and adultery (which violates the command to be "one flesh"); breaking of these are legitimate grounds for divorce (and thus remarriage). Where there has been no such rupture, remarriage after divorce is not an option. When possible, however, reconciliation is the ideal.

7:21-23 Are Paul's encouragements to slaves to seek freedom in contradiction to his (apparent) acceptance of slavery (e.g., Eph 6:5-8)? While Paul valued freedom (and here encouraged slaves to obtain freedom if they had opportunity), he knew any attempt by slaves to abolish slavery would mean certain death. The Romans were ruthless at suppressing slave revolts like the uprising led by Spartacus in 73 B.C. (see note on Phm 16).

8:5 Paul's comment that there were "many 'gods' and many 'lords' " in Corinth is confirmed by the travel writer Pausanias, who visited Corinth soon after Paul. Temples and shrines were everywhere. Pagan priests offered sacrificial animals to the gods; leftover meat was sold in shops. Family dinners were held in rooms attached to the temples in the presence of the statues of deities. The religious culture of Corinth was simultaneously the city's civic culture. To disengage from the one was to disengage from the other, with serious social and financial consequences.

8:6 In a remarkable affirmation, Paul called Jesus Christ the "one Lord." Paul the Jew was echoing but reconfiguring the thrice-daily prayer known as the*Shema*: "Listen, Israel . . . the LORD is One" (Dt 6:4-6). He added later, "If anyone does not love the Lord, a curse be on him" (1 Co 16:22). The "Lord Jesus" is being identified with Yahweh, the God of Israel. Other Jewish NT writers routinely made this astonishing identification (e.g., 1 Pt 3:15; see Is 8:13). It is important to keep in mind that Paul, the monotheist, wrote this a mere 20 years after Jesus' crucifixion, indicating a high view of Jesus very early on in the church. This high view of Jesus is taken for granted and beyond dispute in the NT.

Jehovah's Witnesses and Christadelphians, who sit between Judaism and Christianity but belong to neither, must take seriously Christ's divine lordship based on such passages. Similarly, Mormons, by taking the words "for us" (1 Co 8:6) and thus allowing for the recognition of other gods, misunderstand Paul's intent. By saying "even if there are so-called gods" (v. 5), he meant they existed only in the minds of Corinthian idolaters. However, the words "for us there is one God, the Father . . . and one Lord, Jesus Christ" point to the new reality these readers have come to know through the gospel. Corinthian believers had acknowledged and appropriated this reality ("for us").

8:7-9 Paul addressed a pastoral problem related to food sacrificed to idols. Some believers felt there was nothing wrong with eating this meat that, following the sacrifice, was sold in shops near the temple. Such believers knew that the gods to whom the meat had been offered were nonexistent. God had created this food and there was no problem with purchasing and eating it. On the other hand, some believers who had believed in these gods prior to their coming to Christ, would have a bad conscience about eating meat offered to idols. Paul's primary concern was that believers look to the good of fellow believers, the brothers or sisters with weaker consciences. Paul himself was willing to relinquish personal rights (9:1-27) to encourage the stronger Christians to make concessions for the weaker believers. In 10:14-22 he wrote that one should not attend temples where sacrifices to pagan deities were being made since this would mean being in spiritual fellowship with demons.

9:1-18 Chapters 8–10 raise important questions. Paul's primary test in dealing with these issues was, "What is best for the church? What is best for other believers?" He subordinated a number of legitimate possibilities—all good in themselves—in order to do what was best for the church and for his fellow believers. This was a reversal of attitudes prevalent in the Corinthian church where members were looking to their own good and not asking about the good of others or the good of the body of Christ.

9:19-24 Paul was no chameleon, changing colors to adapt to different environments. His message in all contexts was the same but his manner of communication differed according to the understandings of his audience.

10:8 Why is there an apparent discrepancy between the 23,000 who died arising from sexual sin and the 24,000 mentioned in Nm 25:9? The most likely explanation is that Paul was relying on a version of the Greek Bible not known to us.

11:1 Was Paul being arrogant when he called for others to imitate him? Not at all. Living in a preliterary age, he was adopting a deliberate teaching strategy—calling on new converts to imitate the patterns of behavior he modeled for them. Working to support oneself was one such pattern, and relinquishing liberties for the sake of others was another. In fact, 1 Th 2:14 speaks of persecuted Thessalonian believers being imitators of suffering Judean churches—just as they had imitated both Paul and Christ in how they received the gospel (1 Th 1:6).

11:3 Does calling God the Father the "head" of Christ suggest the Son's subordination to the Father and deny the doctrine of the Trinity? Indeed not! Rather, Paul was echoing Jesus' own words, that though the Son is equal in "substance" with the Father (and the Spirit), the Son is (eternally) submissive to the will of the Father (see Jn 5:17-24).

Jesus' apostles taught that a husband is the family's "head" and that wives are to acknowledge this (Eph 5:22-33; 1 Pt 3:1-7). For their part, Christian men are to love their wives sacrificially as Christ loved the church. Earlier, in the context of sexual purity and conjugal obligations, Paul pointed out that wives have authority over their husbands' bodies and that husbands and wives should not deprive one another sexually (1 Co 7:3-5).

11:5 Paul admonished women prophets for speaking in church without their marriage veil (or neatly arranged hair). Also in this chapter, Paul taught that masculinity and femininity should be clearly visible in the self-presentation of men and women. This, however, merely updates the concerns to differentiate the sexes along the lines reflected in the OT. In public worship, women's voices were heard in both "praying" and "prophesying," although the nature of the latter is somewhat uncertain (see 14:34).

12:1 As Paul began this letter, he gave thanks for God's grace evident among the Corinthians in the fact that they did "not lack any spiritual gift" (1:7). And yet, they were not handling this spiritual endowment well. Some wisdom and instruction were needed in the exercise of spiritual gifts and in recognizing the spiritual gifts of others of the body.

12:3 The evidence of having God's Spirit is confessing (at baptism), "Jesus is Lord."

12:4-7 Speaking in tongues and prophesying are just some gifts among others in the multi-gifted membership of the body of Christ. Gifts are not evidence of spirituality or superiority. In fact, gifts not employed in other-centered, self-forgetting love are useless. Gifts are God's provision for this present age only; love is what matters in the end (12:31–13:13). In fact, the displays of some of the believers were contributing to chaotic noisy meetings that failed to build up believers and scandalized visiting unbelievers (14:20-36).

14:34 Why did Paul allow women to pray and prophesy (11:5) but here called for women to "be silent"? Apparently, wives were calling out questions to their husbands, perhaps while their husbands were prophesying or speaking in tongues. This contributed further to the noisy chaos of the meetings. Paul's call for silence, therefore, was not absolute but specific; he wanted wives to wait to ask their husbands their questions at home. In both 11:5 and 14:34, the real issue is the wife's recognition of her husband's God-given role of "head" in relation to her. For this reason, she was to wear a marriage veil (or something like that) when prophesying and to keep quiet when her husband was speaking in church.

14:37 Those who prophesied or reported some revelation from God were still subject to the authoritative words of the apostle, who spoke as from the Lord Himself.

15:1 This chapter addresses Corinthian skepticism about the future resurrection (vv. 12,35). At issue was the difference between the Greek (and Corinthian) and Hebrew understandings of the life to come. Greeks who believed in an afterlife tended to speak of the immortality of the soul. They viewed the soul as something different than matter. In the Greek view, the soul is liberated from the body and lives forever in a non-corporeal state. Christians are in the Hebrew tradition regarding the afterlife, believing in the resurrection of the body. The resurrected Christ is Exhibit A and a glimpse of the life to come. (On the intermediate state, the state between the death of a person and their being raised to life everlasting see 2 Co 5:1-9.)

15:3-7 Paul probably received this confessional statement 20 years earlier at his baptism in Damascus and later handed it over to the Corinthians when he established the church there. This vital summary of Christian belief was formed during the period between Christ's resurrection and Paul's Damascus call and baptism. This formula was carried by fugitives from Paul's persecutions to Damascus, where it was handed over to the new convert at his baptism. This statement may be the earliest formulation of NT Christianity, predating Paul's earliest letters by 15 years.

This section raises some questions. First, the "third day" need not imply three complete days; Jews counted partial days as whole days. Jesus was buried on Friday, and the tomb was empty when the women arrived at Sunday's first light. Also, Christ was "raised on the third day according to the Scriptures." Where in the OT is this anticipated? Here it is not clear whetherthe Scriptures prophesy the fact of His resurrection or the detail of His resurrection on the third day. There are OT passages for both possibilities: Ps 16:10 for the first and Hos 6:2 for the second. Note, too, that help, salvation, or deliverance is frequently associated with the "third day" in the OT (see Gn 22:4; 40:20; 42:18; Ex 15:22-25; 19:11; 2 Kg 20:5; Est 5:1; Jnh 1:17)—all the more appropriate for God delivering His Son from death on the third day!

Second, Paul did not mention the empty tomb (though each of the Gospels does). The word translated "buried" means "entombed, placed horizontally in a [rock] tomb," not "placed down into the ground." Yet Paul strongly implied an empty tomb; what else could the original words "He was buried . . . He was raised" mean? For the first-century Jew, a resurrection that left a body in the tomb was a contradiction in terms. Furthermore, Paul cited a tradition that Peter also articulated in different words: "They killed Him . . . God raised up this man on the third day and permitted Him to be seen . . . by us, witnesses appointed beforehand by God" (Ac 10:39-41); the empty tomb was assumed. Neither Peter nor Paul specifically mentioned the empty tomb in this commonly held "third day" tradition, whereas it was prominent in the "first day" traditions underlying the Gospels. This is no contradiction, however, but merely points to a number of overlapping early traditions of the gospel that were then current.

The specific place or occasion on which the risen Christ appeared to more than 500 brothers at once is not known. Paul added that most of these witnesses were still alive when he wrote. In effect, Paul was inviting the Corinthians to check this out if they wished. Jesus' resurrection was not just His spirit being received in heaven. His body was raised from death and was seen not only by individuals, by small groups, but by a large group.

15:8-9 Christ's appearance to Paul occurred many months after the appearances to the other named witnesses. The original gospel formulation Paul received clearly did not contain references to Christ's appearance to him. Paul added this afterward.

Paul here wrote of himself as "abnormally born," an unusual expression that may mean "born later than expected." Unlike the Twelve, Paul became an apostle without having had the "gestation period" of knowing Jesus on earth, ministering with Him, listening to His teaching. Rather than being eased into apostleship, Paul was dramatically confronted on the Damascus road. All this, however, only reinforces the proposal that the earlier appearances to Peter and the others were concrete, bodily manifestations on earth. Paul was not in any way implying that he merely "saw" the Lord in his mind or as a subjective vision. Paul saw Christ objectively, outside of himself, raised from the dead and exalted at God's right hand (see Ac 7:56).

15:12 The phrase, "resurrection of the dead" (lit. "the standing up of dead ones") meant just that. The notion of a nonmaterial resurrection—an idea that appeals to so many today—would have been incomprehensible to Jews then.

15:29 Paul's question to the Corinthians about why they were "being baptized for the dead" is puzzling and most unusual, and no parallel reference in the NT exists to clarify this. The context gives some help: Paul spoke of "danger" to him (v. 30) and of being, metaphorically speaking, forced to fight wild animals (v. 32). Life was precarious for the apostle and, we infer, for the local church people also. Our best guess, therefore, is that some believers in Corinth had lost their lives under persecution before an opportunity arose for baptism and that others had been baptized in their place (Gk hyper), by substitution. Presumably this was done for pastoral reasons—to assure surviving believers, including family members, that all that baptism signified was true for the deceased.

Note that Paul did not prescribe this practice but merely referred to it. Mormon baptism for the dead cannot be sustained by this obscure reference. The vicarious baptism for thousands of deceased persons (including tracking and storing genealogical records) grossly distorts Paul's teaching. Paul simply said the practice of being baptized on behalf of deceased members was utterly irrational where the resurrection of the dead was being doubted, as it was by some within the Corinthian church.

15:44 Are the spiritual bodies believers will have at the coming resurrection nonmaterial bodies? If so, it would imply that Christ's risen body was nonmaterial. This, however, was not what Paul meant. Rather, descendants of fallen Adam cannot enter God's kingdom unchanged. The "spiritual body" is a true body—a material body—but a transformed body. The two bodies being contrasted are not "physical" vs. "spiritual" but rather "soul-oriented [psychikon]" vs. "Spirit-oriented [pneumatikon]." (See 2:14-15, where Paul contrasted the psychikos person, or the natural/this-worldly-oriented person, with the pneumatikos, or the believer, who has God's Spirit.) Also, Paul's reference to the spiritual body was not to Christ's risen body but to the risen bodies of the descendants of the first man, Adam, redeemed so as to be fit for the kingdom of God (15:42-50).

16:1-3 Two questions remain from the Corinthians' letter. The first pertains to collection arrangements—Paul's plans to come to Corinth to collect money for the impoverished Jerusalem church. The second refers to Apollos's return to Corinth (v. 12). Apparently, Paul kept these answers until the closing stages of the letter to allow him to raise related matters, in particular Paul's own plans to return to Corinth (vv. 5-9), the need to respect Timothy when he came (vv. 10-11), and the importance of submitting to local leaders—Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus (vv. 15-18).

16:21-24 At the letter's end, Paul took the pen from his amanuensis (scribe), concluding the letter with these four sentences written in his own hand. Among these is the original Aramaic prayer Maran atha ("Come back, Lord"). This likely preserves the very words of the Jerusalem church's invocation to the risen and ascendedJesus. This Aramaic prayer indicates a very early tradition known to Gentile Christians, which strongly supports an early belief of Jesus' sharing God's identity.

Paul's curse on those who do not "love the Lord[Jesus]" (v. 22) picks up 8:6, where Paul christologically reconstructed the Shema ("Listen, Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is One. Love the LORD your God," Dt 6:4-6). With Jesus' resurrection and exaltation, the apostles, though Jews, now understood that the Lord Jesus is to be identified with Yahweh, the Lord, the God of Israel—something the Corinthian believers had been taught and indeed had publicly confessed at baptism (12:3,13). So to reject that conviction now would bring God's severe condemnation. Paul was not speaking here about the generality of unbelievers but about disbelieving church members.

2 Corinthians Articles

What Are Self-defeating Statements?

by J. P. Moreland

There are no moral absolutes, so you ought to stop judging the moral beliefs and behaviors of others!" A crucial flaw in one's views is when one makes a self-defeating (also called "self-refuting" or "self-referentially incoherent") statement.

What exactly is a self-defeating statement? It is a statement with three characteristics. (1) It establishes some requirement of acceptability for an assertion (or sentence, proposition, or theory). (2) It places itself in subjection to this requirement. (3) It fails to satisfy the requirement of acceptability that the assertion itself stipulates.

A statement is about a subject matter. The subject matter for "All dogs are mammals" is dogs. When a statement is included in its own subject matter and fails to satisfy its own standards of acceptability, it is self-defeating.

Some examples of self-defeating statements are these: "No sentence is longer than three words." "I cannot utter a word of English" (spoken in English). "I do not exist." "There is no truth." "There are no truths that cannot be verified by the five senses or by science."

In identifying a self-defeating statement, we must exercise great care in making sure that the statement actually refers to itself, that it is a part of its own subject matter. For example, the claim that one cannot utter a word of English is not self-defeating if asserted in French. More importantly, the statement "There are no moral absolutes," though false, is not self-defeating. Why? The statement is a philosophical assertion about morality and not a claim of morality.

To be a claim of morality, an assertion must be a moral rule such as "Do not kill," "Abortion is wrong," or "One ought to be tolerant of others." "There are no moral absolutes" is not itself a moral rule. Like a statement made in English about all French statements (for example, "No French statement is longer than three words"), "There are no moral absolutes" is false. But since it is not included in its own subject matter, it does not refer to itself and therefore is not self-refuting.

Another important example is "There are no moral rules, so one ought to refrain from passing judgment on others." Is this self-defeating? It's hard to tell because the word ought is ambiguous and comes with different meanings: A rational ought occurs in "Given the evidence, one ought to conclude that the defendant is guilty." A rational ought places an intellectual duty on someone, and a violator is irrational, not immoral. An aesthetic ought occurs in "One ought to play this piece with great emotion." This places an aesthetic duty on someone, and a violator is guilty of failing to produce beauty. A moral ought occurs in "One ought to keep one's promises." This places a moral duty on someone, and a violator is immoral.

The ought in "There are no moral rules, so one ought to refrain from passing judgment on others" is either a rational or a moral ought. If the former, the assertion means "Given all the evidence, there just are no moral rules, so one has an intellectual duty to stop judging that others have violated absolute moral rules when there are none." Though false, this statement is not self-defeating because it is not itself an example of asserting a moral obligation. Rather, it asserts an intellectual duty, and a violator would be irrational, not immoral. But if the ought is a moral one, then the sentence is self-refuting: "There are no moral rules, so one has a moral duty to follow this moral rule—do not judge others."

Some statements, such as "2 + 2 = 7," could not possibly be true. Others, such as "There are no dogs," happen to be false but could have been true. Self-defeating statements do not just happen to be false; rather, they are necessarily false. For example, it is impossible for these statements to be true: "There are no truths" and "Only what is testable by science can be true." Among other things, this means that no amount of future research will show that a self-refuting statement was true after all. This is important, because a statement like "Only what is testable by science can be true" is not itself testable by science, so a skeptic cannot say that, while there may be no current evidence for its truth, someday science will advance to the point of proving that it is true after all.

Are Scientology and the Bible Compatible?

by Philip R. Roberts

Scientology is a cryptic new American religious movement begun in the 1950s. Ron L. Hubbard (1911–1986), a science fiction writer, founded it. Although his parents were largely nonreligious, Hubbard was exposed to Eastern religions, New Age thought, and various spiritistic groups, such as Meister Crowley and the Process.

Scientology makes occasional reference to Jesus Christ in its writings and uses as its symbol a cross with starbursts at each end. But even though it refers to itself as a church and may at times use Christian terminology and symbolism, it is clearly nonbiblical in its view of God, Jesus, Scripture, salvation, and other important doctrines. In fact, it may be challenged whether Scientology is a religion at all. It is largely a pseudo-psychological therapy movement. Ron Hubbard originally sought admission for the movement in the American Psychological Association. After being rejected for membership by the APA, Hubbard framed Scientology as a religion.

Scripture

The Church of Scientology does not subscribe to the view that God inspired a holy book, such as the Bible, that serves as divine revelation. Instead it lists as revelation Dianetics (1950), authored by Hubbard, as well as The Factors and The Axioms and Logics. The former book attempts to instruct adherents in the practice of Scientology, while the latter works are simply statements of the principles and beliefs of the movement.

No elements of Scientology's texts bear the mark of divine inspiration. There are no fulfilled prophecies in them and neither are they a narrative of God's love and redemption as is the Bible.

God

Scientology's earlier writings mention God, but they place their stress mainly on an individual's abilities to gain godlike qualities and become "full cause" over the universe. Hubbard obviously rejected the Christian understanding of God, particularly the concept of the Trinity.

Scientology adheres to a view of deities similar to that of Buddhism, using "allness of all" terminology. Its founder therefore could comment that man is part god and can attain a godlike nature.

Jesus Christ

Scientology does not accept the biblical concepts of Jesus as God the Word incarnate. It also places no emphasis on the substitutionary death and resurrection of Jesus. Rather, it views Jesus as a proponent of reincarnation and other Eastern mystical concepts. Hubbard taught that Jesus was "a shade above clear," or that Jesus met the standards (slightly at best) of living above the negative influences of His previous lives. Scientology's upper-level materials tout the concept of Jesus as God as being a fiction that ought to be removed by "auditing."

Man

Scientology views man's spirit as being the product of evolutionary processes. It rejects biblical concepts of man as being the creation of God and being fallen due to sin, with the need for repentance, faith, and salvation. Instead, Scientology maintains that we are primarily spiritual beings, that is, "thetans," and creators of the universe. The goal of life is to "clear" oneself of one's reactive mind and become "total cause over life, thought, matter, energy, space and time."

Salvation

The goal of Scientology is to press for the evolutionary improvement of oneself as a spiritual being. The removal of engrams (negative previous life experiences stored in the mind) through "auditing" by a Scientology auditor using an electronic meter makes life improvement possible. The movement rejects all concepts of a biblical understanding of salvation.

Introduction to 2 Corinthians

AUTHOR

Second Corinthians is one part of a chain of correspondence dealing with events surrounding the Christian community at the Greek city of Corinth. It is best understood within this historical context.

Between A.D. 49 and A.D. 51, the Apostle Paul was in Corinth establishing the church there, assisted for a time by Silvanus and Timothy (2 Co 1:19). Then, from A.D. 52 until A.D. 55, Paul was in Ephesus, about a three days' journey by sea from Corinth. Soon after Paul left Corinth, a number of visitors came to the city: Apollos, Cephas (Peter), the Lord's brothers, and possibly Barnabas. During this period, Paul wrote a now-lost letter (1 Co 5:9).

Sometime around A.D. 54, a Corinthian delegation arrived in Ephesus reporting major problems in the church. During this time, a letter was brought from some Corinthian members raising a number of questions. First Corinthians is Paul's initial response to these reports and questions.

Soon afterward Paul dispatched Timothy to bring back news about the letter's reception. Timothy's report was negative—so alarming, in fact, that Paul made an unscheduled journey to Corinth. Paul found the church in disarray, with many members openly rebellious against him. Paul said this second visit to Corinth was a "painful visit" (2:1; cp. 12:21–13:2). Upon returning to Ephesus, Paul wrote a letter (delivered by Titus), sometimes termed "the severe letter" (referred to in 2:3-4; 7:8-12), calling upon the Corinthians to recognize Paul's apostolic authority.

Sometime afterward (c. A.D. 55), Paul left Ephesus, traveling north to Troas (a port city). There he had arranged to meet Titus and hear how the Corinthians had responded to the severe letter (2:12). Not finding Titus there, Paul crossed over to Macedonia to await him in that location. Eventually Titus arrived, reporting the Corinthians' response to the recent letter and bringing news of other developments in Corinth (7:5-7). The book of 2 Corinthians (actually his fourth letter to that church) was Paul's response to the news brought by Titus.

UNITY

While 1 and 2 Corinthians are confidently attributed to Paul, and while 1 Corinthians is widely recognized as a unified whole, many scholars claim 2 Corinthians is an amalgam of fragments. Chapters 10–13 were supposedly written separately and later than chapters 1–9. Chapters 2:14–7:4 may not have originally been part of chapters 1–9. Many believe 6:14–7:1 is a non-Pauline fragment inserted into the text. Some have identified 6:14–7:4 as the now-lost previous letter (1 Co 5:9) and either 6:14–7:1 or chapters 10–13 as the lost "severe letter" (2:3-4; 7:8-12).

In response, we can put matters into perspective by looking at the history of Paul's relationship with the Corinthians and important literary considerations within 2 Corinthians.

We are now in a position to decide the issue of the "previous letter" and the "severe letter." Clearly the "previous letter" predated 1 Corinthians; it has no connection with 2 Corinthians. But what of the "severe letter," which some identify with a fragment within 2 Corinthians (6:14–7:1 or 10–13)?

Neither passage qualifies as the "severe letter." For one thing, 6:14–7:1 is too brief and lacking too many marks of a letter to be considered a letter. For another, the "severe letter" is referred to retrospectively within chapters 10–13, namely at 10:10.

Some suggest chapters 10–13 was a separate letter, written not long after the dispatch of chapters 1–9. By this explanation, chapters 10–13 were editorially attached to the earlier letter as a kind of appendix at some later time.

This is questionable, as early Christians copying his manuscripts would not have felt at liberty to discard the concluding sentences of one and the opening sentence of another of Paul's letters. The second-century manuscript evidence supports their unity.

Those seeing chapters 10–13 as fundamentally different from chapters 1–9, but whose approach is generally conservative, tend to resolve the problem by supposing Paul received news of a deteriorating situation in Corinth during the writing of the letter, which dramatically affected the character of chapters 10–13. But would Paul have sent a letter, the first part of which would now be redundant?

Moreover, the letter presents a natural progression. In chapters 1–2 Paul updated the Corinthians with his past movements after leaving them and explained why he did not directly return. Chapters 6–9 challenge them about current issues, particularly their continuing participation at pagan temples and their failure to complete the collection for Judean believers. In chapters 10–13 he anticipated his future (and final) visit to Corinth and exhorted his readers to set their house in order before he came. Thus 2 Corinthians presents a chronological logic, moving from past to present to future.

2 Corinthians Study Notes

1:3 Paul's defense of his ethical behavior is found throughout the letter (in particular at 1:3–2:27; 4:1-6; 5:11-13; 6:3–7:16; 11:1–12:19).

1:7 In addition to the arguments set forth in the introduction to this book, further evidence for unity between chapters 1–9 and 10–13 can be found in the vocabulary Paul used within the four "sufferings" passages scattered throughout the whole of the letter (1:7-11; 4:8-10; 6:4-10; 11:23–12:10). Much of the vocabulary common to these passages occurs nowhere else in Paul's writings; this is evidence for the overarching unity of the letter.

1:15 The major theme within 2 Co is Paul's defense of his ministry under the new covenant. Paul's relationship with the Corinthians was now quite strained for three reasons. First, Paul didn't return as promised. Instead, he sent a severe letter (1:15–2:4; 10:10; 12:13-15). Second, a face-to-face visit only deepened the conflict between Paul and the Corinthians (10:1-10; 13:3-4). Third, Paul refused to accept payment for ministry (11:8-9), and some Corinthians believed that Paul had been duplicitous in this matter. He made much of declining payment, but (his detractors said) his co-workers received money for him anyway (12:16-18).

2:13 Paul here mentioned going to Macedonia. The long passage (2:14–7:4) is regarded by some as extraneous on account of references to Macedonia (cp. 7:5: "When we came into Macedonia . . ."). It is far more likely Paul inserted this long, seemingly unrelated passage between two references to Macedonia than that someone else did. It is highly plausible that Paul himself, conscious of a long digression, reintroduced Macedonia to signal that he had resumed his recapitulation of events.

3:1 Further support for the unity between chapters 1–9 and 10–13 is the keyword "commend," which does not occur in a letter written by Paul prior to 2 Co. This word occurs throughout the letter (3:1; 4:2; 5:12; 6:4; 10:12,18); that is, in both parts that are said to have arisen separately. In addition, his "I ought to have been recommended by you"—his plaintive climax to the "fool's speech" (12:11)—ties that part of the letter to all that has gone before.

5:1-9 Paul spoke here about an intermediate state ("at home with the Lord," v. 8) between death (putting off "this tent") and resurrection ("put on our house from heaven"). Of course, the soul's disembodiment is not ideal (it is compared to being "naked"); the fullest, richest existence is an embodied one. This intermediate state is strongly implied elsewhere in the NT (see Lk 20:37-38; 23:43; Php 1:23-24).

5:21 This great atonement text (which is inseparable from the great incarnation text of 8:9) is packed with meaning: (1) Christ was sinless as a qualification, and so (2) in His death God made Him "to be sin" (i.e., an accursed sin offering), (3) "for us" (i.e., in our place, substituting Himself for us), (4) so that "in Him" (through the ministry of the gospel) believers become the righteousness of God.

6:14 Because 6:14–7:1 contains a large number of words found nowhere else in the NT and appears to interrupt the line of Paul's argument, it has been regarded by many as a non-Pauline insertion. Verbal parallels with the Dead Sea Scrolls have led some to argue for its origin in the writings of the Dead Sea sect. But the passage is a powerful call for separation from pagan temple worship and may reasonably be seen as a logical continuation of Paul's exhortations in 1 Co 8–10. The listing of OT texts, some of which were employed by the Dead Sea Scrolls community at Qumran, only illustrates a dependence on the OT shared by the apostle and the Qumran scribes. The demand that the Corinthians break with pagan practice, far from interrupting Paul's line of thought on the subject of the new covenant, is actually his pointed appeal to them. This forms a fitting climax to the passage begun at 2:14.

8:9 This profound incarnational text (see Jn 1:14) reflects Christ's initiative-taking kindness ("grace") expressed in His becoming "poor." Christ voluntarily left heavenly riches and glory for earthly poverty (in birth, life, and death by crucifixion) and being made "to be sin" (5:21). The purpose? That man, impoverished by sin, "might become rich"—abundantly forgiven, reconciled, and blessed by God's Spirit.

10:1 It is sometimes objected that the severe tone in chapters 10–13 is evidence that it is a later and separate letter since chapter 9 ends on a positive note. This is an unnecessary conclusion, however, since it fails to recognize Paul's pastoral method. In chapters 8–9 (the uncompleted collection) and 10–13 (the upcoming final visit), he began quite directly and strongly but ended positively and encouragingly. Changes of tone within and between passages are not evidence of a fragmented letter.

10:3-5 In keeping with his personal strategy in engaging in discussion with Jews in synagogues and Athenians on the Areopagus (Mars Hill), Paul here advocated the importance of depending upon divine resources rather than human methods and strategies. When we use theological and philosophical reasoning in presenting or defending the gospel, we are to do so graciously, humbly, and prayerfully (1 Pt 3:15).

11:5 Paul addressed two problems related to newly-arrived preachers, whom he called "super-apostles" (11:5; 12:11). First, they were peddling a back-to-Moses righteousness (3:1-18; 11:13-15), setting aside "the righteousness of God" based on the death of Christ (5:21). The covenant that came through Moses was one that brought only condemnation and death (3:7,9). An error of the new preaching was that it diminished the person and work of Christ, the activity of the Spirit, and pushed the emphasis back on human achievement. Paul responded to this theological challenge by pointing to (1) the onset of the new covenant in Christ and the Spirit (3:4-18), (2) the magnificent hope of glory in Christ (4:16–5:5), and (3) the sufficiency of Christ's death for the forgiveness of sin (5:14–6:2).

Second, the "super-apostles" proclaimed their superiority over Paul, pointing to their own eloquence (11:5-6).They may well have claimed to have more visions and revelations (12:1). Perhaps, too, they pointed to missionary success and to greater distances traveled. But Paul defended his ministry based on his faithfulness and effectiveness in persuading unbelievers to be reconciled to God (5:11,18–6:2). He argued that his sufferings in ministry were not a sign of his inferiority but were consistent with and an extension of Christ's sufferings at Golgotha (2:13-17; 4:7-12; 6:3-13; 11:1–12:13). He suffered as Christ suffered (though not redemptively) because he came pleading with his hearers on account of the One who became sin in their place (5:18-21). Paul's sufferings for Christ revealed his close identification with Christ and His cross, and God's deliverances identified him with Christ's resurrection (1:10; 4:7-11; 12:7-10). Paul's sufferings served as authentication of his ministry—against the triumphalism of the "super-apostles." His catalog of missionary sufferings (as an extension of Christ's sufferings) is a stunning and ironic subversion of the claim of "super-apostles" to superiority (11:21–12:13).

12:7-9 This "thorn" was likely a chronic illness. Astonishingly, Christ's power—unlike the claims of "super-apostles"—comes to ordinary, broken people. In Gethsemane (which this passage echoes), Christ knew this quiet power as He cried to His Father. Here the exalted Lord gives that strength to those who call out to Him (see Is 57:15: God dwells with the oppressed and lowly of spirit). Contrary to the health-and-wealth gospel, even the godly must expect to face physical disabilities, sickness, and eventually, death.

Galatians Articles

Is Allah Identical to the God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ?

by Ergun Mehmet Caner

This is a difficult question, especially in the English language. Linguistically, anyone who uses the term "God" is basically saying the same thing: They are referring to the uncreated Creator of the universe. In this fashion, Muslims, Jews, Christians, Hindus, and all others are referring to the Lord of the universe when they use the term "God."

With regard to Islam, the similarities of Allah and Jehovah are greater for two reasons: (1) Islam embraces monotheism, which means "one God," just like Christianity and Judaism, and (2) Muhammad used many of the people cited in the Bible when he created the Qur'an, such as Noah (Surah 6:84), Jacob (Surah 2:132), and Jesus (Surah 3:45-47).

The similarities end there however. Think of Islam as a form of "medieval Mormonism." Like Mormonism, Islam is based on the faulty premise that the Bible's description of God and Jesus Christ is incorrect. Like Mormonism, Islam teaches that both Christianity and Judaism are false religions, and that Islam through the Qur'an is the only true faith.

Ultimately, this is not an issue of vocabulary; it is an issue of definition. The Allah of the Qur'an is described and defined in a way that clearly shows Muhammad was not presenting the same God. The God of Islam is remote, and not intimate (Surah 112). Allah does not have a son (Surah 2:116), is not a Trinity (Surah 5:72), and does not love unconditionally (Surah 8:53). In Islam, Jesus is simply a prophet, and emphatically is not the Son of God (Surah 5:72), and the angel Gabriel is the Holy Spirit (Surah 2:193).

Remember, when Muhammad was alive (A.D. 570–632), the Bible was already in its complete canonical form. This is not an issue of ignorance. Muhammad, living just over 700 miles south of Jerusalem, knew the Bible and rejected it. Instead, he created a system that changed the nature and attributes of God, but still used the name.

Indeed, these differences cover the entire theology of Christianity. In Islam, there are "angels" that are created from fire (called jinn, Surah 72), a Tree of Zaqqum in hell (Surah 3:62-67), and virgin servants in heaven (Surah 4:57). In fact, even the creation in Islam is corrupted. In Islam, Satan's fall was due to his unwillingness to bow to Adam (Surah 2:34).

In summation, one can state it thus: Islam rejects the fatherheart of God, the divinity of the Son, and the person of the Holy Spirit. You cannot change the nature of the God of the Bible without changing the "god" you are presenting. It is not the same God.

How Does the Bible Relate to Judaism?

by Larry R. Helyer

Judaism should not be confused with the biblical religion of ancient Israel. Early Judaism arose in the aftermath of the destruction of the first temple (586 B.C.). The term Judaism originally appeared in the first century B.C. (2 Macc 2:21; 8:1; 14:38) to describe the beliefs, customs, and rituals of Jews during the Hellenistic (Greek-influenced) era.

Judaism has developed considerably over the intervening centuries. For example, official Judaism has been a nonsacrificial religion since the destruction of the second temple (A.D. 70). Observance of the mitzvoth (the commandments) replaces sacrifice, atoning for sin (Tob 4:6-7,9-11; 12:9-10). Judaism's roots, however, are deep in the OT. The fundamental ideas of modern Judaism, in all its diversity, maintain continuity with the biblical revelation at Mount Sinai. These ideas include ethical monotheism (belief in one God), God's gift of Torah ("instruction") to Israel, and the choice of Israel as a light to the nations. A striving for peace, justice, and righteousness for all peoples derives from the Prophets, and a spirituality grounded in everyday life stems from the wisdom and hymnic literature of the OT.

The Torah outlines a way of life for the people of Israel and is nearly synonymous with Judaism. Embedded in the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Bible) are 613 commandments. After the exile in the sixth century B.C., these 613 commandments were adapted, augmented, and hedged by other laws that became part of an ever-growing oral law (cp. Mk 7:5; Gl 1:14). In time the oral law was also attributed to Moses. Eventually (c. A.D. 500), the oral law was codified in the Mishnah ("repetition"). This in turn was commented on and augmented in the Gemara ("completion"). Finally, the Mishnah and Gemara were published in two massive works, the Palestinian Talmud (c. A.D. 400) and the Babylonian Talmud (c. A.D. 500). (Talmud means "learning" or "instruction.") For Orthodox Jews, the Babylonian Talmud, at some 2.5 million words, remains the authoritative guide for Judaism. The foundation of Talmud, however, remains the Torah of "Moses our Rabbi."

Modern liberal Jews reject the belief that the Pentateuch was divinely inspired and written by Moses. While not treating it as an infallible guide for faith and practice, they nonetheless acknowledge its historical and symbolic role in providing Jewish self-identity.

Modern Judaism maintains continuity with the OT in a number of significant ways. The annual festivals are primarily those prescribed in the Pentateuch. The essential ethical teachings of Judaism derive from the Mosaic Law, especially the Ten Commandments. Circumcision, dietary laws, and ritual immersion have their roots in the Pentateuch. The Prophets are appealed to for their emphasis upon social justice and mercy. Throughout the year, in synagogues, the Torah (Pentateuch) and haphtarah (selections from the Prophets) are read in a lectionary cycle. Most Orthodox Jews still anticipate a personal Messiah and a messianic age based upon the Prophets.

For Israeli Jews, the Hebrew Bible (OT) is a national treasure avidly studied in both religious and secular schools. The modern Zionist movement appeals to the Bible as part of its cultural heritage. Archaeology and historical geography of the Bible are national pastimes in Israel. Increasingly, Jewish scholars are also studying the NT as a valuable source for understanding the development of early Judaism.

A key issue distinguishing Christianity from Judaism (though both have the OT in common) has to do with fulfillment. Jesus taught His disciples to read the Scriptures christologically, or in terms of how they relate to Him, since the Scriptures speak of Him and His work (Mt 5:17-18; Lk 24:25-27,44-49; Jn 5:39). Judaism denies that Jesus fulfills the messianic prophecies of the OT. For example, Jewish scholars interpret the so-called Servant Songs of Isaiah (42:1-4; 49:1-6; 50:4-11; 52:13–53:12) as referring to the prophet himself, to an unknown prophet, or (most likely) to the people of Israel viewed collectively as the Servant of the Lord. Traditional Christianity, of course, sees these passages as prophecies of Jesus and His ministry (Ac 8:26-35). Orthodox Jews, who still harbor hopes of a personal Messiah, await a Davidic descendant who will rule as king at the end times. Liberal Jews prefer to interpret these passages metaphorically as referring to an ideal age.

Thus a major factor in the parting of ways between Judaism and Christianity centers on the meaning and mission of Jesus. For Judaism, there is no human failing, whether collective or individual, that requires special divine intervention and that cannot be remedied with the guidance of Torah. Salvation consists of faithful, though not perfect, adherence to the mitzvoth. God in His mercy forgives those whose intentions are upright. The NT, however, unambiguously proclaims the finality of Jesus Christ. He is God's last word to sinners (Heb 1:1-3), the Word who became flesh, dwelt among us, and reveals the Father to sinners (Jn 1:1-18). By His atoning death on the cross, He draws all people unto Himself (Jn 3:16; 6:35-40; 12:32).

Introduction to Galatians

AUTHOR

That Paul is this letter's author is uncontested—even skeptical scholars consider Galatians to be Pauline. As the author, Paul likely used an amanuensis (scribe), since his own handwriting began at 6:11. But Paul was indisputably behind all of the letter's content. Of more significance, then, is the question of when the letter was written.

From the fourth through nineteenth centuries, the dominant (North Galatian) view was that Paul wrote to churches in ethnic Galatia in north-central Asia Minor (modern Turkey). Paul planted these Galatian churches (Gl 1:2) during his second missionary journey (Ac 16:6) and revisited them on his third journey (Ac 18:23). The result of this theory is a slightly later date for the letter: A.D. 57–58.

The more recent (and more likely) South Galatian view understands "Galatia" in Acts in the typical political sense of Roman provincial designations. Paul planted four churches in the south-central province of Galatia during his first missionary journey (Ac 13–14) and wrote to them shortly thereafter. If this theory is correct, it yields an earlier date of writing for the letter: as early as A.D. 49 (before the Jerusalem Council of Ac 15) and no later than A.D. 53–54. In this case Galatians would probably be the first biblical letter Paul wrote.

GALATIANS AND APOLOGETICS

Whether Galatians was written in A.D. 49 or A.D. 58, we are dealing with one of the NT's earliest writings. This is crucial in demonstrating that Jesus' followers started with a high Christology, or view of Jesus Christ. Such a viewpoint was not something added later. Paul and the early church saw Jesus as "Lord" (Gl 1:3), as the post-resurrection Revealer (1:12), as the preexistent One sent forth by the Father (4:4), and as the Changer of the world structure (6:14; cp. 2:20-21).

Galatians is also apologetically significant in systematically persuading believers to continue in the true gospel and reject all non-gospels. Paul was emphatic in his confirmation of a single true gospel, with its universal nature open to all peoples through faith (chaps. 1–2). He went on to show that only this true gospel places believers from all peoples in the true people of God and gives them God's identity marker of the Holy Spirit through their faith in Christ (chaps. 3–4). Finally, Paul proclaimed that only the true gospel provides deliverance from sin's power through the giving of the Holy Spirit (chaps. 5–6).

Galatians Study Notes

1:1 While opponents appealed to rabbinical authority chains ("Rabbi So-and-so said . . ."), Paul contrasted his apostleship's source (from God, not men) and means (through Messiah Jesus, not man).

1:4 The true gospel results in a lifestyle delivered from the powers of this present evil age (i.e., freed from Satan's and sin's control; see chaps. 5–6).

1:6-10 God's good news—the gospel—makes Him our Father (v. 3) and delivers us from sin's tyranny (v. 4). Unfortunately, disturbers and distorters of this good news (v. 7) persuade others to desert God, who gives such grace through Christ (v. 6). They preach a different(heteros) gospel (v. 6) since there is no other (allos) gospel of the same kind (v. 7). Distorting the real gospel with a false gospel is worthy of damnation (anathema) in vv. 8-9because of its everlastingly destructive consequences.In Galatians this distortion restricted entrance to salvation by Judaizing—adding traditional Jewish requirements, such as circumcision, food laws, and Sabbath keeping, to Christ's all-sufficient provision.

1:10 Paul's preaching the true gospel did not curry people's favor or please them but brought him great suffering. His opponents' false gospel helped them avoid suffering (5:11; 6:12-17).

1:11-12 This thesis statement focused the persuasive point of the 1:11–2:21 narrative on the universal nature of the gospel Paul preached (i.e., without Judaistic restrictions). His gospel was not a human message, nor of human origin, nor transmitted by human (particularly Jewish) means. Rather, he received his gospel by revelation from the resurrected Messiah. Paul contrasted his gospel with the nature and transmission of his opponents' false gospel.

1:13-17 Paul's radically changed life served as powerful evidence of the truthfulness and reality of the gospel he received, altering his insulated identity and behavioral pattern as a zealous, rapidly advancing Jewish rabbi (vv. 13-14). It was not other apostles (vv. 15-17), but rather the universal nature of the gospel, that caused these changes in Paul's life.

1:18–2:21 The gospel's universal nature was repeatedly confirmed by the broader church and the Jerusalem apostles: The first (1:18-24) was in a 15-day visit to Jerusalem followed by the Judean churches confirming Paul's preaching of the faith. The second was 14 years later when the non-Judaistic gospel was confirmed by the Jerusalem apostles (2:1-10 = famine relief visit of Ac 11:27-30). Peter's reception of Paul's rebuke for his Judaistic separation from Gentiles in Antioch confirmed a third time the "truth of the gospel" (2:5,14) that Paul preached in 2:11-21.

2:11-21 Galatians gives a realistic recounting of one apostle's rebuking another for inconsistent behavior in light of "the truth of the gospel" (v. 14). Later, Peter would write respectfully and affectionately of Paul(2 Pt 3:14-16).

3:1-5 Paul appealed to his apostolic miracles in Galatia that authenticated the gospel (v. 5; see Rm 15:18-19;2 Co 12:11-13). The absence of such miracles would have destroyed this section's argument.

3:13 Paul had no reason to invent a crucified Messiah (whom Jews would view as cursed), revealing the humiliating depths to which God is willing to go to rescue humans from sin's curse.

3:17 No chronological problem exists between Gn 15:13 ("400 years") and Ex 12:40 ("430 years"). While 400 could easily be a general, rounded-off time span, the Jewish rabbis' ancient resolution is that Gn 15:13 speaks of Israel's captivity in Egypt and Ex 12:40 speaks of the longer gap from Abraham's entrance into Canaan to Moses' leading the people out of Egypt. Hence, this latter span includes the additional 30 years.

3:28 Christianity did not erase ethnic, slavery, and gender distinctions (e.g., Eph 5:22–6:9); it made them irrelevant to entering into a fully privileged covenantal relationship as a child of God and of Abraham. This was radically different from the Greco-Roman culture that emphasized honor and status based upon one's family or wealth.

4:4 This is Paul's only direct reference to Jesus' virgin birth, implied in "born of a woman." Jesus was born to fulfill the law perfectly in His life and bear its curse in His death.

6:2,5 The Spirit-influenced community must help bear one another's heavy spiritual burdens, while each simultaneously carries his own light (military) pack; that is, all are individually accountable to God.

Ephesians Articles

How Can Jesus' Death Bring Forgiveness?

by Chad Owen Brand

Occasionally stories are told about someone being sentenced for a crime when suddenly another person steps up and says, "I will take the punishment for him." Most such stories are not based in fact. But the NT teaches that Jesus, in His death, has taken the penalty for our sin upon Himself.

Scripture teaches that all humanity is tainted and corrupted by sin, both because of the sin of our forefather Adam (Rm 5:12-21) and because we ourselves are all sinners (Eph 2:1-3). God, as the righteous Judge, cannot and will not simply overlook sin, since sin violates His nature and brings destruction to the perfect world He created. God would be unjust simply to say, "Oh well, boys will be boys." Instead, sin must be punished, and since all of us have broken God's law, we rightly deserve full punishment. Yet, amazingly, Jesus came to take our punishment upon Himself.

The NT speaks of Jesus' death providing forgiveness in at least three ways. First, Jesus' death was a sacrifice for our sins. Christ fulfills the OT sacrificial system in being both high priest and sacrifice (Heb 5–10). On the Day of Atonement, animals were killed before the altar and the blood was sprinkled on the mercy seat in the most holy place. Under that seat were tablets of stone upon which had been written the Ten Commandments. Looking down from heaven God could see the law, but when the sacrificial blood was sprinkled, the law—as reminder of the people's sin—was covered. Without the shedding of blood, there is no forgiveness of sin (Heb 9:22).

Second, the NT speaks of Christ's death as a "propitiation" for our sin (Rm 3:21-26). This word, hilasmos, carries the meaning of "an offering satisfying God's wrath toward sin," yet remarkably God Himself provides this offering. When Jesus died on the cross, He cried out, "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?" (Mt 27:46). The Father was pouring out His wrath because "He made the One who did not know sin to be sin for us, so that we might become the righteousness of God in Him"
(2 Co 5:21).

Third, and related to both points already made, the Bible speaks of Christ's death as a substitution. Jesus did not come to be served but to serve and "to give His life—a ransom for many" (Mk 10:45). Jesus "gave Himself for our sins to rescue us from this present evil age" (Gl 1:4). Isaiah's predictions of a coming Suffering Servant are fulfilled in the death of Jesus, who "was pierced because of our transgressions, crushed because of our iniquities . . . and the Lord has punished Him for the iniquity of us all" (Is 53:5-6). He died in our place.

By faith, and faith alone, we receive the forgiveness Christ provides through His humiliating and painful death. The result? Eternal life (Eph 2:3-10).

How Can We Know Anything at All?

by Garrett DeWeese

Surely knowledge is crucial in our day-to-day lives. We don't trust a dentist who believes he can perform a needed tooth extraction, no matter how sincere his belief; we go to a dentist who knows he can. We don't rely on a friend's hunch when wondering whether to take an umbrella; we listen to a meteorologist who has good reasons for his prediction. The prosecuting attorney (ideally) doesn't try to get the jury to feel angry with the defendant; she wants to establish the truth of his guilt.

Similarly, in matters of religion, what should matter is knowledge, not merely sincere belief; good reasons for faith, not hunches; truth, not feelings. Christianity is more than ritual or mythology or emotions; it is a knowledge tradition. Christianity claims certain things can be known.

Kinds of knowledge. We use knowledge (and the verb to know) in at least three different senses. It refers to (1) propositional knowledge—knowing facts; (2) knowledge by acquaintance—knowing something or someone directly; and (3) skill knowledge—know-how.

Here are some examples. A sports fan may know many facts about last year's MVP, or a historian may know all about ancient Rome, and yet neither person's propositional knowledge constitutes the direct knowledge by acquaintance that the player's teammates or Julius Caesar possessed. Someone may have the know-how to ride a bike or play pool without having any propositional knowledge about force, inertia, or angular momentum.

Christianity involves all three types of knowledge. Eternal life, Jesus said, is knowing God (Jn 17:3). This is knowledge by acquaintance and is more than knowledge of Bible facts or systematic theology. (Sadly, it is possible for someone to know a lot about the Bible, or a lot about theology, and yet not know God.) Jesus went on to say that eternal life is knowing "the One You have sent—Jesus Christ." This involves knowing certain facts about Jesus of Nazareth and about His mission as Savior. So both knowledge by acquaintance and propositional knowledge are involved.

What about skill knowledge? Since salvation is not by works, no skill is involved in becoming a Christian. But growing in our faith involves learning certain skills: how to study the Bible, how to think as Christians about decision making, how to pray, how to share our faith, and so on.

Propositional knowledge. All three senses of knowledge are important, but propositional knowledge demands careful consideration. For the vast bulk of what we know is propositional and does not come by direct acquaintance or know-how.

Propositional knowledge may be defined roughly as justified true belief. First, obviously, you can't know something if you don't believe it. Second, the proposition you believe must be true if it is to count as knowledge. Sincere (but false) beliefs, even useful (but false) beliefs, are not knowledge. Third, a true belief must be justified; that is to say that you must have the right kinds of reasons for the belief. Even true beliefs do not count as knowledge if they are the result of a lucky guess, a hunch, or a passionate wish that things be so. The right kinds of reasons are those making it probable that the proposition you believe is true. They are truth indicators.

What counts as the right kinds of reasons depends on the nature of the proposition. I believe the sun is shining because I can see it and feel its warmth. I believe I had cereal for breakfast because I clearly remember it. I believe my wife loves me because she tells me so, she shows me in many ways, and she has stuck with me for a number of years. And I believe Tiglath-pileser was a mighty king of Assyria who invaded Israel in 743 B.C. because I read about him in the Bible (2 Kg 15–16) and in reliable histories of Assyria. In all these cases the reasons why I believe what I do are truth indicators. They are the right kinds of reasons to justify those beliefs.

Can we know anything without using our senses? In the examples above, the justifying reasons involved the senses—even beliefs based on memory, for the memories were formed through sensory experiences. It is clear that beliefs based on our senses can be justified (provided, of course, that we are not too tired, the lighting is adequate, our sense organs are functioning properly, and so on). Knowledge based on the senses is called empirical knowledge.

The Enlightenment doctrine of empiricism holds that all knowledge of the world is empirical. Today, the spectacular successes of the natural sciences have enshrined empirical investigation as by far the best—and for most people, the only—way to know. But what about things we can't sense? Is nonempirical knowledge possible? The question is crucial, for a great many important things can't be known through our senses—things such as whether we have a soul and whether God exists.

Is empiricism true? No. Notice first that the claim "All knowledge of the world is empirical" is itself not an empirical statement. How could we know that through our senses? The claim is self-refuting. But beyond that, there are good reasons to think that at least some knowledge of the world is nonempirical (a doctrine called moderate rationalism). Beliefs that certain things exist that cannot be directly observed may be inferred from empirical observations. This is how we justify belief in such things as electrons, gravitational fields, beauty, or love. And similarly for belief in God. Further, the analogy between sensory experience and religious experience provides good reasons for the justification of religious beliefs based on religious experience.

Finally, we can know some things without using our senses at all. For example, we can know much about ourselves through introspection (a nonempirical process). We can know that we have minds that think, believe, hope, fear, and so on, and that we are not identical to our bodies. Many ethicists claim that moral knowledge is accessible through intuition or conscience or pure reason. Following St. Anselm, many scholars have thought that the ontological proof—a nonempirical argument—establishes God's necessary existence. Moreover, we have nonempirical as well as empirical evidence of God's existence (Rm 1:19-20), what has been called the sensus divinitatis. And since our belief in God's existence is justified, we also are justified in believing what He has revealed to us. For all these examples, we can point to the right kinds of reasons that justify nonempirical beliefs.

Introduction to Ephesians

AUTHOR AND THEMES

Paul's letter to the Ephesians is a short masterpiece, a mature expression of his theology and its implications for the Christian life. The brevity of the letter can obscure both its scope and spiritual depth. Until the nineteenth century, interpreters took the first verse of the letter at face value, accepting Pauline authorship. Following F. C. Bauer (1845), the majority of critical scholars no longer view this as a letter from Paul. But an argument can be made for Pauline authorship. Convincing reasons have been put forth to support both sides of this issue.

Although it claims to have been written by Paul, Ephesians shows few signs of the personal connections that would be expected in a personal letter. That's especially remarkable since Paul spent close to three years in Ephesus (Ac 19:10; cp. 19:1–20:1; 20:16-38). Thus, many argue that the letter is pseudonymous (written by someone else using Paul's name), citing vocabulary, style, and theological divergences from Paul's other writings, as well as this letter's close parallels to Colossians.

Almost all of Paul's letters addressed to churches were shaped by one or more problems in that church. Ephesians is different. This letter has a timeless quality. Ephesians is the product of seasoned theological reflection that is both concentrated and has taken place over a period of time rather than hurriedly. The letter claims to have been written from prison. During most of his life as an apostle, Paul was on the go. But his imprisonment in either Caesarea Maritima (late 50s) or in Rome (early 60s) may have provided an occasion for him to reflect on and further draw out the implications of the gospel he had been commissioned to preach.

Those who deny Pauline authorship cite the lack of personal references that are present in most of Paul's other letters to churches. But personal information is not altogether lacking. The letter twice states that Paul is author (1:1; 3:1). His being a prisoner is mentioned three times (3:1; 4:1; 6:20).

Moreover, he gave an account of his calling in a way that accords with what we know from other sources about both his calling and his response to it. One idea that has been advanced by some NT scholars is that this letter was written to be circulated among a number of churches. If that is the case, we would not expect a large number of specific, personal references in the body of the letter. Paul may have written notes to each of the churches in which he wanted the letter to be read. Or, there is another alternative that Paul mentioned in closing the letter: "Tychicus, our dearly loved brother and faithful servant [or deacon] in the Lord, will tell you everything so that you also may know how I am and what I'm doing. I am sending him to you for this very reason, to let you know how we are and to encourage your hearts" (6:21-22). At the time of writing it may not have been prudent to put some kinds of information into writing. Paul assured the Ephesians that Tychicus would deliver verbally what Paul could not put in writing.

Structurally, the letter divides in half. After Paul's greetings (1:1-2), the first half consists of a theological exposition that spells out the identity of, and the benefits for, those who are in Christ (1:3–3:21). The letter's second half details Paul's ethical exhortations—the responsibilities of those who find their identity in Christ
(4:1–6:20).

Ephesians Study Notes

1:3 The phrase "in the heavens" occurs at 1:3,20; 2:6; 3:10; 6:12. It appears to be the locale of believers in the first three instances but of malignant spiritual powers in the last two. Paul's metaphor refers to the realm where Christ reigns with the church that He has raised with Him (2:5-6). Yet, living in this age, the church wages war against its spiritual foes (6:12) in this same spiritual realm.

1:4 Debates over whether God has chosen specific individuals for salvation or whether they choose to believe in Christ may miss Paul's point here. He affirmed the corporate election of the church "in Him." Individuals are elect because they are in Christ.

1:5 Paul affirmed predestination—a divine action that determines future realities. God predestined that those in Christ will be adopted as His children so that God will receive praise (vv. 5-6) and that they will live for the praise God's glory (v. 12).

1:11 Paul did not claim that humans have no self-determining free will. As Rm 9 indicates, God is able to use even sinful human choices for His purposes. But the point here is that whatever God does for those in Christ, He does according to a carefully orchestrated plan for their benefit.

1:19-20 In Asia Minor many lived in dread of malign spiritual beings and powers who dominated their lives. Paul prayed that His readers would have an experiential knowledge—the realization and confidence that as believers in Christ they possessed divine power. Christians need not cower in fear of any other spiritual powers.

1:22-23 Paul asserted that Christ fills the church, His very body, with His presence and power (see 3:19). No human institution has greater potential power to effect good than Christ's church.

2:1-6 Being "dead" in sins does not imply that unbelievers can do no good or that they cannot respond to the message of salvation through God's initiating grace. This describes their hopeless condition as separated from God (vv. 11-12). Salvation removes that separation (v. 13) and locates believers "in Christ Jesus."

2:8-9 Faith is the means by which people acquire salvation: It is "through faith." Salvation by grace through faith comes as God's gift, not by works.

2:10 While good works cannot merit right standing with God, good works are the fruit borne in the lives of those whom God has saved. Good works are neither an afterthought nor optional in the lives of believers. God created and saved them for the very purpose of doing good works.

2:13-15 In securing peace through His death, Christ demolished all racial and ethnic barriers in the church. The church should be the world's most racially integrated community.

4:4-6 Since believers are one body, they must maintain unity (v. 3). Though current divisions among Christians are embarrassing, organic unity at all costs does not adequately address these schisms. Given departures from orthodoxy and the church's expansion, denominations are not only inevitable but may serve to preserve the truth.

4:8 Probably Paul adapted wording from Ps 68:18. Instead of receiving gifts from humans (the point of the psalm)—which Christ rightly deserves—Christ lavishes gifts upon His people.

4:9 Some think the phrase "the lower parts of the earth" refers to Hades (metaphorically below the earth). Most, however, agree that these regions are set opposite the "heavens," from which Christ descended to earth to give gifts to His church.

4:26 Though Paul's literal "be angry" may be a genuine command to righteous anger, many versions rightly take the imperative in a conditional way: "In your anger . . ." or "If you get angry . . ."

4:30 Paul thought of the Spirit in personal terms. Those whom God marks as His own (see 1:13) grieve the Spirit when living contrary to His will.

5:3-4 Paul reminded believers that what we talk about and think about will eventually find expression in our behavior. When we are in Christ, our talk will change, as will our actions.

5:5 Paul did not say that no one who ever engaged in immorality or greed can enter Christ's kingdom. Rather he said that no immoral, impure, or greedy person currently has an inheritance in the kingdom (1 Co 6:9-11).

5:22,24 Paul's command for wives to submit follows the all-encompassing command to submit "to one another in the fear of Christ" (v. 21)—the last outcome or result of the filling of the Spirit (vv. 18-21). While a submissive wife is counter-cultural today, she was not so in Paul's time. Moreover, while a self-sacrificing and loving husband sounds quite appropriate in our culture, he was radically counter-cultural in Paul's time.

6:5,9 Paul did not condone slavery when urging both slaves and masters to live as responsible Christians; his concern was to change Christians' attitudes toward each other. The gospel is opposed to slavery. Where the gospel permeates lives, the institution of slavery will be undermined and abolished. It is worth noting that the first generation of Christians who had been freed from slavery to sin, gladly called themselves "slaves" of God or of Christ (see 1 Tm 6:1; Phm 16). Paradoxically, this latter slavery is the highest human freedom.

6:11-12 In contrast to modern skepticism toward evil spirits, Paul pictured the church's battle for survival as a struggle against the devil, demons, and malign supernatural beings (see 2:2; 3:10).

Philippians Articles

The Incarnation: Could God Become Man Without Ceasing to Be God?

by James A. Parker III

The answer to this question is yes. Not only is it possible, but it happened in time and space. Neo-orthodox theologians (twentieth-century thinkers strongly influenced by Karl Barth) have said that the question is logically unanswerable because faith is an illogical paradox and can be seen only through the eyes of faith. In recent years liberal theologians have denied the reality of the incarnation on the grounds that it is a myth and not true in any objective sense. In the nineteenth century advocates of kenotic Christology (emphasizing the "emptying" of Christ in keeping with Php 2:7) argued that in the incarnation the divine Logos (Word) suspended the characteristics of deity because they were in principle incompatible with human attributes, thus making nonsense of the claim that Jesus Christ was fully God and fully man (as both the Bible and historic Christian confessions have claimed).

Historical, Bible-based theology has argued that God is omniscient (all knowing), omnipotent (all powerful), sinless, and incorporeal (without a body) and that these attributes are essential and necessary to deity. Characteristically, human beings do not exhibit these attributes. So how can Jesus simultaneously be fully divine and fully human? Along these lines, people have attacked the doctrine of the incarnation, claiming that it is illogical and contradictory.

This alleged logical contradiction is based on a fundamental misunderstanding of how human nature is defined, according to Thomas V. Morris in his book The Logic of God Incarnate. Morris has argued that the way out of this apparent impasse is to have a clearer understanding of three important concepts: (1) essential versus nonessential properties, (2) essential versus common properties, and (3) the difference between being fully and being merely human.

On the first issue Morris argues that an essential property is a property that, if removed, fundamentally changes the thing in question. So, if God's attributes of omnipotence, omniscience, etc., were removed, then he would no longer be deity. These are essential attributes. While it is a common attribute for a human being to have two hands, this is not an essential property to humanness. The heart of the attack on the incarnation comes from critics on the basis that lack of omniscience, omnipotence, etc., is essential to humanness, since human beings do not have these qualities.

This brings us to Morris's second distinction: essential versus common properties. It is a common property that everyone living on planet earth was born on planet earth, but this is simply a common property; it is not essential to their humanness. Morris then asks the question, on what basis does one know that the absence of the attributes of omniscience and so forth are essential human properties and not just common properties?

Last, Morris argues, "an individual is fully human [in any case where] that individual has all essential human properties, all the properties composing basic human nature. An individual is merely human if he or she has all those properties plus some additional limiting properties as well, properties such as that of lacking omnipotence, that of lacking omniscience, and so on." So orthodox Christians, in affirming the incarnation, are claiming that Jesus was fully human without being merely human.

Ronald Nash summarizes the implications of the argument as follows:

> This means two things: Jesus possesses all the properties that are essential to being a human being, and Jesus possesses all the properties that are essential to deity. The historic understanding of the Incarnation expresses the beliefs that Jesus Christ is fully God—that is, He possesses all the essential properties of God: Jesus Christ is also fully human—that is, He possesses all the essential properties of a human being, none of which turn out to be limiting properties: and Jesus Christ was not merely human—that is, he did not possess any of the limiting properties that are complements of the divine attributes. In the face of these distinctions, the alleged contradiction in the Incarnation disappears.

Introduction to Philippians

AUTHOR

Philippians is one of Paul's most autobiographical letters. Writing to a church he founded and loved, Paul described his situation in prison and warned his readers of potential theological dangers to the church. At the core of the letter lies a theology of the cross that unites various exhortations to Christian unity and joy in service.

Paul had more than one reason for writing this letter. For one thing, he wrote the letter to thank the church for their material help. The church had sent Epaphroditus to assist Paul while in prison, and they had repeatedly sent money for Paul's needs. Additionally, Paul was concerned for Christian unity. Perhaps he anticipated and feared a potential break in fellowship (4:2-3), knowing the damage such a break could bring (1:12-19).

Few question the claim that Paul wrote this letter. In A.D. 135, a bishop named Polycarp stated the accepted church conviction of Pauline authorship. Internally, the letter also contains the characteristics of Pauline writing. Further, the earliest manuscript containing Philippians (the Chester Beatty Papyrus P, copied c. A.D. 200) contains the same form of the letter that we have today.

Although the letter's authorship is certain, scholars debate both its date and place of writing. (It should be noted that while both issues have historical interest, neither constitutes a major threat to the letter's integrity.) The traditional place of origin for Philippians is Rome, and its traditional date is about A.D. 61–62. Nothing makes that dating implausible. Other suggestions for the place of writing include Ephesus (c. A.D. 55) and Caesarea (c. A.D. 58), though there is little evidence to support either claim. In Philippians, Paul called himself a prisoner (1:13-14), yet we have no evidence to show that he was imprisoned in Ephesus. On the other hand, Paul was imprisoned in Caesarea (A.D. 58–60). But again the evidence pointing to this as the prison from which he wrote this letter is slim. Ultimately the arguments for the traditional location and date are preferable.

THE RELIABILITY OF PHILIPPIANS

In spite of Pauline authorship, many have questioned the letter's integrity: Is it a unified document or two or three documents woven into one? The arguments for multiple sources primarily appeal to claims of variation in the style of writing and supposed changes in content. For example, some scholars argue that 3:2–4:1 does not fit the patterns established by the remainder of the letter with its harsh tone and invective argument. They propose that perhaps this was a different letter inserted into Philippians.

Two observations help here. First, Paul's opponents denied the gospel, also harshly criticizing Paul's apostleship. Paul responded energetically to such challenges (see 2 Co 10–12). Second, Paul could not respond in person to the impending threat; so the letter is candid, disclosing inner thoughts and evaluations. Indicative of their relationship, Paul also instructed his original readers by appealing to his spiritual pilgrimage.

Other scholars suggest that 4:10-20 is an insertion, assuming such an important note of thanks would not be delayed to the end. However, modern readers must take care in second-guessing first-century writing forms. Further, Paul naturally included the other expressions of appreciation before turning to financial issues. All forms of support were equally appreciated.

Questions regarding the literary integrity of the letter raise a more central issue. Are contemporary scholars better able to detect supposed seams in the fabric of the letter than could its early readers?

Given the care we know characterized the transmission of Scripture, theories about literary fragments present far more difficulties than they presume to solve.

Philippians Study Notes

1:1 Some say "overseers and deacons" reflects later church organization and cannot have been written by Paul. However, NT churches quickly developed leadership structure. While less developed than the structures evidenced in the time of the apostolic fathers (late first century), early churches had bishops and deacons (see Ac 20:17,28).

1:13 Since Rome had not declared Christianity illegal at this time, Paul had committed no crime. He was imprisoned for Christ's sake.

1:15-17 Paul understood these preachers' motives, which were wrong, but he affirmed the correctness of their message (unlike opponents in chap. 3).

1:16 Paul's circumstances were for the "defense of the gospel." He wanted to make a formal presentation of Christianity's authenticity.

1:19-20 Paul's final salvation would come through remaining true to Christ in the face of difficulties. Paul did not expect to be ashamed (lit. "put to shame"). Christians will be vindicated by persevering in the truth.

2:4 Paul's concern was balance—looking to the concerns of others as well as one's own. There is a place for attending to our basic needs (Eph 5:29).

2:5 To "make your own attitude that of Christ Jesus" means to value what Jesus values. Since Christ gave Himself for us, we give ourselves to one another (Eph 5:1-2).

2:6-7 The "form" (morphe-) of God is not a physical or structural form. Jesus shares God's nature; He is not "another god." Before the incarnation, Jesus existed in the form of God. In the incarnation, Jesus takes the "form of a slave." God served us in humility. He became human, surrendering access to His divine prerogatives, and willingly died a shameful death.

2:7 Jesus' self-emptying (keno-sis) cannot mean loss of deity or divine attributes; God cannot become less than God. Rather, He emptied Himself of divine privileges by becoming human.

2:9 God highly exalted Jesus, giving Him a new position. He became the visible focus of the Godhead, a position graciously bestowed because of His self-humbling death.

2:10-11 Contrary to what some critics claim, this description does not reflect an outdated cosmology or view of universal reality. Jesus' lordship is comprehensive—over all personal beings in heaven (spiritual beings), on earth (living human beings), and under the earth (the dead awaiting resurrection).

2:12 To "work out" our salvation (which was "worked in" to us) is opposed to "working for" salvation.

3:2 Paul's opponents acted like dogs, traveling in packs, consuming garbage. Circumcision to gain divine favor is futile; it is simply mutilation.

3:8 Heredity and merely human achievements are garbage. Paul's attitude was a necessary expression of repentance. He did not expect to gain righteousness by this attitude (since right standing before God comes through grace); trusting in human achievements prevents one from obtaining righteousness.

3:10-11 The goal of participation in the final resurrection comes from knowing Christ in every dimension of life. Conformity to death—the result of self-surrender—gives way to life. The Christian's experience parallels that of Jesus.

3:15 "Mature" (not "sinless") means thinking and living rightly because of commitment to Christ.

3:20-21 Christ's second coming, unlike His first, will powerfully reveal His deity.

Colossians Articles

Notable Christian Apologist: Athanasius

by Ted Cabal

Athanasius (A.D. 298–373) was born in Alexandria, Egypt, and would eventually become bishop of that city. In 313, Christianity was declared fully legal by the emperor Constantine. Nevertheless, Athanasius still faced persecution for his defense of the full deity of Christ. At the Council of Nicaea (in modern-day Turkey) in 325, Athanasius was instrumental in bringing about condemnation of the heresy of Arianism. Arius taught that the Father created the Son, who thus was only of similar substance (homoiousios) with the Father. Athanasius led the way in rejecting this unbiblical notion by stressing the Son's being of the same essence (homoousious) as the Father. Leaving out the i in this important word meant all the difference, as Athanasius insisted that the Son had no beginning but rather was fully divine. Even though he was exiled five times for his courageous stance, Athanasius faithfully defended the biblical teaching of Christ. Hence, at his death, friends provided this epitaph: "Athanasius against the World."

How Should a Christian Relate to the New Age Movement?

by Ted Cabal

Though the vestiges of a biblical worldview are still in evidence, polls reveal that doctrinal beliefs of perhaps a third of Westerners can be characterized as New Age. The ideas of this New Age Movement (NAM) are widely, and often subconsciously, disseminated through television (e.g., Oprah Winfrey's show) and movies (e.g., Star Wars). The NAM also has become big business through its myriads of self-help seminars, journaling/prayer guides (often mimicking Christian tradition), and books.

Adherents of the movement often reject the term New Age due to its connotations. At any rate, it is perhaps better termed "postmodern religion" in view of the assumptions its shares with philosophical postmodernism (see the article, "How Should a Christian Understand Postmodernism?" p. 1385). Generally rejecting a scientific or analytic (modernist) approach to life, adherents believe that knowledge is subjectively constructed and socially determined. Truth is not universal to all humans but may vary according to what "works" for some and not others. Moral values are not universally objective but are only properties of communities choosing to adopt them. People in the NAM view reality as an evolving unified whole; indeed, they often consider God to be one name for this whole. They especially disdain biblical Christianity due to its universal truth claims.

Since the NAM is under the authority of no particular religious text, proponents are best identified by various "symptoms," such as the following. They prefer the practice of spirituality over organized, classical expressions of religion. They believe that no single religious teacher can claim the allegiance of all; claims by Jesus as being the Way must be reinterpreted or rejected altogether. According to them, rather than the grace of God revealed in the Jesus of the Bible, "angels," paranormal powers, or even raw human potential serve as "saviors" from the race's predicament. Mixing and matching the objects of worship, they often identify themselves simultaneously in terms such as Buddhist, Jewish, and Presbyterian. Ultimately the NAM represents a return to polytheism, or the belief in many gods.

How, then, should Christians begin sharing Christ with those in the NAM? Frequently a truth discussion must pave the way. If objective, universal truth does not exist, then the claims of the gospel are false. But all people live as if everyday beliefs must correspond to reality (e.g., no one can just choose to live on poison instead of water). So why should anyone hold that belief in God and the afterlife is somehow different? Incoherence in everyday affairs is viewed as dishonest or irrational ("Yes, Officer, that double-parked car is mine, but it's not mine"). Why, then, accept claims such as "Christ can be true for you but not for me"?

At first glance the shoddy handling of truth in the NAM makes it appear more tolerant than Christianity. But actually it condescendingly views the claims of all other religions as wrong, ignorant, and divisive believing that only those in the NAM see the complete picture; other religions, fixated on their traditional teachings, are unaware of the deep, hidden unity of all religions. But is there good reason to believe that many ways to heaven actually exist? How can anyone claim to know this universal truth (especially if there are no universal truths)? Earthly road maps do not assume that just any path can reach a destination. Routes may be chosen by their ease of travel or scenic views, but not all lead to the same place.

Introduction to Colossians

AUTHOR

Some modern critical scholars have expressed doubt about Paul's authorship of Colossians despite the fact it contains autobiographical statements from Paul and even begins with a salutation in which the author names himself as Paul. The misgivings typically have to do with the style of the letter (judged to be slightly different from that of other Pauline letters) and the theology of the letter (thought to be more developed than that in Paul's other writings). The weight of such concerns diminishes significantly, however, when we consider the letter's setting, which demanded a different theological response than what was called for by a Judaizing faction threatening the church—the danger Paul addressed in other letters. Some of the critical scholars also have too narrow a perspective on the versatility of an ancient author in expressing himself differently on different occasions.

Colossae was located about 100 miles inland from Ephesus in the Roman province of Asia (modern Turkey). Paul wrote this letter sometime between A.D. 60–62, probably from Rome.

THEMES IN COLOSSIANS

Extreme self-denial, the invocation of angels, visionary experiences, and the scrupulous observation of religious rites characterized the practices of a factional group in the Colossian church. In his pastoral concern about this dangerous teaching, the Apostle Paul wrote the church a letter, calling them to a renewed appreciation of their sovereign Lord and Redeemer and urging them to live consistently with the full implications of their relationship to Jesus.

Older commentators identified the opponents' teaching as Gnosticism (the belief that salvation is found through hidden knowledge and that matter is evil whereas spirit is good). Some more recent commentators suggest it was a form of Jewish mysticism. Historical evidence from local folk practices, however, suggests the faction causing trouble was invoking angels as a means of warding off attacks of evil spirits. Paul's bottom-line message to the church, then, was to hold on firmly to Christ rather than rely on angelic mediators and pseudo-spiritualistic practices.

Colossians Study Notes

1:15-20 Most scholars regard this passage as Paul's citation of an early Christian hymn. This presents no threat to the integrity of the biblical text since the inspired apostle cited it with wholehearted approval. In fact, if the passage is hymnic, it provides evidence of a high Christology commonly confessed by the early church.

1:15 Some groups denying Christ's deity (e.g., Jehovah's Witnesses) claim "firstborn" indicates Jesus was a created being. The context here, however, indicates "firstborn" is a metaphor for sovereignty or rank. It echoes a psalm of David: "I will also make him My firstborn, greatest of the kings of the earth" (Ps 89:27). Elsewhere, Israel is called God's "firstborn" (Ex 4:22)—clearly not "first in a series."

1:20 This passage does not teach universalism (all will be saved) but instead points forward to Messiah's quelling all rebellion, bringing lasting peace to the universe. The "reconciliation" here entails a pacification of evil powers (as 2:15 makes clear).

1:24 This verse does not imply a deficiency in Christ's atoning sacrifice upon the cross. Behind it stands a Jewish and early Christian conviction of a predetermined amount of suffering to be endured by God's people before the consummation of the age (see Rv 6:9-11). Paul saw his suffering on behalf of Christ as contributing to the sum total.

2:8 The term "philosophy" occurs only here in the Bible. Paul was not making a blanket denunciation of philosophical study or even Greek philosophy (e.g.,Platonism, Stoicism). Nor was he worried that the Colossians' faith would crumble if they subjected it to critical inquiry. The article ("the") appearing before the term in the Greek text suggests that the opponents had characterized their own teaching as a "philosophy"—the specific teaching Paul opposed.

2:8 "Elemental forces" (stoicheia) suggests supernatural agencies or spiritual beings.

2:9 Jesus Christ is far more than an inspired prophet, an extraordinary moral teacher, or even some kind of supernatural being. The very substance of God exists in Jesus the Messiah in His incarnation, His life on earth, and His resurrected and ascended body.

2:15 No contradiction exists here between Paul's statement that the principalities and powers have been defeated and his assumption elsewhere that the powers are still virulently active and that believers need to fight against them (e.g., Eph 6:12). The cross of Christ is the point of decisive victory over the powers of evil; believers can now be victorious over them through their union with Christ. They will be vanquished once and for all at the end of the age.

2:18 This probably refers to a magical invocation of angels for help or deliverance.

3:18 The text does not call on wives to render blind obedience to their husbands but rather to offer submission to the husbands' leadership consistent with the ethical demands of the gospel ("as is fitting in the Lord"). The result is a form of male leadership that did not conform to the patriarchal patterns of the day but instead was modeled on the servant leadership of Christ.

3:22 Paul gave slaves perspective on how to live as Christians within this socioeconomic institution of their day (see the notes in Phm).

4:16 This is not a reference to the fourth-century Letter to the Laodiceans. It refers to another letter Paul wrote to a church in this region that has unfortunately been lost.

Introduction to 1 Thessalonians

AUTHOR

Both letters to the church in Thessalonica were sent out under the names of Paul, Silas, and Timothy. And the use of first-person plural pronouns ("we," "us") throughout both letters reveals that the inclusion of Silas and Timothy in the salutation was no mere formality (contrast Philippians). At the same time, though, the order of the names and the occasional use of "I" (1 Th 2:18; 3:5; 5:27; 2 Th 2:5; 3:17) reveal that Paul was primarily responsible for the letters' contents.

While 1 Thessalonians is almost universally accepted as having genuinely been written by Paul, the opposite holds for 2 Thessalonians. The balance of scholarly opinion views the letter as a forgery, written by an unknown person some five to 50 years after Paul's death. Reasons for questioning its authenticity include these points:

1. The form and structure of 2 Thessalonians make it allegedly too similar to 1 Thessalonians.
2. The vocabulary of 2 Thessalonians is seemingly too close to that of 1 Thessalonians and too different from the vocabulary of other letters by Paul.
3. First Thessalonians seems warm and friendly, while 2 Thessalonians seems cool and distant.
4. Supposedly there are significant differences in theology between the two letters.

These arguments are neither strong nor persuasive. With regard to points 1 and 2, if 2 Thessalonians is authentic, then we are dealing with two documents written by the same author a short time apart; similarities are to be expected. Furthermore, the differences noted in point 2 are of questionable value. Point 3 is a subjective assessment, not an argument or reason; the key question is why the two letters are said to be different. As for point 4, most of the arguments concerning differences would eliminate 1 Thessalonians as well as 2 Thessalonians, and differences like these surface when other authentic letters of Paul are compared.

Apart from the inconclusiveness of the arguments against 2 Thessalonians, there is the inability of a forgery hypothesis to suggest a historically credible situation capable of explaining why a forged letter might have been written, what its relationship to 1 Thessalonians was, and how it came to be accepted as part of the body of Paul's letters. Pauline authorship remains the least problematic solution.

THEMES IN THESSALONIANS

Thessalonica, Macedonia's largest and most important city, was a wealthy commercial center at the intersection of major transportation routes. Religiously, the traditional Greek cults and philosophies and various Egyptian and mystery religions were well represented, and there was a Jewish community and synagogue (Ac 17:1), in the city. In addition, city leaders fostered local devotion to the imperial cult in order to solidify good relations with Rome and to the local Cabirus cult to foster civic unity. To attack either cult was virtually to attack the city itself. In such an environment, preaching the gospel (which proclaimed allegiance to Jesus as Lord and King) was tantamount to treason.

In A.D. 49 Paul, Silas, and Timothy came to Thessalonica. Paul's proclamation about Jesus the Messiah attracted "some of [the Jews]," some "God-fearing Greeks" (Gentiles attracted to Judaism who attended synagogue services but stopped short of full conversion), and "a number of the leading women" (Ac 17:2-4). Other converts came to faith directly from paganism (1 Th 1:9). These new believers soon encountered hostility (1 Th 1:6; 2:14). The conversion of leading women of the community inevitably brought the new teaching to the attention of civic leaders. Charges were soon brought against the converts, and Paul, Silas and Timothy had little choice but to leave town for the sake of the new congregation.

In these circumstances two concerns weighed on Paul's mind: that the young congregation might collapse in the face of hostile pressures and that his behavior might be misunderstood, to the detriment of the gospel. Paul therefore tried to return to Thessalonica quickly, but that proved impossible (1 Th 2:18). So Paul sent Timothy back instead to strengthen and encourage them (1 Th 3:1-2). When Timothy returned to Paul, who was by then in Corinth, he brought welcome news: the congregation was not only standing fast and faithful in spite of persecution but was even growing in faith and love (1 Th 3:6-7). This is the setting of 1 Thessalonians.

In contrast, we know little about the setting of 2 Thessalonians. The similar language and structure of the letter indicate it was written shortly after the first letter. Our best clues are the three main topics Paul addressed in the letter: (1) persecution the church was experiencing (2 Th 1:3-12); (2) a misunderstanding about the "Day of the Lord" (2 Th 2:1-12); and (3) disruptive behavior on the part of some members of the congregation (2 Th 3:6-15).

Together, the two letters suggest that one of Paul's major challenges was resocialization—helping new believers to learn, understand, and live by the very different social and ethical code of early Christianity.

1 Thessalonians Study Notes

2:14-16 The accusation that Paul was guilty of anti-Semitism (because he accused "the Jews" of killing Jesus) misunderstands the text. Paul—a Jew himself—was not speaking of all Jews but only of that small minority in Judea involved in anti-Christian persecution. Furthermore, logically Paul could not have meant "all Jews," because many of those who followed Jesus (including himself) were Jews. Paul taught that our sins are the reason Jesus died; we all share responsibility in his death (Rm 4:25; 1 Co 15:3; Gl 1:4; 1 Tm 1:15).

2:17–3:6 The remarkable correlation between 2:17–3:6 and Ac 17:1-16 with 18:1-5 confirms the historical value of Ac, which adds detail to Paul's comments. Paul and his companions came to Thessalonica from Philippi (Ac 17:1; cp. 1 Th 2:2). Forced out of Thessalonica (Ac 17:5-10; cp. 1 Th 2:17-18), they went to Beroea (Ac 17:10). From there Paul went on alone to Athens (Ac 17:14-16; cp. 1 Th 3:1), leaving instructions for Silas and Timothy (Ac 17:16; cp. 1 Th 3:2-3), and eventually traveled to Corinth (Ac 18:1), where his companions rejoined him (Ac 18:5; cp. 1 Th 3:6).

4:17 Some critics claim that Paul believed he would live to see Christ's return but didn't and that therefore either Paul wasn't inspired or the Bible contains false statements. But while Paul's use of "we" may imply that he expected to be alive, it does not require or prove that he believed this. At 1 Co 15:52-53, Paul expressed virtually the same idea as he did here, yet in the same letter he wrote, "God . . . will also raise us up by His power" (1 Co 6:14). So he apparently considered both options to be possible for him (cp. 1 Th 5:10, "whether we are awake or asleep"). In 5:1-2, Paul implied the same thing that Jesus said about not knowing the time of Christ's return (see Mt 24:36; Mk 13:32; Ac 1:6-7). It would be odd for Paul to contradict himself within a few short verses.

2 Thessalonians Articles

Notable Christian Apologist: Augustine

by Ted Cabal

Augustine (A.D. 354–430) was born in northern Africa (roughly modern Algeria). Monica, his devout Christian mother, raised him in biblical truth, prayed for him faithfully throughout her life, and remained an important influence on Augustine until her death. His brilliant but restless mind, however, wandered away from his Christian roots. This journey away from God (detailed in his classic Confessions) included giving himself to sensual pleasures. Augustine, seeking intellectual and spiritual fulfillment, wandered in succession through pagan philosophies such as Manichaeanism and Neoplatonism. Manichaeanism combined elements from several religions, teaching that reality is ultimately grounded in two gods, one evil and one good. Neoplatonism, however, taught that all reality emanated from "the One" (an impersonal, unknowable god).

Augustine eventually realized the intellectual and spiritual failure of his search through paganism. After his soul came to rest through conversion to Christ, Augustine would become the greatest theologian and apologist of the first Christian millennium. He powerfully refuted prevailing pagan philosophies (including Manichaeanism) as well as heresies that threatened to divide and corrupt the church. In The City of God, Augustine brilliantly confronted the pagan charge that Christianity was responsible for the downfall of the Roman Empire. He focused the blame where it belonged by exposing paganism's spiritual bankruptcy. Moreover, in so doing, Augustine constructed a grand philosophy of history in observing that the crisis of his day was only part of a larger whole. The "City of the World," comprised of those whose chief love is the self, stands in sharp contrast in every age to the "City of God," comprised of those who love God.

Introduction to 2 Thessalonians

AUTHOR

Both letters to the church in Thessalonica were sent out under the names of Paul, Silas, and Timothy. And the use of first-person plural pronouns ("we," "us") throughout both letters reveals that the inclusion of Silas and Timothy in the salutation was no mere formality (contrast Philippians). At the same time, though, the order of the names and the occasional use of "I" (1 Th 2:18; 3:5; 5:27; 2 Th 2:5; 3:17) reveal that Paul was primarily responsible for the letters' contents.

While 1 Thessalonians is almost universally accepted as having genuinely been written by Paul, the opposite holds for 2 Thessalonians. The balance of scholarly opinion views the letter as a forgery, written by an unknown person some five to 50 years after Paul's death. Reasons for questioning its authenticity include these points:

1. The form and structure of 2 Thessalonians make it allegedly too similar to 1 Thessalonians.
2. The vocabulary of 2 Thessalonians is seemingly too close to that of 1 Thessalonians and too different from the vocabulary of other letters by Paul.
3. First Thessalonians seems warm and friendly, while 2 Thessalonians seems cool and distant.
4. Supposedly there are significant differences in theology between the two letters.

These arguments are neither strong nor persuasive. With regard to points 1 and 2, if 2 Thessalonians is authentic, then we are dealing with two documents written by the same author a short time apart; similarities are to be expected. Furthermore, the differences noted in point 2 are of questionable value. Point 3 is a subjective assessment, not an argument or reason; the key question is why the two letters are said to be different. As for point 4, most of the arguments concerning differences would eliminate 1 Thessalonians as well as 2 Thessalonians, and differences like these surface when other authentic letters of Paul are compared.

Apart from the inconclusiveness of the arguments against 2 Thessalonians, there is the inability of a forgery hypothesis to suggest a historically credible situation capable of explaining why a forged letter might have been written, what its relationship to 1 Thessalonians was, and how it came to be accepted as part of the body of Paul's letters. Pauline authorship remains the least problematic solution.

THEMES IN THESSALONIANS

Thessalonica, Macedonia's largest and most important city, was a wealthy commercial center at the intersection of major transportation routes. Religiously, the traditional Greek cults and philosophies and various Egyptian and mystery religions were well represented, and there was a Jewish community and synagogue (Ac 17:1), in the city. In addition, city leaders fostered local devotion to the imperial cult in order to solidify good relations with Rome and to the local Cabirus cult to foster civic unity. To attack either cult was virtually to attack the city itself. In such an environment, preaching the gospel (which proclaimed allegiance to Jesus as Lord and King) was tantamount to treason.

In A.D. 49 Paul, Silas, and Timothy came to Thessalonica. Paul's proclamation about Jesus the Messiah attracted "some of [the Jews]," some "God-fearing Greeks" (Gentiles attracted to Judaism who attended synagogue services but stopped short of full conversion), and "a number of the leading women" (Ac 17:2-4). Other converts came to faith directly from paganism (1 Th 1:9). These new believers soon encountered hostility (1 Th 1:6; 2:14). The conversion of leading women of the community inevitably brought the new teaching to the attention of civic leaders. Charges were soon brought against the converts, and Paul, Silas and Timothy had little choice but to leave town for the sake of the new congregation.

In these circumstances two concerns weighed on Paul's mind: that the young congregation might collapse in the face of hostile pressures and that his behavior might be misunderstood, to the detriment of the gospel. Paul therefore tried to return to Thessalonica quickly, but that proved impossible (1 Th 2:18). So Paul sent Timothy back instead to strengthen and encourage them (1 Th 3:1-2). When Timothy returned to Paul, who was by then in Corinth, he brought welcome news: the congregation was not only standing fast and faithful in spite of persecution but was even growing in faith and love (1 Th 3:6-7). This is the setting of 1 Thessalonians.

In contrast, we know little about the setting of 2 Thessalonians. The similar language and structure of the letter indicate it was written shortly after the first letter. Our best clues are the three main topics Paul addressed in the letter: (1) persecution the church was experiencing (2 Th 1:3-12); (2) a misunderstanding about the "Day of the Lord" (2 Th 2:1-12); and (3) disruptive behavior on the part of some members of the congregation (2 Th 3:6-15).

Together, the two letters suggest that one of Paul's major challenges was resocialization—helping new believers to learn, understand, and live by the very different social and ethical code of early Christianity.

2 Thessalonians Study Notes

1:7-9 Essentially, hell is separation from God's presence. For those who refuse God's grace and influence in their lives, He gives them what they want—no experience of God. (See the article "Why Would a Good God Send People to an Everlasting Hell?" p. 1484.)

2:11-12 On the basis of verse 11, God is sometimes charged with deceiving people. But verse 10 sets the critical context: "They perish because they did not accept the love of the truth . . . For this reason" they experience delusion. As in Rm 1:24-25 ("God delivered them over . . . They exchanged the truth of God for a lie"), so here: The delusions certain people experience reflect God's response to a prior decision on their part.

2:13 On the question of God electing or choosing people for salvation, see the article "How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and HumanFreedom?" (p. 1850) and the notes in Rm 9 and Eph 1.

3:6,14-15 Refusing to associate with certain so-called believers is not a call to intolerance or avoiding unbelievers (1 Co 5:10-11) but to church discipline (reflecting Jesus' teaching in Mt 18:17). Discipline (removal from fellowship) should be for those boldly and persistently engaging in loveless divisiveness (Rm 16:17), deviant teaching (2 Jn 9-11), or scandalous moral behavior(1 Co 5:1-5). It should always have the goal of restoring the disciplined one to fellowship and changed behavior (cp. Mt 18:15; 1 Co 5:5; Ti 3:10-11; Jms 5:19-20).

1 Timothy Articles

How Should a Christian Understand the Role of Government?

by Charles Colson

Christianity is about much more than salvation; it speaks to all of life. "Jesus is Lord" was the earliest baptismal confession. Scripture mandates taking dominion and cultivating the soil (Gn 1) and being salt and light (Mt 5:13-16). Abraham Kuyper, former Dutch prime minister and theologian, famously said, "There is not a square inch in the whole domain of human existence over which Christ, who is sovereign over all, does not cry out 'Mine!' "

No area of cultural engagement is more important than government and politics: We are commanded to submit to governing authorities (Rm 13); Jesus Himself said, "Give back to Caesar the things that are Caesar's" (Mt 22:21). This means Christians must be good citizens, pay taxes, obey laws, and serve (as called) in government. Augustine argued that Christians are to be the best citizens: what others do only because the law demands, we do out of love for God.

Because government is ordained by God to preserve order and do justice, we're instructed to honor the king (1 Pt 2:13-17) and pray for those in authority that we might live peaceful lives (1 Tm 2:1-22). The only thing worse than bad government is anarchy.

The authorities are established by God, Paul said. Hence, John Calvin accorded the magistrate's office as having one of the most important roles in any society—working as a servant for good (Rm 13:4). It's a noble calling for Christians to enter public service. Contrary to common caricatures of politicians, some of the finest public servants I've known are serious believers who live out their faith in office without compromising their convictions.

The cultural mandate means the church has an important role to play with respect to political structures—working for justice, speaking prophetically, and often being the conscience of society, even when this means persecution, prison, or death, as it did for many in the confessing church in Nazi Germany. Though there have been times when the church has failed in this responsibility, thankfully today it's at its post, the strongest voice in American society in defense of life and human rights. The church is also the agency that, in this age of terrorism, prophetically holds government to the moral boundaries of the just war tradition (see the article, "Does the Bible Support a Just War?" p. 995). Though in America we observe a strict separation of church and state (the state shouldn't establish a state church or restrict the free exercise of religion), there should never be a separation of religion and public life. The public square needs religious influence; indeed, the Christian faith has played a critical role in shaping our institutions. Reformation doctrines such as sphere sovereignty (government doesn't rule alone; all structures—the family, the church, private associations—have ordained responsibilities) and the rule of law made Western liberal democracy possible. Our Founding Fathers respected the "laws of nature and nature's God," recognizing that without a moral consensus resting upon Judeo-Christian tradition, virtue could not be maintained and self-government would fail. Noted historian Will Durant wrote that he could find no case in history where a nation survived without a moral code and no case where that moral code was not informed by religious truth.

But the church must approach its public role with caution and sensitivity. Pastors and other church leaders, for example, should never make partisan endorsements of candidates (which can divide our ranks and politicize the faith) or allow themselves to be in the hip pocket of any political party. That said, the pastor should never hesitate to speak boldly from the pulpit about pressing moral concerns.

There are clear dangers in dealing with politics. Among my duties as special counsel to President Nixon was winning the support of special interest groups. I found religious leaders easily impressed with the trappings of office. And later, watching from the outside, I saw Christian leaders succumb to these allures. There's a fine line here. It was wrong when, for most of the twentieth century, evangelicals stood apart from politics; so too it's wrong to allow ourselves to be married to a political party.

Christians individually and through organizations must engage in the political process, always preserving their independence and fulfilling the prophetic office (which may mean calling friends to account). Though Christians are to be the best of citizens, our first loyalty is not to the kingdom of man but to the kingdom of God.

How Is Jihad Understood in Islam?

by Ergun Mehmet Caner

In Arabic, the term jihad means "to strive," and "to fight." In Islam, the verb carries two levels of meaning that affect the individual Muslim.

First, the individual Muslim must strive (jihad) against his flesh. Surah al Tawbah 9:20 says, "Those who believe and suffer exile and strive [jihad] with might and main in Allah's cause . . . have the highest rank in the sight of Allah." In this dimension, the jihad is against oneself. The Muslim must learn to control his sinful impulses and desires. In this dimension, jihad is a means for the Muslim to earn salvation. The aforementioned verse ends with this promise, "they (who jihad with might) are the people who will achieve salvation."

Second, however, jihad has a corporate dimension. The Qur'an teaches that jihad is warfare in the cause of Allah. This fighting (also jihad in Arabic) is required for Muslims, even if they do not want to do it (Surah 2:216). The nature of jihad is unambiguous in the Qur'an. Surah al Tawbah 9:29 says, "Fight [jihad] those who believe not in Allah nor in the Last Day, nor hold that forbidden which has been forbidden by Allah and His Messenger, nor acknowledge the Religion of Truth, from among the people of the Book until they pay the Jizyah with willing submission."

In this corporate dimension, jihad is clearly seen as warfare. Specifically, Islam teaches that jihad is fought against those who do not recognize Islam as the only truth. In the context of Surah 9:29, jihad's purpose is for either the conversion of the infidel, or the control of the non-believer. If a non-believer will not believe, he must pay a tax, called jizyah, as a sign of his submission.

Jihad as warfare has parameters in Islam. Muslims who are blind, lame, or terminally ill are exempt from holy war (Surah 48:17). Muslims must give a warning of four months (fatwa), telling the infidel to convert or surrender. After these "forbidden months," the Muslim warriors must "seize them, beleaguer them and lie in wait for them, in every stratagem of war" (Surah 9:1-5). Some Muslims cite Surah al Baqarah 2:256 ("there is no compulsion in religion") but earlier in that same chapter, Allah says, "and slay them whenever ye catch them and turn them out from where they have turned you out" (Surah al Baqarah 2:191). Once jihad begins, it must be fought until victory or the surrender of the unbelievers (Surah 47:4). The Muslim who dies in jihad is promised heaven (Surah 47:4-6).

Introduction to 1 Timothy

AUTHOR

These letters of encouragement and instruction to young church leaders, collectively known as the Pastoral Epistles (letters), claim to have been written by Paul, and the early church accepted this ascription. Indeed, no serious challenge to Paul's authorship arose until the nineteenth century. Critics of Paul's authorship based their rejection on several arguments:

1. The vocabulary, grammar, and style of the Pastorals differ from letters that are almost unanimously viewed as being from Paul.
2. Church organization reflected in the Pastorals looks more like structures seen in a later era.
3. The letters counter Gnostic teachings, which did not arise until after A.D. 100.

There are sound responses to each of the critics' objections.

1. The role of a personal secretary (possibly Luke), the incorporation of earlier material, the letters' personal nature, and the unique subject matter account for linguistic differences.
2. The early church's adoption of the leadership structure of the synagogue accounts for the relatively advanced organization of the church early in its history (Ac 6:1-6; 11:30). Besides, the leadership structure is not as developed in the Pastorals as in the writings of the apostolic fathers at the close of the first century.
3. Paul countered a basically Jewish heresy (1 Tm 1:7; Ti 1:10,14; 3:9) containing some features of asceticism, or self-denial (1 Tm 4:3), with traces of Greek philosophical influence (2 Tm 2:18).

No feature of the teaching Paul combated precludes dating the letters during Paul's lifetime. Recent scholarship is increasingly favorable toward the authenticity of these letters.

1 TIMOTHY

Paul wrote this letter to Timothy probably in the early A.D. 60s. Internal evidence suggests Paul wrote from Macedonia to Timothy in Ephesus (1:3). Paul wrote to help Timothy respond to a dangerous false teaching that threatened the churches of the area.

2 TIMOTHY

Paul, writing to Timothy probably in the mid 60s, faced impending martyrdom. Second Timothy 4:6 suggests the letter was written during Paul's second Roman imprisonment, just before his execution under Nero.

TITUS

Paul wrote Titus, likely from Macedonia, probably in the early 60s. Titus was apparently in Crete where he combated false teaching (1:6,12), similar to that faced by Timothy in Ephesus.

1 Timothy Study Notes

1:4 This verse does not contradict the validity of biblical genealogies (e.g., Gn 10; 1 Ch 1–9; Mt 1:1-17; Lk 3:23-38). False teachers in Ephesus probably emphasized lengthy genealogies, believing salvation was based on having a lineage that could be traced back to Abraham (Mt 3:9; Ti 3:9). The NT teaches that salvation requires sharing Abraham's faith whether or not one shares his bloodline (Rm 4). "Genealogies" may also be virtually synonymous with "myths," referring to legends about OT figures. Paul's command reflects his aversion toward stories fabricated for religious purposes, demonstrating his conviction that Scripture is based on history.

1:10 Paul regarded homosexual actions as sinful behavior. His statement is consistent with the teaching of the Bible as a whole and the divine purpose for the creation of male and female in Gn 1–2. (See the article "What Does the Bible Teach about Homosexuality?" p. 1716.)

1:17 God is "invisible" because He is an immaterial, spiritual being. He may, however, choose temporarily to assume a visible, material form. Thus, Paul's statement does not contradict texts such as Gn 32:30 and Ex 33:11 (see note on Jn 1:18).

2:4 God genuinely desires the salvation of all people(2 Pt 3:9). Nevertheless, not all individuals will be saved (2 Th 1:5-9). See note on 1 Tm 4:10.

2:5 Although this verse emphasizes Jesus' humanity, Paul also affirmed Jesus' deity in this letter. He referred to Jesus' special relationship with the Father (1:1-2; 6:13) who grants Him the divine title Lord (1:2,12; 6:3,14). He implied Jesus' heavenly existence before the incarnation (3:16), and said that Jesus' saving of sinners (1:15) is a divine activity (4:10).

2:9 Paul sought to prohibit extravagant, expensive styles (recognized as immodest and seductive) accompanied by the wearer's neglect of her own character.

2:11-15 Paul was no sexist but rather a champion of the equality of men and women before God (Gl 3:28)—a sharp contrast to the chauvinistic teaching of many of his contemporaries. Paul recognized that male-female equality did not require abolishing all role distinctions, which were defined by God in creation. The woman was created to be a helper for the man (Gn 2:18-25). Eve's exercise of authority over Adam brought disaster, illustrating the dangers of upsetting the family's divinely ordained leadership structure. Evidently the false teachers taught that male authority in church and home and the woman's childbearing role were curses for sin, which Jesus' atoning work had eradicated (Gn 3:16). Paul recognized that Eve's curse involved oppressive male leadership and pain in childbearing, but male leadership and childbearing were part of God's plan for pre-fall creation (Gn 1:27-28; 2:18). Paul therefore insisted Christian wives were "saved" (restored to their pre-fall state) by submitting to their husband's compassionate leadership and through bearing and raising children. This is one way these Ephesian women could "work out" their final salvation (Php 2:12).

3:2 "Husband of one wife" requires the overseer's marital faithfulness (see note on Ti 1:6). Some critics argue that if churches truly demanded that pastoral candidates satisfy all these criteria, the church would cease to exist due to lack of qualified leadership. This opinion overlooks the gospel's transforming power, which has endowed many potential Christian leaders with these traits.

4:7 This command is another rejection of myth by Paul, demonstrating his commitment to Christianity's factual, historical foundations.

4:8 Paul did not dispute the significant medical benefits of physical exercise. "Limited" means "for a little while" (the benefits of exercise are only temporary). Spiritual training that produces godly character is more important since its results endure throughout the present life and in the life to come.

4:10 Some claim this verse conflicts with other scriptural passages by teaching universalism (all individuals will be saved). However, "everyone" refers to both Jews and Gentiles (all kinds of people rather than every single individual). The word "especially" could be translated "namely." "Everyone" equals "every believer regardless of ethnic background."

5:12 Paul's harsh words against widows who remarry initially appear inconsistent with his command for younger widows to remarry (v. 14) and his teaching elsewhere (Rm 7:1-3; 1 Co 7:39). However, the text probably referred to a widow who remarried an unbeliever(2 Co 6:14), abandoning her faith under the spouse's influence. "Original pledge" (lit. "first faith") refers to the widow's former faith in Christ.

5:23 This does not contradict biblical warnings about the danger of alcoholic beverages (Pr 20:1; 23:29-35; 31:4-5). Paul urged moderation (1 Tm 3:3) but did not require total abstinence. Many first-century water sources were contaminated. Drinking wine helped prevent stomach ailments caused by parasites and other contaminants. Biblical wine was natural wine diluted with water, resulting in a low alcoholic content. Timothy could consume such wine in moderation without seriously risking intoxication.

6:1 Paul did not call for slavery's abolition—a futile endeavor in the ancient Roman world that would have confirmed pagan suspicions that Christianity destroys the fabric of society. Paul urged slaves to embrace freedom if the opportunity came (1 Co 7:21). He also called for slavery reform within the church, urging fair treatment of slaves and generous financial support (Col 4:1). These reforms amounted to a virtual abolition of slavery by Christian masters. Christian masters were to view Christian slaves as brothers (1 Tm 6:2), thus as equals. And Paul described the slaves' service (lit. "kind deeds") as voluntary rather than coerced, see note on Ti 2:9.

6:14 Some claim Paul mistakenly expected the second coming to occur within Timothy's lifetime. However, Paul's words merely expressed the hope of Christ's soon return. Paul was convinced that he was living in the last days (4:1; 2 Tm 3:1; 4:1), a period beginning with Jesus' resurrection. This conviction is balanced by(1) the insistence that the time for Christ's return was in God's hands (1 Tm 6:15 implying that God alone knew that time) and (2) Paul's stated expectation of his own death (2 Tm 4:6-8). Paul described the suddenness and possible imminence of Christ's return (1 Co 7:29-31;1 Th 5:2) while expecting delay since events that would precede the return had not occurred (2 Th 2:3-8).

6:16 On divine "invisibility," see note on 1:17. God's sole immortality does not contradict the believer's immortality through resurrection. The word here translated "immortality" means "not capable of dying"—inappropriate for believers, who may die physically before the resurrection—and carries connotations of eternal self-existence, which non-divine beings do not possess.

2 Timothy Articles

What Does It Mean That God Inspired the Bible?

by Gordon R. Lewis

To say that God inspired the Bible is to say that the Holy Spirit supernaturally motivated and superintended the prophetic and apostolic recipients of revelation in the entire process of writing their scriptural books.

Many other books have coauthors, so we need not imagine that Scripture has to be either a human or a divine production. The Holy Scriptures originated, not with the will of its human writers, but with the will of God the Holy Spirit (2 Pt 1:20-21). Over 3,000 times biblical writers claimed to have received their messages from God. God the Holy Spirit "inspired" (breathed out or originated) the Scriptures through the human writers (2 Tm 3:16).

God prepared these conscious, active prophetic and apostolic spokesmen (and their secretaries) providentially by their heredity, character, vocabularies, and writing styles. At the appropriate time, in all the processes of writing, they were "moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Pt 1:21). This technical meaning of inspiration does not apply to any alleged revelations outside the Bible or to any literature that in a more general sense may be said to be inspiring.

God commissioned His true prophets to write, including Moses (Ex 17:14; 34:27), Joshua (Jos 24:15-26), Samuel (1 Sm 10:25), Isaiah (Is 30:8), Jeremiah (Jr 30:2; 36:2,17,28-29), Ezekiel (Ezk 43:11), and Habakkuk (Hab 2:2). Hence the Bible was not a result of Israel's quest for God; it is God's witness against Israel (Dt 31:26). Zechariah laments the fact that Israel "made their hearts like a rock so as not to obey the law or the words that the LORD of Hosts had sent by His Spirit through the earlier prophets" (Zch 7:12).

The collection (or canon) of biblical books began to be formed as inspired writings were placed alongside the ark of the covenant in which were contained the Ten Commandments (Dt 31:24-26; Jos 24:25-26; 1 Sm 10:25; 1 Kg 8:9; Is 8:20; 29:18; 34:16).

The Lord Jesus Christ validated the OT's inspiration by quoting from all three sections: the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings (Lk 24:44). He endorsed the inspiration and authority of the OT in detail (Mt 5:17-18). The Lord also prepared His disciples for the coming of the NT (Jn 16:12) and so endorsed it in principle. Paul received revelation pertaining to redemption (Gl 1:11-17) and expected his writings to be received as from God (2 Th 2:13,15). Peter classified Paul's writings with the inspired OT (2 Pt 3:16).

What the authors or their close associates originally wrote in Hebrew, Aramaic, or Greek was inspired. Although their original manuscripts have not been discovered, we know what they wrote. In numerous available copies, quotations, and translations, there is amazing agreement. Through some 20 centuries of laborious copying and printing, there have been no substantial variations of any important fact or doctrine.

So, in the twenty-first century, we can rely on serious translations to convey what believers need to be "equipped for every good work" (2 Tm 3:17). The Holy Spirit attests to the truth of this written revelation and uses it like a sword to convict of sin, draw sinners to Christ, build them up, and send them out to bless the world (Heb 4:12).

As a result of its inspiration, all that the Bible affirms is true.

Introduction to 2 Timothy

AUTHOR

These letters of encouragement and instruction to young church leaders, collectively known as the Pastoral Epistles (letters), claim to have been written by Paul, and the early church accepted this ascription. Indeed, no serious challenge to Paul's authorship arose until the nineteenth century. Critics of Paul's authorship based their rejection on several arguments:

1. The vocabulary, grammar, and style of the Pastorals differ from letters that are almost unanimously viewed as being from Paul.
2. Church organization reflected in the Pastorals looks more like structures seen in a later era.
3. The letters counter Gnostic teachings, which did not arise until after A.D. 100.

There are sound responses to each of the critics' objections.

1. The role of a personal secretary (possibly Luke), the incorporation of earlier material, the letters' personal nature, and the unique subject matter account for linguistic differences.
2. The early church's adoption of the leadership structure of the synagogue accounts for the relatively advanced organization of the church early in its history (Ac 6:1-6; 11:30). Besides, the leadership structure is not as developed in the Pastorals as in the writings of the apostolic fathers at the close of the first century.
3. Paul countered a basically Jewish heresy (1 Tm 1:7; Ti 1:10,14; 3:9) containing some features of asceticism, or self-denial (1 Tm 4:3), with traces of Greek philosophical influence (2 Tm 2:18).

No feature of the teaching Paul combated precludes dating the letters during Paul's lifetime. Recent scholarship is increasingly favorable toward the authenticity of these letters.

1 TIMOTHY

Paul wrote this letter to Timothy probably in the early A.D. 60s. Internal evidence suggests Paul wrote from Macedonia to Timothy in Ephesus (1:3). Paul wrote to help Timothy respond to a dangerous false teaching that threatened the churches of the area.

2 TIMOTHY

Paul, writing to Timothy probably in the mid 60s, faced impending martyrdom. Second Timothy 4:6 suggests the letter was written during Paul's second Roman imprisonment, just before his execution under Nero.

TITUS

Paul wrote Titus, likely from Macedonia, probably in the early 60s. Titus was apparently in Crete where he combated false teaching (1:6,12), similar to that faced by Timothy in Ephesus.

2 Timothy Study Notes

1:7 Paul encouraged strength and confidence in God, since cowardice before nonbelievers might thwart gospel witness. His words do not contradict the familiar imperative to "fear" the Lord (Lv 25:17; Dt 6:2,13; Mt 10:28; Lk 12:5; 1 Pt 1:17).

2:8 Jesus' descent from David does not contradict Matthew's and Luke's narratives of Jesus' virginal conception (Mt 1:18-25; Lk 1:34). Jesus was Joseph's legal, not biological, descendant and was thus of David's line. Luke's genealogy of Jesus possibly traces Jesus' lineage back to David through Mary's line, so that Jesus may have been a descendant of David both biologically and legally.

2:18 Arguing that the resurrection had already occurred meant that merely the spirit was resurrected, not the body (implying that death is victorious in the end). Some of Paul's opponents excused immoral behavior. They reasoned that if the physical body had no place in God's plan for the final redeemed state, then the body and its actions did not matter to God (1 Co 6:13-20). Other opponents argued that if God did not resurrect the body, then He must regard the body as innately evil. They responded by embracing a lifestyle that avoided sex, food, and other blessings God meant for His people to enjoy within a proper context (1 Tm 4:3).

3:8 Although the OT never names the Egyptian sorcerers who opposed Moses before Pharaoh (Ex 7:11-12,22; 8:7,16-19), Paul did not claim to quote the OT directly here. Ancient Jewish traditions (Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan, Qumran scrolls, and rabbinic writings) also identify the magicians by these names. No good reason exists to question these traditions at this point.

3:12 Jesus and NT writers warned believers of impending persecution (Mt 5:10-12; 10:16-25; 1 Pt 4:12-16). The warning may seem to conflict with texts like Pr 16:7; however, both the warnings and the proverb are true. This warning must be balanced with Paul's acknowledgment that some unbelievers will respect Christians for their honesty, kindness, and wisdom, all of which produce peace when rightly received (1 Tm 2:2; 3:7;2 Tm 2:22-26). The manner in which Christians responded to persecution, suffering, and death was one of the ways in which Christianity undermined paganism in the Roman Empire.

3:16 Some critics argue that all Scripture cannot be divinely inspired since a moral God could not possibly have inspired, say, the story of a horrible rape in Jdg 19:22-30. Scripture does record immoral acts. Inspiration guarantees its accuracy, not its divine approval. God's approval or disapproval of human acts recorded in the Bible must be inferred from the comments of the biblical narrator, the divine response to the action, the purpose of the book as a whole, and biblical principles stated in other sections of Scripture.

4:6-8 See note on 1 Tm 6:14.

Introduction to Titus

AUTHOR

These letters of encouragement and instruction to young church leaders, collectively known as the Pastoral Epistles (letters), claim to have been written by Paul, and the early church accepted this ascription. Indeed, no serious challenge to Paul's authorship arose until the nineteenth century. Critics of Paul's authorship based their rejection on several arguments:

1. The vocabulary, grammar, and style of the Pastorals differ from letters that are almost unanimously viewed as being from Paul.
2. Church organization reflected in the Pastorals looks more like structures seen in a later era.
3. The letters counter Gnostic teachings, which did not arise until after A.D. 100.

There are sound responses to each of the critics' objections.

1. The role of a personal secretary (possibly Luke), the incorporation of earlier material, the letters' personal nature, and the unique subject matter account for linguistic differences.
2. The early church's adoption of the leadership structure of the synagogue accounts for the relatively advanced organization of the church early in its history (Ac 6:1-6; 11:30). Besides, the leadership structure is not as developed in the Pastorals as in the writings of the apostolic fathers at the close of the first century.
3. Paul countered a basically Jewish heresy (1 Tm 1:7; Ti 1:10,14; 3:9) containing some features of asceticism, or self-denial (1 Tm 4:3), with traces of Greek philosophical influence (2 Tm 2:18).

No feature of the teaching Paul combated precludes dating the letters during Paul's lifetime. Recent scholarship is increasingly favorable toward the authenticity of these letters.

1 TIMOTHY

Paul wrote this letter to Timothy probably in the early A.D. 60s. Internal evidence suggests Paul wrote from Macedonia to Timothy in Ephesus (1:3). Paul wrote to help Timothy respond to a dangerous false teaching that threatened the churches of the area.

2 TIMOTHY

Paul, writing to Timothy probably in the mid 60s, faced impending martyrdom. Second Timothy 4:6 suggests the letter was written during Paul's second Roman imprisonment, just before his execution under Nero.

TITUS

Paul wrote Titus, likely from Macedonia, probably in the early 60s. Titus was apparently in Crete where he combated false teaching (1:6,12), similar to that faced by Timothy in Ephesus.

Titus Study Notes

1:2 Some assert that God did lie in 1 Kg 22:23, and Jr 20:7; see notes on those passages to confirm Paul's statement here.

1:6 Some critics argue that since Paul required only an overseer (or elder) to be the "husband of one wife," he implicitly approved of polygamy or infidelity among the laity. And admittedly, church leaders were held to a higher standard than other believers (Jms 3:1). But this does not suggest that polygamy or infidelity was acceptable behavior for laity. Although individuals who had previously behaved immorally and later repented of this lifestyle were gladly received into the church (1 Co 6:9-11), post-conversion infidelity was not casually tolerated. Such behavior constituted grounds for church discipline (1 Co 5:11), including exclusion from the fellowship. See note on 1 Tm 3:2.

1:10 The text is not anti-Semitic but instead refers specifically to Judaizers who taught that, in addition to having faith in Christ, Gentiles must become Jewish proselytes (receiving circumcision) and adhere to OT dietary laws and the ritual calendar to earn salvation. The heresy in the Pastoral Epistles is basically Jewish with ascetic features and certain Hellenistic elements.

1:12 Citing Epimenides may seem like an unfair regional stereotype. However, Epimenides and Paul were in a far better position to describe ancient Cretan society than are twenty-first-century critics. Cross-cultural experience confirms that certain negative behaviors may be endemic to particular cultures (including one's own). Epimenides's characterization was not universally true, but it was true in reference to Paul's opponents.

1:14 See note on 1 Tm 1:4.

2:3-5 See note on 1 Tm 2:11-15.

2:9 Some critics argue that this verse contradicts Mt 23:10. However, Jesus' words refer specifically to calling a spiritual teacher "master," not a slave referring to his owner as master (see note on 1 Tm 6:1).

2:11 Paul was not a universalist, believing that all people go to heaven. Rather, God's grace is for all the kinds of people discussed in verses 1-10 (young and old, men and women, slaves and masters). See note on 1 Tm 4:10.

2:13 Grammatically and contextually, this verse is a powerful reference to Christ's deity. Paul's belief in Jesus' deity was based on his life-changing experience of seeing Jesus clothed in divine glory (Ac 9:3-9), his exegesis of important OT messianic texts (Ac 9:20-22), and Jesus' personal claims and miraculous activities as reported to him by eyewitnesses. Paul also personally saw Jesus' divine power at work in His disciples through the miracles that Paul and other disciples performed. See note on 1 Tm 2:5.

3:5 This verse is consistent with texts affirming the importance of good works. The NT uniformly teaches that although good works are not a requirement for salvation, they are an inevitable result of salvation. The same gospel that saved sinners like Paul, transformed them morally and ethically (v. 3). Verse 8 further insists on the importance of good works as true faith's necessary expression.

3:9 See note on 1 Tm 1:4.

Introduction to Philemon

AUTHOR AND THEME

Paul wrote this brief letter to Philemon, a fairly wealthy businessman who hosted a church in his home in the small city of Colossae (about 100 miles from Ephesus). Philemon's slave, Onesimus, had fled to Rome where Paul was incarcerated. In an extraordinary chain of events, this fugitive slave became a Christian, ministered to Paul faithfully, and was now returning to Philemon. Paul was deeply concerned about how Philemon would receive his runaway slave. He thus wrote a tactful appeal to Philemon to consider the change of life Onesimus had experienced and to receive him back not only as a servant, but also as a fellow believer.

This letter shows the beginning of the impact of the gospel on the unjust institution of slavery. Whereas Paul did not overtly attack slavery here (which would have been inappropriate for the situation), he did draw out the implications of the gospel for changing the relationships between slaves and slave owners. This is exemplified in his appeal to Philemon to receive Onesimus back "no longer as a slave" but "as a dearly loved brother" (v. 16).

Paul wrote the letter sometime between A.D. 60–62 while in custody, probably in Rome.

Philemon Study Notes

10-11 This letter portrays conversion in terms of an authentic relationship with Christ and as a life-transforming event.

16 Given the injustice of the institution of slavery, why didn't Paul directly request that Onesimus be freed? Paul was not addressing the Roman Senate (see 1 Co 7:21-23) but rather a middle-class businessman in a rural village. His priority at this point was to restructure the relationships within the Christian community based on the love and forgiveness of Christ.

Hebrews Articles

What Is Divine Revelation?

by Gordon R. Lewis

Revelation is an activity of the invisible, living God making known to finite and sinful people His creative power, moral standards, and gracious redemptive plan.

First, God discloses Himself and His power to everyone by the marvels of His creation—the amazing life support system of planet earth. We can discover some things about painters from their paintings. Similarly, in the magnificence of creation, with its microscopic complexities and cosmic expanse, we realize our dependence upon the Creator's powerful existence and intelligent design (Ps 19:1-6; Rm 1:19-20).

Second, God makes plain His moral nature and ethical principles for our well-being by implanting oughts and ought nots in every human spirit. Even people who do not have Moses' Ten Commandments (Ex 20:1-20) feel an obligation to obey those universal principles of right and wrong and suffer guilt when they do not (Rm 2:14-15). God's moral principles restrain evil and prompt all to seek and find Him (Ac 17:27). However, everyone sins, worships, and serves the creation rather than its Creator (Rm 1:25; 3:10-23). Our habitual failure to live up to God's laws demonstrates our need for His mercy and redeeming grace.

Third, God made His merciful redemptive purposes known centuries before Christ both through mighty acts such as delivering Israel from slavery in Egypt (Ex 12) and through the reliable messages of His prophetic spokesmen (Heb 1:1). Criteria by which to distinguish true from false prophets included the logical consistency of teaching with previous revelation (Dt 13:1-5) and the verification of visible signs (Dt 18:20-22). God promised to send His anointed One to defeat Satan's destructive purposes in many ways. The Messiah would be a son of Eve (Gn 3:15), a descendant of Abraham (Gn 22:18) and David (2 Sm 7:12-16), and would be born of a virgin (Is 7:14) in Bethlehem (Mc 5:2). Because those who chose the way of sin chose a way that ends in death, without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness. So believing citizens of Israel pictured Christ's coming sacrificial atonement for sin by animal sacrifices and the Passover.

Fourth, God made His just and loving plan of redemption known supremely in Jesus, the long-awaited Messiah. "No one has ever seen God. The One and Only Son—the One who is at the Father's side—He has revealed Him" (Jn 1:18). To appreciate more fully what God is like, study the life, words, works, and atoning death of Jesus. At Calvary, the guiltless Savior substituted Himself for the guilty. In doing so He defeated Satan and provided the just basis for His reconciling mercy and grace (Rm 3:25). Then the risen Christ demonstrated His saving power over sin, guilt, death, and Satan (Rm 1:2-4; 10:9-10)!

Fifth, after Jesus' ascension to heaven, God communicated His redemptive purposes through spokesmen called apostles. Jesus taught and trained them for three years and they were eyewitnesses of His resurrection (Ac 1:21-22). Through Paul, an apostle who later saw the risen Christ, God revealed His plan to unite both Jewish and Gentile believers in one body, the church (Eph 2:11-22).

Sixth, the King of kings will be revealed in all His power and glory at His second coming.

Seventh, all the above sources of revealed truth have been preserved for us in the Holy Scriptures.

Notable Christian Apologist: C. S. Lewis

by Ted Cabal

Clive Staples Lewis (1898–1963) enjoyed a distinguished career at Oxford and Cambridge. He was also a notable literary critic and author of science fiction and children's literature (including the Chronicles of Narnia). In addition, Lewis was arguably the most influential Christian apologist of the twentieth century.

Remarkably, he was a committed atheist before his conversion to theism in 1929, then to Christ in 1931.

Lewis authored a number of important apologetic works, such as Miracles, The Problem of Pain, God in the Dock, and The Abolition of Man. In his most famous work, Mere Christianity, Lewis presented powerful arguments for the truth of the Christian faith. Originally broadcast as several BBC talks during World War II, Mere Christianity notes that even people who deny objective right and wrong cannot refrain from believing in them. Moreover, people are unable to live out the moral law they know they should. Lewis argued that this moral law, coupled with humanity's inability to fulfill it, allows Christianity to begin to "talk." The forgiveness God offers in Christ makes sense in the real world.

Lewis also maintained that Jesus Christ claimed to be God, undercutting popular notions that Jesus was something like a good teacher. Either He was who He claimed, or else He was a liar or lunatic. But the life of Jesus does not betray the character of a liar or the mentality of a lunatic. Lewis contended that the most reasonable understanding of Jesus is that He is the Lord.

Does the Bible Teach Reincarnation?

by Paul Copan

The simple answer is no. When proponents of reincarnation allege that certain biblical texts teach the soul's preexistence or reincarnation, they are approaching those texts superficially and their interpretations dissolve under further scrutiny.

Reincarnation (Hinduism) or rebirth (Buddhism) is integral to Eastern philosophy. In the Bhagavad Gita, Krishna talks of having "passed through many births." And what we reap in this life (karma) comes from what we've sown in past lives. Biblical, theological, and philosophical reasons, however, undermine reincarnation.

If one acknowledges the Bible's authority and storyline, one will readily recognize the Eastern doctrine of reincarnation as unacceptable. Many claiming that reincarnation appears in the Bible would go on believing in reincarnation anyway, with or without biblical support. They read reincarnation into isolated verses (e.g., statements about being "born again" in Jn 3) without respecting the biblical context or the worldview of the author. In doing so, they do not respect the biblical text as they would want their own Eastern texts respected. (What if we read bodily resurrection into their texts?)

Each of us must die and then be judged by God (Heb 9:27). When God told Jeremiah He knew him before he was in his mother's womb (Jr 1:5), this doesn't demonstrate preexistence or reincarnation; it only indicates God's foreknowledge and sovereignty. Notice Jeremiah did not say, "Before I was in my mother's womb, I knew You, God." That would make a persuasive case for preexistence! Also, the disciples' questioning whether the man born blind sinned before birth (Jn 9:2) does not express reincarnation but rather reflects the rabbinic belief that a fetus could sin while in his mother's womb (cp. Genesis Rabbah 63.6).

Furthermore, the historically supportable event of Jesus' bodily resurrection undercuts reincarnation. The biblical view of the afterlife is radically different from that of Eastern philosophies. True immortality is not the eradication or "snuffing out" (moksha) of the self nor its absorption with the One, Brahman, like a drop in an ocean. To receive immortality is to receive an immortal, imperishable physical body (1 Co 15:53-34). It is a spiritual body (that is, one supernaturally animated by the Holy Spirit) rather than a natural body (animated by a human soul). Immortality means being forever in union with God and living in God's presence with this new body in the new heavens and new earth—without losing individual identity.

Theologically, God's grace and forgiveness undercut karma. We need not bear the heavy weight of guilt and shame because Jesus Christ has absorbed all that for us. And if reincarnation is true, why help the underprivileged? Aren't they getting what they deserve—their karma?

Despite "evidence" for reincarnation, arguments for a person having lived previous lives could be explained by demonic activity (see Ac 16:16-18). A person having access to information about another's previous life does not imply that this was his own life. A psychic may purport to have knowledge of a crime, but this doesn't mean he committed it!

Philosophical problems with reincarnation are many. (1) Those "remembering" past lives tend to be clustered in the East (where reincarnation is taught), not throughout the world (as we'd expect). (2) If we forget our past lives, what purpose does reincarnation serve for self-improvement? (3) Assuming reincarnation (with an infinite past series of rebirths), then we've all had plenty of time to reach perfection. Why haven't we? (4) Reincarnation doesn't solve the problem of evil, as some claim, but only infinitely postpones it (and in some Eastern schools, evil is just an illusion anyway). (5) Reincarnation makes incoherent the Eastern idea of monism, which says that everything is one without distinction, by presupposing distinctions between (a) individual souls, (b) the karmas of individual souls not having yet reached enlightenment, (c) the enlightened and unenlightened, and (d) individual souls and the One (ultimate reality).

Introduction to Hebrews

AUTHOR

Several books in the New Testament stress Christ's death, but the book of Hebrews is especially known for its emphasis on the doctrine of Christ as both high priest and sacrificial offering to atone for sin. No other book in the New Testament so masterfully combines teaching from both the old and new covenants.

The author of Hebrews, though not named, was almost certainly known to the original recipients of this letter. In the centuries since its writing, the letter's anonymity has fueled speculation. Scholars have suggested a variety of early Christians as the author, including Paul, Luke, Apollos, Clement of Rome, Barnabas, Silvanus, Philip, and Priscilla. No one, however, is sure who wrote this biblical book. Origen, an early church father, said it best: Only God knows who wrote Hebrews.

The evidence from Hebrews, including the title—"Hebrews"—strongly indicates that the letter was written to Jewish Christians. The writer appealed throughout the book to the Old Testament, assumed that his readers knew Jewish sacrificial rituals (e.g., 10:1-2), and warned against relying on rituals that only point to Christ but are not Christ Himself (10:1-4,11-18). Ascertaining an exact date for Hebrews is impossible, but the evidence suggests it was written sometime prior to A.D. 70. First, the author and his readers belonged to the second generation of Christians. They neither saw nor heard Jesus in person (2:3). Second, if the Timothy mentioned in 13:23 was Paul's younger associate, then the letter requires a date sometime during his lifetime. Third, the reference to sacrifices in 10:1-2 seems to indicate sacrifices were still being offered. Some point to the writer's use of the present tense to describe the sacrifices (7:8; 9:6-7,9,13; 13:10) as evidence that the temple was still standing in Jerusalem. Finally, the use of Hebrews in 1 Clement (36:1-6), a document usually dated around A.D. 95 or 96, shows that the author wrote it before this time. To repeat, then, though a date anytime between A.D. 60–96 is possible for Hebrews, the book was likely written sometime prior to A.D. 70.

THEMES IN HEBREWS

The recipients of Hebrews clearly had been undergoing persecution for their faith (10:32-34; 12:4). They were also giving of themselves, busy serving others (6:10). And yet they were immature (5:11–6:12) and needed to be taught again the elementary truths of God's Word (5:12). The warnings issued in this book show that many of these Christians were wavering in their faith and tempted to desert it altogether (2:1-4; 4:12-13; 6:4-8; 10:26-31; 12:25-29). They stood in danger of falling away from Christ, probably to avoid persecution.

A recurring theme throughout the letter is Christ's superiority over everything in the Jewish religion to which they wanted to return. Jesus is far above and beyond the Old Testament prophets, the angels, Moses, Joshua, and the Aaronic priesthood. So why would the Hebrews ever want to go back to that old system when the new had come?

Hebrews Study Notes

1:2 The writer of Heb did not wrongly place us in the "last days." This verse speaks of God's revelation of Himself. In times past God spoke to the fathers by the prophets, but in these "last days" (i.e., the Messianic Age) God has revealed Himself in Christ. Jesus inaugurated the "last days," which stretch between His first coming and His second coming. We are in the last days and will be so until Christ returns. This period of time is also the age of the Spirit (of Jesus) in which He abundantly works and ministers.

Some object to this verse by saying that one cannot be an "heir" unless someone dies, and that therefore, if Jesus is an heir, God must be dead. But this neglects the fact that in the first century an inheritance could be passed on to an heir well before the benefactor's death.

1:8 Some skeptics argue that this verse, which addresses Jesus as "O God," contradicts Jn 8:40 and Ac 17:31 which say that Jesus was a man. Such objections, however, miss the fact that Scripture teaches the concept of the "hypostatic union"—that Jesus is both fully God and fully man.

1:10 Some have claimed that, if God "established the earth," as this verse states, it must not move. But that is false. As the writer of Heb maintained that Christ is superior to the angels, he used Ps 102:25 and the metaphor of a foundation to describe Christ's founding of the earth. Like other biblical writers, the author of Heb described things as they appeared to him.

1:11 Skeptics wrongly see a contradiction between this verse, which says that the earth will perish, and Ps 78:69 and Ec 1:4, which say that it will last forever. However, in Ec 1:3 the Teacher discussed the futility and vanity of humanity's endeavors: "What does a man gain for all his efforts he labors at under the sun?" The author continued this theme in Ec 1:4, where he viewed the earth entirely from a human perspective. In the course of life he saw the earth as abiding forever because that was how it seemed to him. Ps 78:69 was written from a similar standpoint. This verse in Heb, however, is different. Like 2 Pt 3:10, it teaches that the earth will indeed perish before the new heavens and a new earth are made (see 2 Pt 3:13).

2:16 Some people argue this verse teaches that Jesus is a biological descendant of Abraham and then question its veracity in the light of Mt 1:18, which teaches that Christ lacked a biological human father. However, "offspring" in Heb 2:16 refers to the "descendants" of Abraham and not to Jesus. The point in this verse is that the Son, through the incarnation, helps "Abraham's offspring" and not the angels.

4:15 The issue of whether Jesus was not able to sin (impeccability) or able to sin (peccability) is difficult. Suffice it to say that the NT plainly teaches that Jesus never sinned (see 2 Co 5:21; Heb 4:15) even though He was truly tempted (see Mt 4:1-11; Mk 1:12-13; Lk 4:1-13). Moreover, it also affirms, "God is not tempted by evil" (see Jms 1:13). Since Jesus is fully God and fully man, it follows that He could not be tempted with evil. Further, Jesus "has been tested in every way as we are, yet without sin." This phrase does not mean that Christ underwent every single human temptation that is possible to experience in our day, but that He experienced in every way the full force of our temptation yet without yielding to it. Jesus is indeed a worthy high priest who is superior to the OT priests and able to sympathize with our weaknesses.

6:4-6 This passage, with its warning, is controversial and difficult. Some persons believe this text teaches that it is possible to fall out of salvation. Though a cursory look at this text might lead one to think that Christians can lose their salvation, that idea is not the issue. These verses instead speak of the need for believers to persevere in the Christian faith. The verbs "enlightened" (v. 4), "tasted" (vv. 4-5), and "became companions" (v. 4) describe persons who have professed Christ and claim to be believers. To "have fallen away" (v. 6) means to commit apostasy. The writer of Heb admonished his readers not to go back to the OT sacrificial system because Jesus is superior to it in every way. If they were to turn away from Christ, repentance would be impossible because it cannot be found anywhere else once Jesus is rejected (10:26-27). By their actions, such persons disgrace Christ openly and try to re-crucify Him. If they forsake faith in Christ after having professed it and go back (i.e., do not persevere), they never were actually saved to begin with (see Mt 10:22; Mk 13:13).

6:18 Some skeptics see a contradiction in this verse, which says that it is impossible for God to lie, because Jr 32:27 and Mt 19:26 say that nothing is impossible for God. This objection is similar to the well-worn question "Is God so powerful that He can make a rock so big He cannot move it?" Such objections, however, confuse God's character with His power to do things. God cannot lie because it is against His nature to do so—He is infinitely holy and all good.

7:3 Some incorrectly see a contradiction in this verse regarding Melchizedek because they say Gn 3:20 teaches that everyone is descended from Adam and Eve. But in Heb 7:1-3 the author explains Gn 14:17-20 to demonstrate typological links between Melchizedek and the Son of God. The name Melchizedek means "king of righteousness" (from the Hb melek and sedeq), and the city over which he ruled is called Salem, meaning "peace"; thus he is also "king of peace." The writer of Heb developed a contrast between Melchizedek's priesthood and the Levitical priesthood. Genesis 14 says nothing about Melchizedek's lineage, birth, and death, so his priesthood has neither qualifications nor limitations like those of the Levitical priesthood. Thus the phrases "without father, mother, or genealogy" and "having neither beginning of days nor end of life" are understandable and do not contradict Gn 3:20.

7:11 Some see an inconsistency with this verse because they say that the law was given to the Israelites before the Levitical priesthood ever emerged rather than "under it." However, the preposition epi can have several other meanings than just "under." For example, the word can also mean "concerning" or "on the basis of." Thus, this verse could also be translated "for the people were given the law concerning it." In other words, God's people in the OT had received directives related to the Levitical priests' ministry through the law.

7:24 Mormonism incorrectly claims Melchizedek's priesthood for its faith. Several high offices of the Mormon church supposedly grow out of the Melchizedekan order. The Mormons' doctrine, however, is false because Heb states clearly that Jesus is the only high priest after the order of Melchizedek (3:1; 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:11,15,17,21,24,26; 8:1; 9:11).

8:9 Some skeptics charge that the writer of Hebrews here misquoted Jr 31:32 because Heb 8:9 reads, "I disregarded them" instead of "I had married them" as in the OT. But the NT writer of Heb simply cited the Septuagint (Gk translation of the OT) instead of the Hebrew Bible, and when he did, it became part of Scripture.

9:4 Some see an inconsistency with this verse because it says that the ark contained the tablets of the covenant, a jar of manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, whereas the OT suggests that the latter two objects were placed in the most holy place in front of the ark (e.g., Ex 16:32-34; Nm 17:10-11). However, the writer of Heb seems to have followed a line of rabbinic tradition that presumes that items were subsequently placed in the ark with the tablets. We should also consider the author's remarks in 9:5: "It is not possible to speak about these things in detail right now." The author apparently did not want to divert his focus from the subject matter at hand (perhaps to spell out the matter). Rather, he wanted to explain the tabernacle and its background in relation to the ministry of the OT priests.

9:27 Some skeptics say that this verse teaches that it is appointed for all people to die and thus that it conflicts with verses such as 1 Th 4:16-17, which refer to living saints being taken directly into heaven, and Heb 11:5, which speaks of Enoch not seeing death. But Heb 9:27 does not say that everyone without exception has experienced and will experience death. This cannot be what the author of Heb meant because Enoch had already been taken up by the time Heb was written. Further, death is indeed the normal way one passes from this life to the next. However, if the Lord wants to take some people out of this earthly life and straight up to heaven, then He is certainly within His prerogative to do so, for He " is in heaven and does whatever He pleases" (Ps 115:3).

10:4,11 Some skeptics charge that, if these verses are true, then much of the OT is false. They need to remember, however, that the OT sacrifices, which prefigured Christ's sacrifice, could "sanctify" and "purify" (9:13,23), but they could never remove sin and its guilt; otherwise, they would not have been repeated. The OT sacrifices were able to make worshipers externally, ceremonially clean, but they could never perpetually and effectively cleanse from sin so as to establish right standing before God. Christ's sacrifice, however, is better—it really does cleanse from sin; it takes away sin and its guilt; it is decisive and does not need to be repeated. Jesus is the perfect sacrifice who appeases God's wrath toward our sin. He atones for our sin, taking it upon Himself so that we might be saved by this wonderful grace of God through faith.

10:5 Some skeptics charge that the writer here misquoted Ps 40:6 (39:6 in the Septuagint Gk translation) because 10:5 reads "body" instead of "ears" as in the OT. But the writer simply cited a version of the Septuagint that differs from the Hebrew Bible. Further, the author of Hebrews used synecdoche (the whole for a part), referring to the entire "body" of Yahweh's servant, with "ears" listening carefully to obey God's command.

10:28-29 Some point out that these verses describe an injustice because they say that those who disobeyed the OT were put to death and that it will be much worse for those who reject Jesus. But there is no injustice here. Under the new covenant, those who reject God's work of grace achieved through His Son face much more serious retribution than mere physical death because they have committed a sin with eternal consequences.

10:37 Christ will return in accordance with God's timetable and perspective and not ours.

11:1 Some people object that this is blind faith. In this verse, however, the writer described faith as a conviction of certainty about what cannot be seen. This kind of faith motivated men and women of faith in the past to live for God and trust Him to fulfill His promises.

11:5 Some see a discrepancy in this verse because Jn 3:13 teaches that no one has ever ascended into heaven. But this assertion neglects the fact that John's Gospel has a different context than does Heb 11:5. John was adamant that no one had ascended to heaven so as to return to explain heavenly things, namely, to reveal God the Father to humanity. But Jesus is able to do so because He came from the Father in heaven (see Jn 1:1,14,18). Hebrews 11:5, on the other hand, says that Enoch was taken out of this world without experiencing death (see Gn 5:21-24); his faith was pleasing to God.

11:13 Some ask, "How can OT persons be saved since they never exercised explicit faith in Christ?" This verse provides the answer. Saints in the OT looked forward to the messianic hope and believed in God's promises, which pointed to the future Messiah, Jesus.

11:17 Some see a contradiction in this verse because they argue it says that Abraham had only one son, Isaac, when it is known from other passages (Gn 16:15; Gl 4:22) that he also had a son named Ishmael. This verse can be explained by remembering that Isaac was the promised son on whom the fulfillment of God's pledge of numerous descendants to Abraham depended (Gn 15:1-6; 22:15-18). Thus, in this sense, Ishmael did not count. This conclusion is further borne out by Heb 11:18: "In Isaac your seed will be called" (see Gn 21:12).

11:26 Some see a discrepancy in this verse and ask where Moses trusted in Christ. But OT saints looked forward to the messianic hope and believed in the promises that pointed to Christ (v. 13). And, because of his belief in the coming Messiah, Moses experienced the same kind of rejection that Christ would undergo later.

11:31-32 Some see a contradiction in verse 31 because it says Rahab was saved by faith, whereas Jms 2:25 says that she was saved by works. However, the word for "save" also means to "vindicate" or "authenticate." Thus, the contextual point in Jms is that Rahab's faith was authenticated by her works—i.e., it was shown to be genuine. These verses address different aspects of salvation and do not contradict each other.

One might wonder why Jephthah is remembered in verse 32 for his acts of faith, given that his vow was rash. One should remember, however, that although Jephthah's vow was foolish, it still showed his faith in, and devotion to, God.

12:6-8 Some people argue that the God of the NT is one of love whereas the God of the OT is one of anger. They have difficulty with the idea that a loving God would punish His children. But these verses teach that God benevolently disciplines His children just like any father who loves his children would do. If any professing child of God does not experience such correction, then he has an unregenerate heart and is not genuinely born of God. Further, Hebrews 12:10 teaches that God disciplines His children for their good, so they may share in His holiness.

13:2 Some people argue that it is absurd to believe "some have welcomed angels as guests." The Bible, however, is replete with examples of people who were visited by angels (Gn 22:15; Jdg 6:22; 2 Kg 1:3; 1 Ch 21:15-16; Zch 3:6; 4:4; Mt 1:24; 2:13; Lk 1:11-20; 1:26-38; 2:8-15; Jn 20:12; Ac 5:19-20; etc.). Belief in angels, whether seen or unseen, is difficult only for those who do not believe in God or the truthfulness of Scripture.

13:4 Some persons wrongly see an inconsistency with this verse, which commends marriage, because elsewhere the apostle Paul commended being single above being married (1 Co 7:1,7-8). Paul, however, nowhere condemned marriage but simply said that being unmarried enables one to devote more undistracted time to the Lord (1 Co 7:32-35).

13:20 Skeptics often object that God cannot be a "God of peace" since the OT portrays Him as a God of war who ordered people to be killed. These characteristics, however, are not incompatible. The Lord loves peace, but He also combats unrighteousness and those who act contrary to His purposes. People can be the same way—peaceful by nature but willing to fight when times call for it.

Introduction to James

AUTHOR

The author identifies himself as "James, a slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ," suggesting that he was a humble and yet well-known leader. Taking into account the four men named James who appear in the NT, it seems most likely that this book was written by James the half-brother of Jesus (Mt 13:55), who was leader of the Jerusalem church (Ac 15:12-21; Gl 1:19). Support for this conclusion is found in the fact that James the father of Judas (Lk 6:16; Ac 1:13) and James the son of Alphaeus (Mk 3:18) were rather obscure and insignificant figures, while James the apostle, brother of John and son of Zebedee (Mk 1:19; 5:37; 9:2; 10:35; Ac 12:2), had been martyred by the time of writing (Ac 12:2).

Roman Catholic scholars who argue for the perpetual virginity of Mary believe that James the Lord's half-brother was either Joseph's son by a previous marriage or Jesus' cousin. This view, however, has no scriptural support. Joseph and Mary no doubt had children, but they did so after the virgin birth of Jesus, and no evidence exists to indicate that Joseph was formerly married. Further, the Greek word adelphos plainly means "brother" and not "cousin."

DATE

James wrote at an early date, likely in the mid-40s. This conclusion is probable because (1) leaders in the church were teachers and elders (3:1; 5:14) rather than bishops and deacons, contrary to later practice; (2) Christians were apparently still meeting in synagogues (2:2); (3) truths found in later NT letters are not mentioned here; (4) the controversy over the necessity of circumcision for believers had apparently not yet taken place.

The place of the letter's origin is unknown. However, assuming that the Lord's half-brother wrote it, he likely did so from Jerusalem.

The designation "To the 12 tribes in the Dispersion" strongly suggests that the recipients were Jewish Christians outside Palestine. These Jewish believers perhaps were scattered outside their homeland due to early persecutions that had arisen in Jerusalem (Ac 8:1-4; 11:19). Further support that the letter's original readers were Jewish Christians is found in the fact that James never brought up issues such as the assimilation of Gentiles into the church. James encouraged his readers to live consistent Christian lives in the midst of persecution for their faith in Christ.

James Study Notes

1:13 Broadly defined, temptation is the enticement to do evil. Satan is the tempter (Mt 4:3; 1 Th 3:5). Beginning with Eve, Satan successfully tempted Adam, Cain, Abraham, and David to sin. He was less successful with Job, and Jesus was "tested in every way as we are, yet without sin" (Heb 4:15). James explained that God cannot be tempted by evil, and He does not tempt anyone. Temptation may be for the purpose of destroying a person through sin leading to death and hell. This is Satan's intent. God may allow testing for the purpose of bringing forth faith and patience, which ultimately honor Him, as in the case of Job. James further explained that a blessing awaits the one who endures temptation (v. 12). The Greek verb, peirazo, means both "tempt" and "test."

2:14-26 Many skeptics argue that a contradiction exists between Paul's statement that "a man is justified by faith apart from works" (Rm 3:28; cp. 4:5-6; Gl 2:16) and the teaching of James that "a man is justified by works and not by faith alone" (Jms 2:24). However, these positions actually complement one other.

First, Paul and James addressed different situations. On the one hand, Paul refuted a Jewish legalism holding that one must observe the law's requirements in order to be saved. On the other hand, James opposed an antinomianism that was twisting faith in Christ so much that no expression of works was necessary.

Second, when Paul used the word "justified," he meant "saved" or "declared righteous," whereas James meant "vindicated" or "authenticated." By "works," Paul meant "works of the law," whereas James meant works that faith produces.

In the light of the above, Paul was saying that one is declared righteous by God apart from the works of the law. James, by contrast, was saying that a person's faith produces works that vindicate his faith in Christ as genuine. James used Abraham's willingness to sacrifice Isaac (vv. 21-23; cp. Gn 22:9) and Rahab's protection of the spies (Jms 2:25; cp. Jos 2) as examples to show that their works authenticated the reality of their faith in God. For James, faith without works was clearly worthless; it must be more than words (Jms 2:14-19,26). Authentic faith will bear the fruit of good works.

4:5 Some worry that James was wrong when he quoted an OT scripture that says, "The Spirit He has caused to live in us yearns jealously," because no such verse exists in the Bible. However, he was not citing an OT verse word for word but rather giving a broad summary of several OT statements. Plenty of passages in the OT describe God as jealous and as One who forbids idolatry (e.g., Ex 34:14; Dt 4:23-26; 6:14-15; Jos 24:19-20).

5:12 Skeptics argue that when James stated, "Above all . . . do not swear," he was saying that taking an oath is the worst sin a believer may commit. However, James was instead instructing his readers not to use oaths flippantly to guarantee the truth of their statements (cp. Mt 5:34-37). James's readers were being persecuted by the wicked rich (5:1-6). Consequently, he urged them to be patient until the Lord returned (vv. 7-8) and provided them with three examples of patience to emulate: the farmer (v. 7), the prophets (v. 10), and Job(v. 11). James admonished his readers not to snipe at and complain about one another while enduring trials (v. 9). These believers, above all, were not to deny their Lord in the face of persecution. When asked whether they were Christians by those who would persecute them, James's readers were not to swear to God, to heaven, or to earth, using oaths to support their claims. Rather, when interrogated about their faith, they were simply and sincerely to say yes or no (v. 12). In this way they would not fall under judgment for their sin.

This understanding acts as a climax to James's statement on endurance in verse 11 and makes good sense of the problematic phrase "above all" that he used initially in verse 12.

1 Peter Articles

How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and Human Freedom?

by William Lane Craig

The biblical worldview involves a strong conception of divine sovereignty over the world and human affairs even as it presupposes human freedom and responsibility (cp. the accounts of Saul's death in 1 Sm 31:1-6 and 1 Ch 10:8-12). An adequate doctrine of divine providence requires reconciling these two streams of biblical teaching without compromising either. Yet this has proven extraordinarily difficult. On the one hand, the Augustinian-Calvinist perspective interprets divine providence in terms of predetermination, God choosing in advance what will happen. It is hard to see how this interpretation can preserve human freedom or avoid making God the author of sin, since (for example) it would then be He who moved Judas to betray Christ. On the other hand, advocates of revisionist views (e.g., open theism) freely admit that as a consequence of their denial of God's knowledge of future contingent events a strong doctrine of providence becomes impossible. Ironically, in order to account for biblical prophecies of future events, revisionists are often reduced to appealing to the same deterministic explanations that Augustinian-Calvinists offer.

Molinism offers an attractive solution. Luis Molina (1535–1600) defined providence as God's ordering of things to their ends, either directly or indirectly through secondary causes. In explaining how God can order things through secondary causes that are themselves free agents, Molina appealed to his doctrine of divine middle knowledge.

Molina analyzed God's knowledge in terms of three logical stages. Although whatever God knows, He knows eternally, so that there is no temporal succession in God's knowledge, nonetheless there does exist a sort of logical order in God's knowledge in the sense that His knowledge of certain truths is conditionally or explanatorily prior to His knowledge of certain other truths.

In the first stage God knows all possibilities, not only all the creatures He could possibly create, but also all the orders of creatures that are possible. By means of this so-called natural knowledge, God has knowledge of every contingent state of affairs that could possibly be actual and of what any free creature could freely choose to do in any such state of affairs.

In the second stage, God possesses knowledge of all true counterfactual propositions (statements of the form "If x were the case, then y would be the case"), including counterfactuals about what creatures would freely do in various circumstances. Whereas by His natural knowledge God knew what any free creature could do in any set of circumstances, now in this second stage God knows what any free creature would freely do in any set of circumstances. This so-called middle knowledge is like natural knowledge in that such knowledge does not depend on any decision of the divine will; God does not determine which counterfactuals are true or false. By knowing how free creatures would freely act in any set of circumstances He might place them in, God thereby knows that if He were to actualize certain states of affairs, then certain other contingent states of affairs would be actual as a result. For example, He knew that if Pontius Pilate were the Roman procurator of Judea in A.D. 30, he would freely condemn Jesus to the cross.

Intervening between the second and third stages of divine knowledge stands God's free decree to actualize a world known by Him to be realizable on the basis of His middle knowledge. By His natural knowledge, God knows the entire range of logically possible worlds; by His middle knowledge He knows, in effect, the proper subset of those worlds that it is feasible for Him to actualize. By a free decision, God decrees to actualize one of those worlds known to Him through His middle knowledge. In so doing He also decrees how He would freely act in any set of circumstances.

Given God's free decision to actualize a world, in the third and final stage God possesses so-called free knowledge of all remaining propositions that are in fact true in the actual world, including future-tense propositions about how creatures will freely behave.

Molina's scheme effects a dramatic reconciliation of divine sovereignty and human freedom. In Molina's view God directly causes certain circumstances to come into being and brings about others indirectly through either causally determined secondary causes or free secondary causes. He allows free creatures to act as He knew they freely would when placed in specific circumstances, and He concurs with their decisions in actualizing the effects they desire. Some of these effects God desired unconditionally and so wills positively that they occur. Others He does not unconditionally desire but He nevertheless permits due to His overriding desire to allow creaturely freedom, knowing that even these sinful acts will fit into the overall scheme of things, so that God's ultimate ends in human history will be accomplished. God thus providentially arranges for everything that happens by either willing or permitting it, and He causes everything that does happen, yet in such a way as to preserve freedom and contingency.

(For another perspective, see the article in Isaiah 45, page 1054.)

What Are the Three Laws of Logic?

by J. P. Moreland

There are three fundamental laws of logic. Suppose P is any indicative sentence, say, "It is raining."

The law of identity: P is P.
The law of noncontradiction: P is not non-P.
The law of the excluded middle: Either P or non-P

The law of identity says that if a statement such as "It is raining" is true, then the statement is true. More generally, it says that the statement P is the same thing as itself and is different from everything else. Applied to all reality, the law of identity says that everything is itself and not something else.

The law of noncontradiction says that a statement such as "It is raining" cannot be both true and false in the same sense. Of course it could be raining in Missouri and not raining in Arizona, but the principle says that it cannot be raining and not raining at the same time in the same place.

The law of the excluded middle says that a statement such as "It is raining" is either true or false. There is no other alternative.

These fundamental laws are true principles governing reality and thought and are assumed by Scripture. Some claim they are arbitrary Western constructions, but this is false. The basic laws of logic govern all reality and thought and are known to be true for at least two reasons: (1) They are intuitively obvious and self-evident. Once one understands a basic law of logic (see below), one can see that it is true. (2) Those who deny them use these principles in their denial, demonstrating that those laws are unavoidable and that it is self-refuting to deny them.

The basic laws of logic are neither arbitrary inventions of God nor principles that exist completely outside God's being. Obviously, the laws of logic are not like the laws of nature. God may violate the latter (say, suspend gravity), but He cannot violate the former. Those laws are rooted in God's own nature. Indeed, some scholars think the passage "In the beginning was the Word [logos]" (Jn 1:1) is accurately translated, "In the beginning was Logic (a divine, rational mind)." For example, even God cannot exist and not exist at the same time, and even God cannot validly believe that red is a color and red is not a color. When people say that God need not behave "logically," they are using the term in a loose sense to mean "the sensible thing from my point of view." Often God does not act in ways that people understand or judge to be what they would do in the circumstances. But God never behaves illogically in the proper sense. He does not violate in His being or thought the fundamental laws of logic.

Introduction to 1 Peter

AUTHOR

First Peter claims to be written by the Apostle Peter (1 Pt 1:1), and there is no good reason to doubt Petrine authorship. The early church fathers also supported Petrine authorship, and there is wide and early evidence to support such a view.

The most debated introductory question for 1–2 Peter and Jude is whether Peter actually wrote 2 Peter. Almost all non-evangelical scholars claim Peter did not write the letter and some who identify themselves as evangelicals agree. Petrine authorship is denied for the following reasons:

(1) Peter used Jude as a source, and the letter of Jude was composed too late to have been used by Peter who died in the 60s. Furthermore, some think that Peter would have never borrowed from a writer like Jude.

(2) The Greek vocabulary and theology in the letter demonstrate that Peter, a Galilean fisherman, could not be the author. The author must be a person familiar with Greek culture. In addition, the style of the letter differs from 1 Peter, demonstrating a different author from the first epistle.

(3) The false teachers in the letter are identified as second-century Gnostics, and obviously Peter could not have written the letter in the second century.

(4) Paul's letters are recognized as Scripture (2 Pt 3:15-16), but Paul's letters could not have been collected together and viewed as Scripture while Peter was alive.

(5) The letter is not quoted by church fathers in the second century, and even in the fourth century its canonicity was under attack.

THE RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 PETER

Despite the above arguments, Petrine authorship is still the most convincing view, and is supported by the following arguments.

(1) As good historians, we begin with what the letter itself says, and we discover that the letter claims to be written by the apostle Peter (2 Pt 1:1) himself. He claims that his death is very near (2 Pt 1:14). Even more striking, he claims to have heard and seen Jesus' transfiguration (2 Pt 1:16-18). The author is obviously open to the charge of deception and lying if he was not the apostle.

(2) It is possible that Jude used Peter as a source instead of vice-versa. It seems more likely, though, that Peter did use Jude. In the first century, footnotes were not appended when using other sources, and Peter may have used some of Jude because he thought its contents applied well to his readers.

(3) The claim that the adversaries were second-century Gnostics is not supported from the text of 2 Peter. Gnostics posited cosmological dualism, rejected the material world, and had a defective Christology. None of these elements is clearly present in 2 Peter.

(4) Second Peter 3:15-16 does not indicate that all of Paul's letters were collected and considered to be canonical. Peter obviously knows some of the Pauline letters and thinks they are authoritative, but that should not be equated with a collected canon of Pauline writings. Those who think that praise of Paul by Peter is impossible are too influenced by the old Tübingen hypothesis advanced by F. C. Baur.

(5) The vocabulary and style of 2 Peter are different from 1 Peter, and he does use Hellenistic terms. But this is not a decisive argument against Petrine authorship. We need to remember that the body of Petrine writings is very small. Therefore, judgments about "Petrine style" should be made with the recognition that we do not have enough writings from Peter to form a solid judgment about his style. Peter may have changed his style to address the situation of his readers, just as Paul did in Athens

(Ac 17:16-34). Also, Peter may have asked a secretary to compose the writing, and this may account for the stylistic differences.

(6) The argument that Peter uses a different theology is not convincing either. We need to recall that the letter addresses a particular situation in the life of the churches, and therefore is not a summary of Peter's theology. There is no solid evidence that pseudonymous letters were accepted as canonical. In fact, they were rejected because they were fraudulent and fundamentally deceptive.

THE RELIABILITY OF JUDE

For Jude, the author is identified in the first verse as "Jude, a slave of Jesus Christ, and a brother of James." The James mentioned is almost certainly James, the brother of the Lord Jesus Christ and the author of the letter from James (cp. Ac 15:13-21; 1 Co 15:7; Gl 2:9). We can conclude from this that Jude was well known by his association with his famous brother who played a significant role in the apostolic church. Hence, Jude was also the half-brother of Jesus Christ (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3). External evidence from the early church also supports the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, wrote the letter.

Some scholars have argued that another Jude wrote the letter. Calvin identified the author as the Apostle "Judas of James" (Lk 6:16; Ac 1:13). But if this were correct, the author would call himself an apostle. Others have speculated that the writer is "Judas Barsabbas" (Ac 15:22,27,32), but there is no evidence that the latter was James's brother. Even more unlikely is the theory that the author was the apostle Thomas. Still others maintain that the letter is pseudonymous, but support for psuedonymity in canonical writings is lacking. To sum up, there are good reasons to accept the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, is the author of the letter.

1 Peter Study Notes

1:3-9 Karl Marx complained that religion was the opiate of the people. Did Peter support the comfortable life of oppressors by pacifying those who are suffering with the idea of a heavenly inheritance in the next world?

In answering this question, we need to recall that Peter himself suffered as a Christian, and the tradition that he died for the faith is likely accurate. What we find in 1 Pt, therefore, are not the words of someone with power telling those who are suffering to endure injustice because heaven awaits. We hear the words of someone who suffered along with those he taught. The early Christians did not have political power but rather were at the mercy of governing authorities if the latter turned against them.

What Peter wrote provides no justification for injustice. We distort Peter's words if we say to those suffering under our authority, "Don't worry about suffering. You will be rewarded in heaven." On the other hand, Marx's objection assumes that the heavenly hope is not real. Millions of Christians throughout history have suffered and have had no prospect of worldly happiness. Peter's words provide genuine comfort to all believers who face oppression, for they remind us that unspeakable joy awaits those who belong to Jesus.

2:13-17 Peter, like Paul in Rm 13:1-7, called upon believers to submit to the government. Do words like these support an evil structure such as the racist apartheid system formerly practiced in South Africa?

We need to recall what we noted above. Peter did not address believers who ran the government but believers who lived under the governing authorities. The few short verses here do not constitute a full-scale treatise on the Christian and government. Surely, Peter would have included other admonitions about the need for justice if he had directed his words to political leaders.

Neither should we conclude from these verses that governing authorities are to be obeyed without exception. Peter gave the general principle here, namely that believers should submit to the laws of the land and to the authorities enforcing those laws. But we know from the rest of the Scriptures that exceptions exist. Daniel refused to obey the law prohibiting prayer to Yahweh (Dn 6). The apostles rejected the words of those who tried to prevent them from preaching the gospel (Ac 5:29). Peter did not simplistically endorse whatever the government prescribes.

2:18-25 People today often ask why NT writers did not criticize the institution of slavery or advocate its overthrow. But we must recall the social situation of the young churches in the Roman Empire. They lacked political power and could do nothing to dismantle the institution. In addition, NT writers were not social revolutionaries (see 1 Co 7:17-24). They did not believe that overhauling social structures would transform culture. Their primary concern was the relationship of individuals to God, and they focused on the sin and rebellion of individuals against their Creator. New Testament writers, therefore, did not complain about the oppression imposed by others but concentrated instead on the godly response of believers to mistreatment.

If enough individuals are transformed, of course, society as a whole benefits and the Christian faith begins to function as a leavening influence. We are keenly aware from history that Christians have too often failed to live righteously, and yet we may also fail to see that the Christian faith has been a force for good in Western civilization. History demonstrates the impact of Christian faith upon social structures. One of the consequences, under Christian influence, was the eradication of slavery. Christians, of course, have inflicted evil on others throughout the centuries as well. As sinners, we have left a legacy that is disappointing. A realistic appraisal of history, however, includes both the evil and the good that Christians have accomplished.

It is crucial to note that the NT nowhere commends slavery as a social structure. It nowhere roots it in the created order, as if slavery were an institution ordained by God. The contrast with marriage is remarkable at this point. God ordained the institution of marriage, but slavery was invented by human beings. The NT regulated the institution of slavery as it existed in society, but it did not commend it per se. Hence, Peter's words on slavery should not be interpreted as an endorsement for the system, even if he did not denounce the institution.

3:1-6 Did Peter commend unrighteousness in enjoining wives to submit to their husbands? It may sound that way to modern ears, but submission to another does not signal inequality. The Scriptures clearly teach that women and men are both made in the image of God (Gn 1:26-27); they have equal access to salvation (Gl 3:28); and they share an equal destiny in heaven (1 Pt 3:7). Having a different role from men does not mean that women are inferior to men. Christ, after all, submitted to the Father (1 Co 15:28), but He is equal to the Father in dignity, worth, and essence. Similarly, the submission of wives to husbands does not suggest that they are second rate.

Isn’t That Just Your Interpretation?

by Paul Copan

Few things are more frustrating than carefully presenting reasons for the meaning of a text—biblical or otherwise—only to be casually dismissed with “That’s just your interpretation!” Whether Scripture, history, literature, or politics is under scrutiny, we witness people reducing meaning to personal interpretation or perspective. Who hasn’t heard the Friedrich Nietzche’s line, “There are no facts—only interpretations”?

But isn’t that statement presumed by the speaker to be a fact, not an interpretation? Many claim that conclusions about abortion are just matters of “interpretation” or “perspective,” but they give the impression that if you disagree with them, you’re wrong. To deny objectivity is to assume something is objectively true for all people: “Everything is a matter of interpretation, whether or not you agree with my statement.” We have only two alternatives: triviality (“It’s all perspective, including mine”—so why believe it?) or incoherence (“Everything’s a matter of perspective, except mine”—making a person an exception to his own rule).

Most people appeal to “interpretation” because they don’t like another alternative. “Interpretation” is often a smokescreen for pursuing one’s own agenda or autonomy. To better discern whether this is so, we can ask, “Do you mean that you don’t like my interpretation or that you have good reasons for disagreeing with it?” Other questions worth asking are these: “Can a perspective ever be correct?” “Are some things not a matter of perspective (such as a flat earth versus a round earth)?” “How can you know that your interpretation and my interpretation are actually different?”

Even if we don’t always get things right, we can discern that some perspectives better approximate the truth than others. We generally trust the Wall Street Journal over tabloids, even though good newspapers may be wrong at points. The fact that we can recognize that some interpretations are more plausible than others (and thus are more likely true) indicates that not everything is a matter of interpretation. Therefore, we must be willing to give reasons for the most plausible position. After all, if everything is perspective, how can we distinguish between reasonable and wacky ideas?

Despite our limitations, we still cannot escape objectivity. To deny its possibility is to affirm its actuality. Even the “perspectivist” believes that those disagreeing with him are objectively wrong.

Introduction to 2 Peter

AUTHOR

First Peter claims to be written by the Apostle Peter (1 Pt 1:1), and there is no good reason to doubt Petrine authorship. The early church fathers also supported Petrine authorship, and there is wide and early evidence to support such a view.

The most debated introductory question for 1–2 Peter and Jude is whether Peter actually wrote 2 Peter. Almost all non-evangelical scholars claim Peter did not write the letter and some who identify themselves as evangelicals agree. Petrine authorship is denied for the following reasons:

(1) Peter used Jude as a source, and the letter of Jude was composed too late to have been used by Peter who died in the 60s. Furthermore, some think that Peter would have never borrowed from a writer like Jude.

(2) The Greek vocabulary and theology in the letter demonstrate that Peter, a Galilean fisherman, could not be the author. The author must be a person familiar with Greek culture. In addition, the style of the letter differs from 1 Peter, demonstrating a different author from the first epistle.

(3) The false teachers in the letter are identified as second-century Gnostics, and obviously Peter could not have written the letter in the second century.

(4) Paul's letters are recognized as Scripture (2 Pt 3:15-16), but Paul's letters could not have been collected together and viewed as Scripture while Peter was alive.

(5) The letter is not quoted by church fathers in the second century, and even in the fourth century its canonicity was under attack.

THE RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 PETER

Despite the above arguments, Petrine authorship is still the most convincing view, and is supported by the following arguments.

(1) As good historians, we begin with what the letter itself says, and we discover that the letter claims to be written by the apostle Peter (2 Pt 1:1) himself. He claims that his death is very near (2 Pt 1:14). Even more striking, he claims to have heard and seen Jesus' transfiguration (2 Pt 1:16-18). The author is obviously open to the charge of deception and lying if he was not the apostle.

(2) It is possible that Jude used Peter as a source instead of vice-versa. It seems more likely, though, that Peter did use Jude. In the first century, footnotes were not appended when using other sources, and Peter may have used some of Jude because he thought its contents applied well to his readers.

(3) The claim that the adversaries were second-century Gnostics is not supported from the text of 2 Peter. Gnostics posited cosmological dualism, rejected the material world, and had a defective Christology. None of these elements is clearly present in 2 Peter.

(4) Second Peter 3:15-16 does not indicate that all of Paul's letters were collected and considered to be canonical. Peter obviously knows some of the Pauline letters and thinks they are authoritative, but that should not be equated with a collected canon of Pauline writings. Those who think that praise of Paul by Peter is impossible are too influenced by the old Tübingen hypothesis advanced by F. C. Baur.

(5) The vocabulary and style of 2 Peter are different from 1 Peter, and he does use Hellenistic terms. But this is not a decisive argument against Petrine authorship. We need to remember that the body of Petrine writings is very small. Therefore, judgments about "Petrine style" should be made with the recognition that we do not have enough writings from Peter to form a solid judgment about his style. Peter may have changed his style to address the situation of his readers, just as Paul did in Athens

(Ac 17:16-34). Also, Peter may have asked a secretary to compose the writing, and this may account for the stylistic differences.

(6) The argument that Peter uses a different theology is not convincing either. We need to recall that the letter addresses a particular situation in the life of the churches, and therefore is not a summary of Peter's theology. There is no solid evidence that pseudonymous letters were accepted as canonical. In fact, they were rejected because they were fraudulent and fundamentally deceptive.

THE RELIABILITY OF JUDE

For Jude, the author is identified in the first verse as "Jude, a slave of Jesus Christ, and a brother of James." The James mentioned is almost certainly James, the brother of the Lord Jesus Christ and the author of the letter from James (cp. Ac 15:13-21; 1 Co 15:7; Gl 2:9). We can conclude from this that Jude was well known by his association with his famous brother who played a significant role in the apostolic church. Hence, Jude was also the half-brother of Jesus Christ (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3). External evidence from the early church also supports the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, wrote the letter.

Some scholars have argued that another Jude wrote the letter. Calvin identified the author as the Apostle "Judas of James" (Lk 6:16; Ac 1:13). But if this were correct, the author would call himself an apostle. Others have speculated that the writer is "Judas Barsabbas" (Ac 15:22,27,32), but there is no evidence that the latter was James's brother. Even more unlikely is the theory that the author was the apostle Thomas. Still others maintain that the letter is pseudonymous, but support for psuedonymity in canonical writings is lacking. To sum up, there are good reasons to accept the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, is the author of the letter.

2 Peter Study Notes

1:21 Peter claimed that prophets were carried by the Spirit when speaking God's oracles. Some might think this suggests a dictation theory of inspiration. Such a claim can be easily rejected, however, for the verse in 2 Pt does not constitute a complete explanation of inspiration. Further, the verse also emphasizes that men spoke from God. Their own personalities were not suppressed in the process. They spoke with all their distinctiveness as human beings and yet also uttered God's words. B. B. Warfield rightly identified what occurred as concursus. Both God and human beings were fully involved in the communication of God's Word, and the product is perfect because of God's inspiring work.

3:3-10 One of the earliest apologetic problems in the early church was the issue of Christ's second coming. The apparent delay caused some to question whether He would ever return. Apparently, Peter's opponents asserted that the world would go on as it always had, with no interventions from God. Peter effectively punctured their objections. He reminded them that the world is not eternal. God acted decisively at creation by bringing the world into existence. Moreover, the cataclysm of the flood demonstrates that God does not sit idly by while history progresses. We now await, said Peter, the future destruction of the universe by fire. Finally, the apparent delay is not a postponement from God's perspective since He does not reckon time as we do. A thousand years are like one day to Him, and in any case, the interval before Christ's coming gives people opportunity to repent.

1 John Articles

Notable Christian Apologist: Irenaeus

by Ted Cabal

Irenaeus (c. A.D. 130–200) was born of Greek parents in Asia (modern-day Turkey). In his youth he learned under Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, who had been a disciple of the Apostle John. As a teenager Irenaeus served as a missionary to Gaul (France), where he later filled the office of bishop. Some later Christian authorities indicate that he was martyred during the reign of Septimius Severus.

Irenaeus was the most important defender of essential Christian doctrine in the second century. He was especially effective in combating the heresy of Gnosticism, a cult that stressed secret knowledge (gnosis) as the way to salvation. Irenaeus contended with the gnostic leader Marcion, who taught that the OT and NT reveal two different gods. The god of the OT was the creator of matter, which, according to gnostic teaching, was evil. Thus, according to Marcion, the OT was useless. The NT God, as the God of love, was unknown before the coming of Jesus Christ. Irenaeus powerfully refuted Marcion by demonstrating the interrelationship of the Testaments. He detailed how the OT accurately predicted the coming of Christ. Moreover, Irenaeus stressed the literal resurrection of Jesus. The Redeemer's physical body is not only not evil but in fact was raised from the dead for our salvation—precisely as the OT prophets had predicted.

Can a Christian Have Assurance of Salvation?

by Chad Owen Brand

Scripture teaches that Christians are saved by God's grace, which we access by placing our faith in Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of our sins (Rm 3:21-26; Eph 2:8-9). It also teaches that we can persevere in that faith since we are "protected by God's power through faith for a salvation that is ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Pt 1:5). But can we know with assurance that we truly do belong to the Lord and in the end will be resurrected to eternal life? The answer is yes.

The NT writers were convinced that assurance is available to believers. Paul wrote in Romans 8:1, "No condemnation now exists for those in Christ Jesus," and then concluded that chapter's remarkable discussion with this statement in verses 38-39: "I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels nor rulers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other created thing will have the power to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord!" John was also convinced that believers can have assurance. He wrote, "This is how we are sure that we have come to know Him: by keeping His commands" (1 Jn 2:3). And again: "We know that we have passed from death to life because we love our brothers. The one who does not love remains in death" (1 Jn 3:14).

How can we receive this assurance? Just as medical technicians test vital signs to look for indicators of health, so there are several "vital sign indicators" in Scripture for spiritual health.

1. The Bible says we are to examine ourselves to see whether we are in the faith (1 Co 9:24-27; 2 Co 13:5). There is nothing wrong, and everything right, with a Christian stopping from time to time and asking the question "Am I doing okay, spiritually?" We are not looking for perfection at such times, just signs that God is making a difference.

2. Are we walking in obedience to God? Those who love Him obey Him (1 Jn 2:3). This is an objective test. Again, we are not looking for perfection, since becoming like Christ is a process that lasts a lifetime (Rm 8:29-30; 1 Jn 3:2). The question is, is obedience to Him what I want more than anything else?

3. Do we have a sense that we truly belong to the Lord and He to us? Scripture teaches that if we are Christians, we have the indwelling Holy Spirit (Rm 8:9), a Spirit who "testifies together with our spirit that we are God's children" (Rm 8:16). It is this same Spirit who enables us to cry out, "Abba, Father," to our Father in heaven (Rm 8:15; Gl 4:6).

Scripture gives both objective and subjective vital signs. When it comes down to it, as John Calvin once noted, assurance comes with faith. If we are trusting Jesus alone for salvation, that brings assurance with it.

Is Christian Science Compatible with the Bible?

by Robert B. Stewart

Christian Science (Church of Christ, Scientist) is a religion based primarily upon the New Thought metaphysical theories of Christian Science founder Mary Baker Eddy (1821–1910). It is a rebirth of the ancient gnostic heresy that matter, including disease, is illusory. Still, to the casual observer, it often sounds biblical because of Christian Science's propensity to use (while redefining) Christian terms. For instance, Eddy says in Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures that "the Bible has been my only authority" (126:29-30), that "Divine Science derives its sanction from the Bible" (146:23), and also that the Bible is the "inspired Word" and "our sufficient guide to eternal Life" (497:3-4). Nevertheless, Christian Science rejects the Bible's plain sense in favor of the spiritual interpretations recorded in Mrs. Eddy's writings, Science and Health, Miscellaneous Writings, and Manual of the Mother Church. This becomes clear when she states, "The material record of the Bible . . . is no more important to our well being than the history of Europe and America" (Miscellaneous Writings, 170).

A brief perusal of Science and Health reveals many contradictions between Christian Science and the Bible. Mrs. Eddy's religion not only reinterprets biblical names (Adam becomes "belief in original sin" [579:8-9], while Abraham refers to "faith in the divine Life and in the eternal Principle of being" [579:10-11]) but also denies key doctrines. It replaces the biblical concept of a triune personal God with a triple principle of "Life, Truth, and Love" (331:26-27). It denies sin: "Man is deathless, spiritual. He is above sin or frailty" (266:29-30). It rejects Christ's sufficient atonement: "The material blood of Jesus was no more efficacious to cleanse from sin when it was shed upon 'the accursed tree,' than when it was flowing in his veins as he went daily about his Father's business" (25:6-9). It even denies Jesus' deity, as it distinguishes between the Christ, "the divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (583:10-11), and the historical person of Jesus.

By redefining biblical terms, Christian Science denies virtually every cardinal doctrine of Christianity. In no meaningful way can Christian Science be considered compatible with the Bible.

Introduction to 1 John

AUTHOR

First John is anonymous, though the early church consistently ascribed it (as well as 2 and 3 Jn) to the Apostle John. The early church never suggested anyone else as its author. Evidence of John's authorship is strong and consistent, with these as some of the key facts to remember: (1) The author claimed to be an eyewitness of Jesus (1:1-3). (2) First John displays numerous similarities with the Gospel of John in terms of theology, vocabulary, and syntax. (3) Early church leaders Papias, Polycarp, Irenaeus, and Clement of Alexandria all affirmed John the apostle as the author.

In both 2 and 3 John, the author identified himself as "the Elder," and tradition affirms this to be John the apostle, the same person who wrote the first letter of John. Indeed, the obvious similarities in vocabulary, theme, and language have led most modern scholars to argue for common authorship of these three letters, even if they reject the Apostle John as that author. However, the writing style in the two smaller letters is so similar to that of 1 John and the Gospel of John as to assure common authorship.

THEMES OF 1 JOHN

First John was written to a group of churches in crisis—churches being attacked by false teaching (cp. 2:18-28; 4:1-6; 5:6-7). Some individuals once associated with the Christian community had adopted heretical doctrine, particularly as it related to beliefs about Christ, and had left the church (2:19). In response John wrote his first letter with two primary objectives. First, he wrote to combat the propaganda of the false teachers. Second, he wrote to reassure believers.

Doctrinally, the false teachers compromised the person and work of Jesus Christ, refusing to confess Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ (2:22) and denying that the Son had come in the flesh (4:2-3). Most likely these false teachers were influenced by early gnostic ideas. Although Gnosticism took many forms, it usually emphasized the essential goodness of spirit and the inherent evil or inferiority of matter. Influenced by this type of understanding, these false teachers may have viewed Christ as some type of spirit or phantom. Combined with this faulty view of the person of Christ was a deficient view of His death. First John contains specific statements that emphasize the atoning results of Christ's death (2:2; 4:10).

Morally, the false teachers minimized the seriousness of sin (1:6-10). They claimed that it was possible to have fellowship with God regardless of one's behavior (1:6). In contrast, John insists that one's relationship to God has serious ethical implications (cp. 2:3-4).

Socially, these heretics failed because their spiritual pride resulted in a lack of love (2:9,11). John argues that love for other believers is a manifestation of genuine Christianity (3:14; 4:7-21).

Turning to his objective of reassuring believers, John reminds his churches of the truthfulness of Christianity that they had received in the beginning. He wants them to know that they have eternal life (5:13). He provides his readers with tests by which they can reassure themselves that they are in the truth (1 Jn 1:5–2:2; 2:3-11; 3:7-10,14-15; 4:4-6-8,13-15; 5:13,18-20).

John addresses assurance with both an objective and a subjective apologetic. Objectively, believers know the historicity and reality of Jesus Christ's life and work. The events of His life were observed by eyewitnesses and passed on (1:1-3). Similarly, those who have trusted God's Son possess eternal life (5:12). Subjectively, Christians know that their lives have been transformed through faith in Christ (5:13).

THEMES OF 2 JOHN

Second John is the second shortest book in the NT. It is only 245 words in the Greek text, and it would easily fit on a single piece of papyrus. Today we might call it (and 3 Jn) a "postcard epistle." It is an excellent example of hortatory (or exhortation) discourse. The "elect lady," most likely a reference to a local church, must continue to walk in the truth, love one another, and be on guard against false teachers (the deceiver and the antichrist of v. 7). They must not extend hospitality to those who deny "the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh" (v. 7).

John builds this epistle around key words that tie the letter together. He utilizes a very rare word, "antichrist," which appears in Scripture only in 1 and 2 John (1 Jn 2:18,22; 4:3; 2 Jn 7), as a term describing false teachers.

John tells his children to (1) walk in the truth, (2) obey the commandments,
(3) love one another, and (4) guard the teachings of Christ and they will not be deceived by the antichrist. The spiritual safety of the believing community is confidently affirmed, as John begins and ends his letter with a reference to their chosen position (vv. 1,13).

THEMES OF 3 JOHN

Third John is the shortest book in both the NT and the Bible. It is only 219 words in the Greek text. It and 2 John are rightly described as "twin epistles," though they are rightly viewed as fraternal and not identical.

Third John is a personal letter that revolves around three individuals: Gaius (the recipient), Diotrephes (the troubler), and Demetrius (probably the bearer of the letter). It contains a word of exhortation to Gaius encouraging him not to imitate the bad example of Diotrephes but to continue the good work he is doing of receiving and supporting the traveling teachers/missionaries.

The elder is understandably concerned that his authority is being challenged. He fears the power play of Diotrephes may succeed and that others might be influenced by him. He will come if necessary for a face-to-face meeting where he will personally deal with the situation. In the meantime, John seeks to enlist the support of Gaius. He praises him for his past performance and encourages him to keep it up. Demetrius comes to Gaius both as the bearer of the letter and as a reinforcement in the crisis. Third John provides insight into a personality conflict that arose at the end of the first century and the strategy adopted by the elder to resolve it.

1 John Study Notes

1:1-3 John affirmed both Jesus' humanity and His deity. His defense is empirical. John was an eyewitness of Jesus of Nazareth. He had heard, seen, and touched Him. This latter idea of touching may seem somewhat strange, but not when it is considered against the backdrop of the heresy about Jesus that John was countering. Doceticism (from the Greek word dokein, meaning "to appear") denied the incarnation of the Son of God. John countered this with an apologetic rooted in the fact that he had carefully observed the life and ministry of Jesus.

1:5 John claimed his teaching came from Jesus Himself. The message affirms that the God who is morally pure and holy has revealed Himself to humanity. It is possible to know the true God (5:20).

1:6–2:17 John here addressed what could be called a lifestyle apologetic. He recognized that the credibility of the message cannot be separated from the lives of those who proclaim that message. This lifestyle includes walking in the light (1:7), confessing sin (1:9), growing in holiness (2:1), keeping God's commandments (2:3-6), loving one another (2:7-11), and hating the things of the world and the flesh, or sinful nature (2:15-17).

2:1-2 Jesus Christ is both our advocate and our atonement. The word "propitiation" is the Greek work hilasmos, and it occurs only here and in 4:10, but a related Greek term occurs in Rm 3:25 and Heb 2:17. Some interpreters prefer the term "expiation" (meaning "remove"), rejecting any idea of God's wrath against sinful persons as pagan and unbecoming of the Christian God of love. However, it must be pointed out that (1) propitiation (or satisfaction) is the most basic meaning of the word and (2) it is God who propitiates Himself. God's justice demands satisfaction. God's love provided that satisfaction.

2:8 This world or age of darkness is already passing away (v. 17), having been dealt a deathblow by the death and resurrection of Jesus. Those who live in the realm of light (1) love others (v. 10), (2) know forgiveness (v. 12), and (3) have overcome Satan (vv. 13-14).

2:18 The "last hour" is an eschatological term referring to the time that began when the Son of God entered this world. The end of this hour will commence with the coming of the Antichrist (v. 22; 4:3; 2 Jn 7). In the meantime "many antichrists" are seeking to subvert the message of Christ.

2:20 John used "anointing" to refer to the work of the Holy Spirit in conversion.

2:22-23 Those who do the work of antichrists are always wrong in their Christology. They will deny the reality of the incarnation and Jesus as the God-man, and they will attack His work of atonement on the cross. The exclusive nature of salvation in Jesus could not be more clear (see Jn 14:6; Ac 4:12; 1 Tm 2:5).

3:1-3 The Christian hope is rooted in the resurrection. Christianity is not a dualism, viewing the spirit as good and the body as evil. We will be raised with Christ and will be granted a resurrected, glorified body just like His (see 1 Co 15).

3:8 John, like Jesus, believed in the reality of the devil.

4:1-6 John saw a war raging in the unseen world between the Spirit of God and the spirit of Antichrist.

5:1-5 Real Christianity is evidenced by (1) right belief (vv. 1,5), (2) obedience to God (vv. 2-3), and (3) love (vv. 1-3).

5:13 John began this final section by restating his purpose statement. He wrote 1 Jn to Christians. He wanted them to have assurance that they possessed eternal life.

5:21 With this warning against idolatry, the author could have been warning his audience against deception by the false teachers (2:26; 3:7; 2 Jn 7). Since these heretics had adopted an inadequate view of Jesus Christ, they had in essence replaced orthodox Christianity with a form of idolatry. Thus John concluded this letter with encouragement for believers (5:18-20) and a warning against heresy (v. 21).

2 John Articles

What Are Common Characteristics of the New Religious Movements?

by Leonard G. Goss

New religions" or "alternative religions" are breakaways from larger, more traditional religions. They break down into self-improvement groups, Eastern religions or thought systems, unification groups, and Christian deviation sects. Many of these new religions had Christian roots, but have departed from historic biblical Christianity and discarded one or more of Christianity's basic beliefs. What they have left behind is something that decidedly is not Christianity. Jesus said, "Beware of false prophets who come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly are ravaging wolves" (Mt 7:15).

Viewed through the lens of biblical teaching, each new religion abandons orthodox Christian tenets at one point or another (and usually at many different points). Latter-day Saints (Mormons), for example, have parted company with the Christian tradition in multiple ways, but perhaps the most dramatic is their teaching that the church founded by Jesus and the apostles was destroyed from human history by the time of Constantine. Hence, the LDS church was founded to once again represent the exclusive truth and to rescue the Christian religion from total apostasy. The Unification Church (Moonies) also departs from biblical teaching and undermines Christian thinking in dozens of different ways, most notably in claiming their founder is God's messiah and messenger who will fulfill the work of Jesus. This is a serious heresy found in many of the new religions, and the Apostle Paul warned about following after "another Jesus" who is not the same Jesus revealed in Scripture (2 Co 11:4). Other examples are The Way International, a group where the leader's interpretation of the Bible is considered the only valid interpretation and is in fact the Word. The Children of God, sometimes called the Family of Love, believes all mainline Christian churches are as anti-Christian as organizations that do not profess Christianity. The basic belief of this sect is that its members are the only true Christians and obedient servants left on earth. Many other new religious groups could be mentioned, but one last example would be Eckankar, one of the mystical new religions, which teaches out-of-the-body travels (bilocation) and replaces Jesus Christ with the group's founder as the incarnation of God on earth and teaches that only through their group can an individual find ultimate truth.

This small sampling of new religions shows how very different these movements can be, and therefore it is not easy to suggest that each new religion looks the same or possesses the same theological, sociological, psychological, and moral characteristics. Although each new religious belief system deviates drastically and in individual ways from conventional, historic Christianity, still there are some common characteristics to look for in the new movements. Here is a list of warning signs and danger zones, along with some representative groups displaying these characteristics noted in parentheses:

(1) The group is almost always outside the mainstream of dominant religious forms and culture and displays an oppositional style and substance, meaning it is elitist and exclusionist. (Church of Scientology, Global Family, Unification Church, The Walk/Church of the Living Word, The Way International)

(2) Often there is a "new authority" or new revelation besides the Bible from which adherents to the group must find ultimate truths. (Christian Science, International Community of Christ/the Jamilians, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, Unification Church)

(3) On the other hand, some groups do not claim to have a new, extra-biblical revelation; instead, a group may claim "all we use is the Bible." But the Bible is reinterpreted to justify and defend false teachings. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Children of God/Family of Love)

(4) The group is comprised of lay people; there are no paid clergy or professional religious functionaries. (Fundamentalist Army, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism)

(5) The group is focused around a central figure who is a prophet-founder "chosen" by God to deliver a special message to the modern world that is not found in the Bible, has not been known to genuine Christians throughout all church history, or to recover the teaching of the ancient church that has been lost through the centuries. (Christian Science, The Farm, Jehovah's Witnesses, Scientology, Unification Church)

(6) This leader is usually a charismatic figure, and often the style of his or her leadership is authoritarian. (Children of God/Family of Love, Church of the Living Word, Yahwism)

(7) Often the group teaches that the Bible foretold the coming of its particular group or leader. (Branch Davidians, Children of God/Family of Love, The Farm, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, Unification Church, The Walk/Church of the Living Word)

(8) The group thinks of its belief system as the last bastion of God's work on earth. The adherents are God's "final and last group" and they play a central role in the last things. The truth of all things spiritual is exclusive with them and the world is doomed without them. (Jehovah's Witnesses, University Bible Fellowship)

(9) The group believes its adherents are being persecuted. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Healthy Happy Holy Organization, the Truth Station, Unification Church)

(10) The group might engage in some form of predatory and destructive recruitment of new members with vigor, zeal, and high pressure, often deceiving recruits or not revealing their whole theology. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Unification Church, the Way International)

(11) The group sanctions wayward and rebellious members. (Church of Armageddon, Divine Light Mission, Jehovah's Witnesses, People's Temple)

(12) The group believes that God is a force or power, not a person who relates to the creation. (Christian Science, Unity School of Christianity)

(13) The group is fixated on eschatology (end times) and is usually apocalyptic in its teaching. (Branch Davidians, Children of God/Family of Love, Jehovah's Witnesses, People's Temple)

(14) The lifestyle of the group's members is highly legalistic. (Alamo Christian Foundation, the Christ Family, Church of Armageddon, Maranatha Christian Church)

(15) Sometimes the group has a notion that a communal organization is necessary to fulfill the human calling. Therefore, there is usually a tightly maintained autocratic organization which governs both spiritual and everyday life. Some dictate modes of dress, length of hair, the type of personal adornment that is permitted, and sometimes even marriage partners. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Forever Family/Church of Bible Understanding, Church Universal and Triumphant, Forever Family/Church of Bible Understanding, The Walk)

(16) The group engages in strange rituals and mindless chanting. (Church Universal and Triumphant, Penitentes/Brothers of Our Father Jesus)

(17) The group emphasizes secondary issues and minor points of theology. (Christian Science, Jehovah's Witnesses)

(18) The group members are very often taught that they can have direct revelations and visions from God. (Mormonism, Swedenborgianism, Unification Church)

(19) The group claims that it is compatible or in harmony with the Bible and traditional Christianity, but in fact it reduces and discounts the Bible or otherwise adds to the revelation of Scripture. (Christian Science, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, People's Temple, Unification Church)

(20) The group has usurped traditional Christian vocabulary, but has redefined and reinterpreted terms and concepts from the Bible—making its words do "double-duty" in order to defend aberrant doctrines. Their language is pliable and has no fixed meaning. (Christian Science, Mormonism, Unity School of Christianity)

(21) The group denies at least one central truth of Christianity—such as the work of Christ on the cross, the authority of the Scriptures, salvation by grace through faith, the bodily resurrection, the doctrine of eternal punishment, etc. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Branch Davidians, International Community of Christ/the Jamilians, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, Swedenborgianism—the Church of the New Jerusalem, Unification Church, Unitarian Universalists)

(22) The group denies both the doctrine of the Trinity and the Incarnation. (Anthroposophical Society, Children of God/Family of Love, Christian Science, Eckankar, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, United Pentecostal Church, The Way)

(23) The group recognizes Jesus as a great teacher and leader, an avatar, a wise man, even as the most important of God's created beings—but does not believe that Jesus is both fully human and fully divine. (Unification Church, The United Pentecostal Church, The Way International)

(24) The group teaches a "salvation through works" system whereby members must ultimately save themselves. (Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism)

(25) The group emphasizes experience over basic Christian doctrine. (Alamo Christian Foundation, Children of God/Family of Love, Divine Light Mission, est, Lifespring, Mormonism, Urantia, The Walk/Church of the Living Word)

(26) The group is mystical and individualistically oriented. (Church Universal and Triumphant, Foundation of Human Understanding, New Testament Missionary Fellowship)

(27) The group dabbles in the occult and spiritism. (Anthroposophical Society, Children of God/Family of Love, Mormonism, Unification Church, The Walk)

Christians must recognize that our spiritual enemy is not the new religion but, rather, Satan (2 Co 11:12-15).

Introduction to 2 John

AUTHOR

First John is anonymous, though the early church consistently ascribed it (as well as 2 and 3 Jn) to the Apostle John. The early church never suggested anyone else as its author. Evidence of John's authorship is strong and consistent, with these as some of the key facts to remember: (1) The author claimed to be an eyewitness of Jesus (1:1-3). (2) First John displays numerous similarities with the Gospel of John in terms of theology, vocabulary, and syntax. (3) Early church leaders Papias, Polycarp, Irenaeus, and Clement of Alexandria all affirmed John the apostle as the author.

In both 2 and 3 John, the author identified himself as "the Elder," and tradition affirms this to be John the apostle, the same person who wrote the first letter of John. Indeed, the obvious similarities in vocabulary, theme, and language have led most modern scholars to argue for common authorship of these three letters, even if they reject the Apostle John as that author. However, the writing style in the two smaller letters is so similar to that of 1 John and the Gospel of John as to assure common authorship.

THEMES OF 1 JOHN

First John was written to a group of churches in crisis—churches being attacked by false teaching (cp. 2:18-28; 4:1-6; 5:6-7). Some individuals once associated with the Christian community had adopted heretical doctrine, particularly as it related to beliefs about Christ, and had left the church (2:19). In response John wrote his first letter with two primary objectives. First, he wrote to combat the propaganda of the false teachers. Second, he wrote to reassure believers.

Doctrinally, the false teachers compromised the person and work of Jesus Christ, refusing to confess Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ (2:22) and denying that the Son had come in the flesh (4:2-3). Most likely these false teachers were influenced by early gnostic ideas. Although Gnosticism took many forms, it usually emphasized the essential goodness of spirit and the inherent evil or inferiority of matter. Influenced by this type of understanding, these false teachers may have viewed Christ as some type of spirit or phantom. Combined with this faulty view of the person of Christ was a deficient view of His death. First John contains specific statements that emphasize the atoning results of Christ's death (2:2; 4:10).

Morally, the false teachers minimized the seriousness of sin (1:6-10). They claimed that it was possible to have fellowship with God regardless of one's behavior (1:6). In contrast, John insists that one's relationship to God has serious ethical implications (cp. 2:3-4).

Socially, these heretics failed because their spiritual pride resulted in a lack of love (2:9,11). John argues that love for other believers is a manifestation of genuine Christianity (3:14; 4:7-21).

Turning to his objective of reassuring believers, John reminds his churches of the truthfulness of Christianity that they had received in the beginning. He wants them to know that they have eternal life (5:13). He provides his readers with tests by which they can reassure themselves that they are in the truth (1 Jn 1:5–2:2; 2:3-11; 3:7-10,14-15; 4:4-6-8,13-15; 5:13,18-20).

John addresses assurance with both an objective and a subjective apologetic. Objectively, believers know the historicity and reality of Jesus Christ's life and work. The events of His life were observed by eyewitnesses and passed on (1:1-3). Similarly, those who have trusted God's Son possess eternal life (5:12). Subjectively, Christians know that their lives have been transformed through faith in Christ (5:13).

THEMES OF 2 JOHN

Second John is the second shortest book in the NT. It is only 245 words in the Greek text, and it would easily fit on a single piece of papyrus. Today we might call it (and 3 Jn) a "postcard epistle." It is an excellent example of hortatory (or exhortation) discourse. The "elect lady," most likely a reference to a local church, must continue to walk in the truth, love one another, and be on guard against false teachers (the deceiver and the antichrist of v. 7). They must not extend hospitality to those who deny "the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh" (v. 7).

John builds this epistle around key words that tie the letter together. He utilizes a very rare word, "antichrist," which appears in Scripture only in 1 and 2 John (1 Jn 2:18,22; 4:3; 2 Jn 7), as a term describing false teachers.

John tells his children to (1) walk in the truth, (2) obey the commandments,
(3) love one another, and (4) guard the teachings of Christ and they will not be deceived by the antichrist. The spiritual safety of the believing community is confidently affirmed, as John begins and ends his letter with a reference to their chosen position (vv. 1,13).

THEMES OF 3 JOHN

Third John is the shortest book in both the NT and the Bible. It is only 219 words in the Greek text. It and 2 John are rightly described as "twin epistles," though they are rightly viewed as fraternal and not identical.

Third John is a personal letter that revolves around three individuals: Gaius (the recipient), Diotrephes (the troubler), and Demetrius (probably the bearer of the letter). It contains a word of exhortation to Gaius encouraging him not to imitate the bad example of Diotrephes but to continue the good work he is doing of receiving and supporting the traveling teachers/missionaries.

The elder is understandably concerned that his authority is being challenged. He fears the power play of Diotrephes may succeed and that others might be influenced by him. He will come if necessary for a face-to-face meeting where he will personally deal with the situation. In the meantime, John seeks to enlist the support of Gaius. He praises him for his past performance and encourages him to keep it up. Demetrius comes to Gaius both as the bearer of the letter and as a reinforcement in the crisis. Third John provides insight into a personality conflict that arose at the end of the first century and the strategy adopted by the elder to resolve it.

2 John Study Notes

1 The author stated that he loved "in truth." The author's love was consistent with the truth of the Christian message that he and his readers had received. This emphasis on truth shows that authentic Christian love involves more than sentimentality.

4 To walk in truth includes accepting the truth of the Christian message and obeying it. Here it refers specifically to loving one another (vv. 5-6) and confessing Jesus Christ as come in the flesh (v. 7; cp. 1 Jn 4:3).

7 John confronted the danger of false teachers. Believers must not simply love (vv. 5-6), they must also maintain the truth (vv. 7-11). John described these "antichrists" as people with an inadequate understanding of Jesus Christ.

8 John warned his readers, "Watch yourselves," which means "Watch out." He stated the purpose of this vigilance both negatively and positively: to avoid losing "what we have worked for" and to "receive a full reward" for faithful service.

10 "Do not receive him into your home" refers to hospitality that goes beyond a mere greeting and includes the provision of lodging and other necessities. Rudeness is never appropriate. However, we are not to lend aid to false teachers. The prohibition includes exclusion from fellowship as well as the refusal to ask God's blessing upon such a heretic.

Introduction to 3 John

AUTHOR

First John is anonymous, though the early church consistently ascribed it (as well as 2 and 3 Jn) to the Apostle John. The early church never suggested anyone else as its author. Evidence of John's authorship is strong and consistent, with these as some of the key facts to remember: (1) The author claimed to be an eyewitness of Jesus (1:1-3). (2) First John displays numerous similarities with the Gospel of John in terms of theology, vocabulary, and syntax. (3) Early church leaders Papias, Polycarp, Irenaeus, and Clement of Alexandria all affirmed John the apostle as the author.

In both 2 and 3 John, the author identified himself as "the Elder," and tradition affirms this to be John the apostle, the same person who wrote the first letter of John. Indeed, the obvious similarities in vocabulary, theme, and language have led most modern scholars to argue for common authorship of these three letters, even if they reject the Apostle John as that author. However, the writing style in the two smaller letters is so similar to that of 1 John and the Gospel of John as to assure common authorship.

THEMES OF 1 JOHN

First John was written to a group of churches in crisis—churches being attacked by false teaching (cp. 2:18-28; 4:1-6; 5:6-7). Some individuals once associated with the Christian community had adopted heretical doctrine, particularly as it related to beliefs about Christ, and had left the church (2:19). In response John wrote his first letter with two primary objectives. First, he wrote to combat the propaganda of the false teachers. Second, he wrote to reassure believers.

Doctrinally, the false teachers compromised the person and work of Jesus Christ, refusing to confess Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ (2:22) and denying that the Son had come in the flesh (4:2-3). Most likely these false teachers were influenced by early gnostic ideas. Although Gnosticism took many forms, it usually emphasized the essential goodness of spirit and the inherent evil or inferiority of matter. Influenced by this type of understanding, these false teachers may have viewed Christ as some type of spirit or phantom. Combined with this faulty view of the person of Christ was a deficient view of His death. First John contains specific statements that emphasize the atoning results of Christ's death (2:2; 4:10).

Morally, the false teachers minimized the seriousness of sin (1:6-10). They claimed that it was possible to have fellowship with God regardless of one's behavior (1:6). In contrast, John insists that one's relationship to God has serious ethical implications (cp. 2:3-4).

Socially, these heretics failed because their spiritual pride resulted in a lack of love (2:9,11). John argues that love for other believers is a manifestation of genuine Christianity (3:14; 4:7-21).

Turning to his objective of reassuring believers, John reminds his churches of the truthfulness of Christianity that they had received in the beginning. He wants them to know that they have eternal life (5:13). He provides his readers with tests by which they can reassure themselves that they are in the truth (1 Jn 1:5–2:2; 2:3-11; 3:7-10,14-15; 4:4-6-8,13-15; 5:13,18-20).

John addresses assurance with both an objective and a subjective apologetic. Objectively, believers know the historicity and reality of Jesus Christ's life and work. The events of His life were observed by eyewitnesses and passed on (1:1-3). Similarly, those who have trusted God's Son possess eternal life (5:12). Subjectively, Christians know that their lives have been transformed through faith in Christ (5:13).

THEMES OF 2 JOHN

Second John is the second shortest book in the NT. It is only 245 words in the Greek text, and it would easily fit on a single piece of papyrus. Today we might call it (and 3 Jn) a "postcard epistle." It is an excellent example of hortatory (or exhortation) discourse. The "elect lady," most likely a reference to a local church, must continue to walk in the truth, love one another, and be on guard against false teachers (the deceiver and the antichrist of v. 7). They must not extend hospitality to those who deny "the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh" (v. 7).

John builds this epistle around key words that tie the letter together. He utilizes a very rare word, "antichrist," which appears in Scripture only in 1 and 2 John (1 Jn 2:18,22; 4:3; 2 Jn 7), as a term describing false teachers.

John tells his children to (1) walk in the truth, (2) obey the commandments,
(3) love one another, and (4) guard the teachings of Christ and they will not be deceived by the antichrist. The spiritual safety of the believing community is confidently affirmed, as John begins and ends his letter with a reference to their chosen position (vv. 1,13).

THEMES OF 3 JOHN

Third John is the shortest book in both the NT and the Bible. It is only 219 words in the Greek text. It and 2 John are rightly described as "twin epistles," though they are rightly viewed as fraternal and not identical.

Third John is a personal letter that revolves around three individuals: Gaius (the recipient), Diotrephes (the troubler), and Demetrius (probably the bearer of the letter). It contains a word of exhortation to Gaius encouraging him not to imitate the bad example of Diotrephes but to continue the good work he is doing of receiving and supporting the traveling teachers/missionaries.

The elder is understandably concerned that his authority is being challenged. He fears the power play of Diotrephes may succeed and that others might be influenced by him. He will come if necessary for a face-to-face meeting where he will personally deal with the situation. In the meantime, John seeks to enlist the support of Gaius. He praises him for his past performance and encourages him to keep it up. Demetrius comes to Gaius both as the bearer of the letter and as a reinforcement in the crisis. Third John provides insight into a personality conflict that arose at the end of the first century and the strategy adopted by the elder to resolve it.

3 John Study Notes

1 The letter is addressed to a man named Gaius. Since this was one of the most common names in the Roman world, he is impossible to identify.

4 To walk in truth implies a course of conduct or life, that is, "living in the truth." The importance of both doctrinal integrity and spiritual vitality is evident in John's affirmation that nothing brought greater joy to him than to know that his children were "walking in the truth."

6-8 John encouraged Gaius to continue his hospitality toward these missionaries. Such a ministry was important because these ministers were laboring on behalf of God. Underlying this discussion is a contrast between Christian missionaries and false teachers. An individual who welcomes a false teacher basically shares in his evil deeds (v. 11), but those who receive Christian missionaries are "co-workers with the truth" (v. 8).

9-10 Most likely the words "I wrote" refer to a previous letter that is now lost. This letter probably contained instructions from John that Diotrephes disregarded. Diotrephes, a man of influence and authority in the church, evidently was hostile to the Apostle John. The nature of his rebellion was observable in three distinct areas: (1) he loved to be in the first position; (2) he spread malicious gossip about John; and (3) failing to be content with those evil actions, he refused to receive believers from other assemblies and cast out of the church those who did receive the brethren. The sins of pride, gossip, and intolerance are frequently found together, and they compromise our witness to thegospel.

Jude Articles

Isn't Christianity Intolerant?

by Paul Copan

Unless we're talking about language development, it's a good idea to understand words before we use them, especially when they may be emotionally charged. One commonly used—and abused—word describing Christians is intolerant. Of course, some prickly, pugnacious persons call themselves Christians but deny this claim by their lives. True Christianity shouldn't be equated with abuses committed in Christ's name. Think of Mother Teresa, not the Inquisition! Without compromising their convictions, all Christians should—as much as possible—live at peace with everyone (Rm 12:18).

Today people assume tolerance means "accepting all views as true." And because genuine Christians don't do this, they are charged with being *in*tolerant.

Whenever you hear Christians criticized as intolerant, ask, "What do you mean by 'intolerance'?" True tolerance doesn't mean accepting all beliefs—the good and the goofy—as legitimate. After all, one who disagrees with Christians doesn't accept Christianity; he thinks Christians are wrong! Historically, tolerance has meant putting up with what you find disagreeable or false. You put up with strangers on a plane who snore or slurp their coffee. Similarly, you put up with another person's beliefs without criminalizing him.

Tolerance differentiates between beliefs and persons. While disagreeing with certain beliefs, we can show respect to persons holding those beliefs, since all humans are made in God's image and inherently deserve respect. Furthermore, Christianity's truth doesn't imply that non-Christians are 100 percent wrong. Christians can agree with non-Christians about, say, certain ethical truths and scientific findings. All truth is God's truth. Truth is more basic than tolerance since tolerance itself presupposes belief in truth.

Tolerance operates at different levels. What can be tolerated in one area may not be tolerated in another. I'll tolerate certain behaviors in other children that I won't tolerate in my own. Christians shouldn't tolerate adultery within the church (ecclesiastical intolerance), but this doesn't mean we seek to have the adulterer imprisoned (legal intolerance).

Condemning arrogance, Christianity emphasizes grace and humility. Some "Christians" think they're superior to non-Christians. But this violates the spirit of the gospel. We gratefully receive God's gift of salvation, being like beggars telling other beggars where to find bread. Unlike the manager of some exclusive country club, God lovingly invites everyone to participate in His family—and not at the expense of truth.

Introduction to Jude

AUTHOR

First Peter claims to be written by the Apostle Peter (1 Pt 1:1), and there is no good reason to doubt Petrine authorship. The early church fathers also supported Petrine authorship, and there is wide and early evidence to support such a view.

The most debated introductory question for 1–2 Peter and Jude is whether Peter actually wrote 2 Peter. Almost all non-evangelical scholars claim Peter did not write the letter and some who identify themselves as evangelicals agree. Petrine authorship is denied for the following reasons:

(1) Peter used Jude as a source, and the letter of Jude was composed too late to have been used by Peter who died in the 60s. Furthermore, some think that Peter would have never borrowed from a writer like Jude.

(2) The Greek vocabulary and theology in the letter demonstrate that Peter, a Galilean fisherman, could not be the author. The author must be a person familiar with Greek culture. In addition, the style of the letter differs from 1 Peter, demonstrating a different author from the first epistle.

(3) The false teachers in the letter are identified as second-century Gnostics, and obviously Peter could not have written the letter in the second century.

(4) Paul's letters are recognized as Scripture (2 Pt 3:15-16), but Paul's letters could not have been collected together and viewed as Scripture while Peter was alive.

(5) The letter is not quoted by church fathers in the second century, and even in the fourth century its canonicity was under attack.

THE RELIABILITY OF 1 AND 2 PETER

Despite the above arguments, Petrine authorship is still the most convincing view, and is supported by the following arguments.

(1) As good historians, we begin with what the letter itself says, and we discover that the letter claims to be written by the apostle Peter (2 Pt 1:1) himself. He claims that his death is very near (2 Pt 1:14). Even more striking, he claims to have heard and seen Jesus' transfiguration (2 Pt 1:16-18). The author is obviously open to the charge of deception and lying if he was not the apostle.

(2) It is possible that Jude used Peter as a source instead of vice-versa. It seems more likely, though, that Peter did use Jude. In the first century, footnotes were not appended when using other sources, and Peter may have used some of Jude because he thought its contents applied well to his readers.

(3) The claim that the adversaries were second-century Gnostics is not supported from the text of 2 Peter. Gnostics posited cosmological dualism, rejected the material world, and had a defective Christology. None of these elements is clearly present in 2 Peter.

(4) Second Peter 3:15-16 does not indicate that all of Paul's letters were collected and considered to be canonical. Peter obviously knows some of the Pauline letters and thinks they are authoritative, but that should not be equated with a collected canon of Pauline writings. Those who think that praise of Paul by Peter is impossible are too influenced by the old Tübingen hypothesis advanced by F. C. Baur.

(5) The vocabulary and style of 2 Peter are different from 1 Peter, and he does use Hellenistic terms. But this is not a decisive argument against Petrine authorship. We need to remember that the body of Petrine writings is very small. Therefore, judgments about "Petrine style" should be made with the recognition that we do not have enough writings from Peter to form a solid judgment about his style. Peter may have changed his style to address the situation of his readers, just as Paul did in Athens

(Ac 17:16-34). Also, Peter may have asked a secretary to compose the writing, and this may account for the stylistic differences.

(6) The argument that Peter uses a different theology is not convincing either. We need to recall that the letter addresses a particular situation in the life of the churches, and therefore is not a summary of Peter's theology. There is no solid evidence that pseudonymous letters were accepted as canonical. In fact, they were rejected because they were fraudulent and fundamentally deceptive.

THE RELIABILITY OF JUDE

For Jude, the author is identified in the first verse as "Jude, a slave of Jesus Christ, and a brother of James." The James mentioned is almost certainly James, the brother of the Lord Jesus Christ and the author of the letter from James (cp. Ac 15:13-21; 1 Co 15:7; Gl 2:9). We can conclude from this that Jude was well known by his association with his famous brother who played a significant role in the apostolic church. Hence, Jude was also the half-brother of Jesus Christ (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3). External evidence from the early church also supports the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, wrote the letter.

Some scholars have argued that another Jude wrote the letter. Calvin identified the author as the Apostle "Judas of James" (Lk 6:16; Ac 1:13). But if this were correct, the author would call himself an apostle. Others have speculated that the writer is "Judas Barsabbas" (Ac 15:22,27,32), but there is no evidence that the latter was James's brother. Even more unlikely is the theory that the author was the apostle Thomas. Still others maintain that the letter is pseudonymous, but support for psuedonymity in canonical writings is lacking. To sum up, there are good reasons to accept the view that Jude, the brother of Jesus, is the author of the letter.

Jude Study Notes

9,15 Jude alluded to traditions found in pseudepigraphal works (The Assumption of Moses and/or The Testament of Moses) in recounting a dispute over the burial of Moses in verse 9. And in verses 14-15, he cited a text from the pseudepigraphal 1 Enoch. (A pseudipigraphical work is one written under the name of another—in these cases, Moses and Enoch.) We will concentrate on the citation from 1 Enoch here since the issue is more difficult because Jude actually quoted from the book and claimed that "Enoch . . . prophesied" (v. 14).

Some think that Jude actually quoted from the historical Enoch, a man who was taken up to heaven before death (Gn 5:23-24). It is difficult to see, though, how Jude could have cited an actual oral tradition from the historical Enoch since the book of Enoch was in circulation in Jude's day and was well known in Jewish circles. Jude almost certainly derived the citation from the book of 1 Enoch, and the latter is clearly pseudepigraphical. We would be faced with having to say that Jude knew that this specific quotation from 1 Enoch derived from the historical Enoch. It is better to conclude that Jude quoted the pseudepigraphical Enoch and that he also believed that the portion he quoted represents God's truth. Jude's wording does not demand that he thought we have an authentic oracle from the historical Enoch.

We do not need to conclude, however, that the entire book should be part of the canon of Scripture (cp. Augustine, City of God 15.23). Jude probably cited a part of 1 Enoch that he considered to be a genuine prophecy. Perhaps he referred to Enoch because the adversaries treasured the work, and therefore he used their ammunition against them. It is possible that the false teachers rejected Christian tradition about Christ's coming and hence Jude cited the prophecy from Enoch. Indeed, the content of the prophecy is not remarkable, assuring the readers that the Lord will truly judge the ungodly.

Citing a quotation from another source does not indicate that the entire work is inspired, even if the saying drawn upon is true. For instance, Paul quoted Aratus (Phaenomena 5) in Ac 17:28, and he surely did not intend to teach that the entire work is inspired Scripture. Similarly, he quoted Epimenides in Ti 1:12, without any notion that he accepted the truth of the whole work.

Some might think that the citation here is different because Jude said Enoch "prophesied." The verb "prophesy" is sometimes used to designate canonical Scripture (Mt 15:7; 1 Pt 1:10). But the verb is also used to say that a certain utterance or saying is from God. For example, Caiaphas prophesied regarding the fate of Jesus, even though he was an unbeliever (Jn 11:51). Zechariah prophesied when the Spirit filled him at the Baptist's birth (Lk 1:67). Women prophesied when the believing church gathered as well (1 Co 11:4-5; cp. Ac 19:6; Rv 11:3). A prophecy may derive from God and still not be a part of canonical Scripture. We cannot necessarily draw the conclusion from the words "Enoch prophesied" that the work was considered to be Scripture. It would have been more telling if Jude had used the phrase "It is written" with reference to 1 Enoch. Jude simply drew from a part of the work that he considered true.

We know that the Qumran community valued1 Enoch but did not include the book in its canon of Scripture. Nor do any major Christian groups consider 1 Enoch to be inspired Scripture today. Jude cited it for its truth, but he did not claim inspiration for the entire work.

Revelation Articles

Does the Bible Teach That Humans Are More Than Their Bodies?

by J. P. Moreland

Throughout history most Christians have believed in "the souls of men and beasts," to take an expression from Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz. Animals and humans are composed of an immaterial entity—a soul—and a body. The main biblical emphasis is on the functional, holistic unity of a human being. But this unity includes a dualist distinction of body and soul. The human soul, while not by nature immortal, is nevertheless capable of entering an intermediate disembodied state upon death and, eventually, being reunited with a resurrected body. By contrast, animal souls do not reflect the image of God and most likely do not survive death.

There are two main lines of argument for dualism: biblical anthropological terms and biblical teaching about life after death.

1. Old Testament anthropological terms. Biblical anthropological terms exhibit a wide field of meanings, and so we must take care to interpret each occurrence in its context. The two most important OT terms are nephesh (frequently translated "soul") and ruach (frequently translated "spirit").

Nephesh sometimes refers to God as an immaterial, transcendent self, a seat of mind, will, emotion, etc. (see Jb 23:13; Am 6:8). It is similarly applied to humans (Dt 6:5; 21:14; Pr 21:10; Is 26:9; Mc 7:1). It also refers to a vital entity that makes something alive (Ps 30:3; 86:13; Pr 3:22.). Finally, nephesh refers to the continuing center of personal identity that departs to the afterlife as the last breath ceases (Gn 35:18; cp. 1 Kg 17:21-22; Ps 16:10; 30:3; 49:15; 86:13; 139:8; Lm 1:1). The Bible regularly speaks of death and resurrection in terms of the departure and return of the soul. Indeed, the problem of necromancy throughout Israel's history (the practice of trying to communicate with the dead in Sheol; see Dt 18:9-14; 1 Sm 28:7-25) seems to presuppose the view that people continue to live conscious lives after the death of their bodies.

Ruach, frequently translated "spirit," sometimes signifies a vital power that infuses something, animates it, and gives it life and consciousness. Thus the ruach in man is formed by Yahweh (Zch 12:1), proceeds from and returns to Him, and is that which gives man life (Jb 34:14). In Ezekiel 37, God takes dry bones, reconstitutes human bodies of flesh, and then adds a ruach to these bodies to make them living persons (see Gn 2:7.) There is no ruach in physical idols and thus they cannot arise and possess consciousness (Jr 10:14; Hab 2:19). Ruach also refers to an independent, invisible, conscious being as when God employs a spirit to accomplish some purpose (2 Kg 19:7; 22:21-23). In this sense Yahweh is called the God of the vital spirits of all flesh (Nm 27:16; cp. 16:22). Here "spirit" means an individual, conscious being distinct from the body. Moreover, ruach also refers to the seat of various states of consciousness, including will (Dt 2:30; Ps 51:10-12; Jr 51:11), thought (Is 29:24), emotion (Jdg 8:3; 1 Kg 21:4), and one's moral or spiritual condition (Pr 18:14; Ec 7:8).

2. The OT on life after death. The OT depicts individual survival after physical death in a disembodied form. The dead in Sheol are called rephaim. Old Testament teaching about life after death is best understood in terms of a diminished though conscious form of disembodied personal survival in an intermediate state. First, the OT often depicts life in Sheol as lethargic, inactive, and resembling an unconscious coma (Jb 3:13; Ps 88:10-12; 115:17-18; Ec 9:10; Is 38:18). However, it also describes the dead in Sheol as being with family, awake, and active on occasion (Is 14:9-10). Second, the Hebrew Scriptures clearly teach the practice of necromancy (communicating with the dead) as a real possibility and, on some occasions, an actuality (see Lv 19:31; 20:6; Dt 18:11; 1 Sm 28; Is 8:19). Third, according to the OT, the nephesh—a conscious person without flesh and bone—departs to God upon death (see Ps 49:15).

3. New Testament anthropological terms. Several NT passages use pneuma (spirit) or psyche (soul) in a dualistic sense. Hebrews 12:23 refers to deceased but existing human beings in the heavenly Jerusalem as "the spirits of righteous people made perfect." Revelation 6:9-11 refers to dead saints as the "souls" of the martyrs who are in the intermediate state awaiting the final resurrection (20:5-6). Several texts refer to death as "giving up the spirit" (Mt 27:50; Lk 23:46; 24:37; Jn 19:30). Matthew 10:28 says, "Don't fear those who kill the body but are not able to kill the soul; rather, fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." In this text psyche seems clearly to refer to something that can exist without the body.

4. New Testament teaching on the intermediate state. Certain NT passages seem to affirm a disembodied intermediate state between death and final resurrection. For instance, there is the transfiguration passage (see Mt 17:1-13) in which Elijah (who never died) and Moses (who had died) appear with Jesus. The most natural way to interpret this text is to understand that Moses and Elijah have continued to exist (Moses was not re-created for this one event) and were made temporarily visible. Thus the transfiguration passage seems to imply a disembodied intermediate state.

In Luke 23:43, Jesus promised the thief on the cross, "Today you will be with Me in paradise." The term "today" should be taken in its natural sense, namely as meaning that the man would be with Jesus that very day in the intermediate state after their deaths.

In 2 Corinthians 5:1-10 and Philippians 1:21-24, Paul referred to a state after death and prior to the resurrection in which people experience a conscious disembodied ("naked," "unclothed") existence in God's presence.

In 2 Corinthians 12:1-4 Paul admitted that, during a visionary experience, he did not know whether he was in his body or temporarily disembodied. Because Paul understood himself as a soul/spirit united to a body, the latter state of being disembodied was a real possibility for him.

Notable Christian Apologist: Justin Martyr

by Ted Cabal

Born in Palestine, Justin (c. 100–167) spent his early years immersed in philosophy. Though a professional philosopher (Platonist), he was impressed with the courage of Christians facing death for their faith. He converted to Christ in A.D. 130 through the witness of an old Christian man who spoke to him of the true "philosophy." This truth was revealed through biblical prophets foretelling events to come and was confirmed by miracles. Justin's heart was stirred and thereafter he spent his days seeking to introduce others to Christ. Faithfulness to his confession of Christ ultimately led to his beheading at Rome—hence the name Justin Martyr.

Justin would go on to write several apologetic treatises, including two addressed to the Roman emperors Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius. In these works Justin sought to prove the injustice of the persecution of Christians. He defended Christians from false charges such as atheism. Their refusal to bow before pagan idols and worship the emperor stemmed from their worship of the true God, who is invisible as Creator of all things. Demons are the true source of the hatred instigated toward Christians. Traces of truth that may be discovered in pagan philosophers writing before Christ were borrowed from the Hebrew Scriptures or else are due to the pre-incarnate Christ as Logos (the rational power guiding the universe) enlightening them. The biblical prophets accurately prophesied the coming of this Christ as the central figure of history.

How Does a Christian Converse with a Buddhist?

by Ravi Zacharias

Attraction to Eastern spirituality, and particularly Buddhism, is powerful because the human spirit craves spiritual answers. Thus, whenever a Christian converses with someone of another faith, including Buddhism, he must attempt to reveal the hungers of the human heart and how Christ alone addresses them.

Gautama Buddha taught that we should free ourselves from illusions of selfhood, God, forgiveness, and individual life hereafter. We should focus on a life wherein good deeds outweigh the bad. Buddha believed that all life is suffering and that to escape from rebirth we must understand our nature. If we extinguish hungers and detach ourselves from desires (namely, relationships), we will then offset all impure acts and thoughts. That is the Buddhist's hope.

But Buddhism's attraction provides no real answers. The self—which is undeniable and inescapable—is lost in Buddhist philosophy, which brushes away the hungers of the soul. Everything is in our care. All losses are ours. There is no "other" to whom we can go, not even a self to whom we can speak. Yet Buddhism's denial of a personal God is unable to prevent its practitioners seeking to relate to and worship a personal being. There is a universal hunger that drives the self to a transcendent personal other of one's making.

Buddha considered one's present life to be payment for previous lives. Each rebirth is due to karmic indebtedness, but without the carryover of the person. In contrast, Christianity sees the individual self as distinctive and indivisible. God's love is personal. Jesus brought God's offer for true forgiveness and eternal life while affirming each individual as uniquely created in God's image. For Jesus, suffering is only symptomatic of the life unhinged from right relationship with God. We have broken away from God, from our fellow human beings, and even from ourselves.

In contrast to karma—where "sin" is nothing more than ignorance or illusion—Christ's forgiveness can provide true appeal for the Buddhist. The gospel proclaims that we have come apart from within, and to this brokenness Jesus brings the real answer. In finding true relationship with God, all other relationships are given moral worth. God, who is distinct and distant, came close so that we who are sinful and weak may be forgiven and made strong in communion with God Himself without losing our identity. That simple act of communion encapsulates life's purpose. The individual retains his or her individuality while dwelling in community.

Moreover, Christ does not prescribe extinguishing one's self—which is not possible—but rather prescribes no longer living for oneself. Hungering after righteousness is good and brings God's fulfillment. Everyone who has surrendered all at the feet of Jesus can confess with the Apostle Paul, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to guard what has been entrusted to me until that day" (2 Tm 1:12). Jesus Christ guards all our purposes, loves, attachments, and affections when we entrust them to Him.

Introduction to Revelation

AUTHOR

The traditional author of Revelation is the Apostle John, who contributed the Gospel of John and the three letters of John to the NT. There are good reasons to hold this view. (1) The writer refers to himself as John (1:1,4,9; 22:8). (2) The author had personal relationships with the seven churches of Asia Minor (1:4,11; chaps. 2–3), as did the apostle. (3) His circumstances at the time of writing (1:9) match those of John the apostle. (4) The saturation of the book with OT imagery implies a Jewish writer, such as the Apostle John. (5) Though the author does not claim to be the Apostle John, it seems unlikely that any other first-century Christian leader would have had the authority or was associated closely enough with the churches of Asia Minor to have referred to himself simply as John.

However, because the writing style, vocabulary, and thought patterns of Revelation are quite different from those of the Gospel of John and 1, 2, and 3 John, some interpreters have reasoned the book was written by a different John, someone known in that day as "the Elder." While these observations are correct, traditional authorship is supported by the following considerations: (1) Revelation has many themes and theological ideas in common with John's Gospel and letters. For example, only the Gospel and Revelation refer to Jesus as the Word of God (Jn 1:1; Rv 19:13) and the Lamb. The theme of "witness" is also particularly prominent in all five books. (2) Different wording is to be expected in a book that is largely of a different kind of literature from John's other writings (see below). (3) The early church almost unanimously attributed Revelation to John the apostle.

DATE

Though some have dated the book later and a few earlier, the two most commonly held dates of Revelation are the mid 90s and the late 60s of the first century A.D. Both views are held by evangelicals, but the mid-90s view is perhaps the stronger of the two as well as the majority opinion.

The primary issues involved concern the date of the persecution portrayed in the letters to the churches (2:9-10,13) and whether or not the portrayal of the beast in chapter 13 reflects a myth of the Emperor Nero returning from the dead. Some have suggested that the allusions in the text to Nero imply he was still alive at the time of writing. Furthermore, they claim, there is a reference to the temple in 11:1-2 that suggests that it had not yet been destroyed. Since the temple was destroyed in A.D. 70 and Nero died in about A.D. 68, a case can therefore be made for a late 60s date. That said, all other factors, notably the tradition that John the apostle was exiled to Patmos during a period of intensifying local persecution of Christians by the emperor Domitian, favor a date of about A.D. 95.

THEMATIC CONSIDERATIONS

One of the primary challenges of interpreting Revelation is determining what kind of literature it is. At first glance it appears to be apocalyptic (exotic visions and symbolism; see the Greek apokalypsis in 1:1) or prophecy (1:3). However, the reference to the human author and audience, the standard greeting (1:4) and ending (22:21), and the mini-letters in chapters 2 and 3 indicate that we must also view Revelation as a letter. While this may seem more confusing, it actually simplifies things, for we can now view the book as a much longer literary cousin of the letter of Jude, which also contains extensive apocalyptic and prophetic material within an epistolary framework. So we can interpret Revelation in much the same way as we do Jude.

A further question relates to how to decide among the interpretive approaches to the book. Is Revelation depicting (1) the time of the writing of the book, in the first century A.D. (the preterist view); (2) the sweep of church history (the historicist view); (3) principles or ideas that apply equally in any time (the idealist view); or (4) the end of the age (the futurist view)? Of these approaches, the historicist approach has been discredited by the diverse, and highly subjective, understandings of the scholars who have championed the view. The other three views are helpful to one degree or another, especially when used together. It is most effective to interpret Revelation as apocalyptic prophecy primarily referring to the end times, spoken to the problems and needs of first-century churches and yet communicating principles applicable to hearers at any point in history until the end of the age.

Other interpretive challenges are posed by extensive use of the OT and other writings in Revelation and its use of symbolism and numbers. When we realize that echoes of the Hebrew Bible either speak of the ultimate fulfillment of OT prophecies or point back to a key for interpreting the passage found in the OT text, much of the mystery disappears. Similarly, most symbols and numbers are biblical commonplaces, meaning what they mean elsewhere in the Bible, and are not unique to Revelation. The text interprets other images itself (e.g., 1:20).

The immediate context for both the author and the initial hearers of the book of Revelation was a group of churches (1:11; chaps. 2–3) experiencing selective persecution (2:9-10,13) in the midst of doctrinal and practical problems (2:6,13-15,20-23), set against the backdrop of unseen but powerful spiritual warfare (2:10; 9:1,11; 12:3-4,9-10; 20:2).

The teaching that appears focused on events at the end of the age (eschatology) parallels practical (Christian life) choices believers must make in the time ahead. And indeed Revelation provides a virtually complete tour of systematic theology categories. There is much about Christ, mankind and sin, the people of God (both the church and Israel), holy angels, and Satan and the demons. There is important material on God's power, aspects of the work of the Holy Spirit, the nature of Scripture, and the wonder of salvation. The book clearly and eloquently offers the gospel, inviting its readers to enter into grand narrative—(14:6-7; 22:14,17)

The believer can learn much theology from Revelation. However, as John warned the church at Ephesus—to understand, believe, and even persevere and defend the doctrinal purity of the faith is not enough (2:2-6). Whatever temptations and alternatives may emerge (2:4-6,14-15,20-24), it is crucial to passionately love the Lord with all our hearts, placing Him first in our lives. Only in this way can we become "overcomers" (2:4-5,7).

In the body of the book, the ultimate choice for time and eternity is whether one will worship the beast (the Antichrist figure energized by Satan; see chap. 13) or Christ the Lamb (chap. 14). The strikingly placed command in 18:4 for God's people to "come out" of Babylon implies that both unbelievers and compromised professing Christians are, even if subconsciously, in league with the diabolical spiritual force that has martyred many of God's saints throughout the ages (17:6; 18:20,24). For either group—unbelievers or sinning church members—the answer is to repent to gain the victory (2:5,7; 9:20-21). The warning from Revelation is thus clear: those who refuse the Lord's offer of salvation will face a climactic judgment and eternal consequences of their choice (20:11-15; 21:7-8).

Revelation Study Notes

1:1 "Revelation," meaning "unveiling," translates the Greek apokalypsis, indicating that the book is apocalyptic literature, like Dn in the Hebrew Bible. "The revelation of Jesus Christ" could mean either the "unveiling about Jesus Christ" or the "unveiling by Jesus Christ," or both.

1:1,3 The idea that what is recorded in Rv "must quickly take place" and that "the time is near" has been used to try to prove these are false prophecies, given that it has been more than 1,900 years since the book was written. However, while it is true that Christ's coming is potentially near at hand, the wording in verses 1 and 3 means something different. John said that when the events of the body of the book begin to take place, the prophecies will be fulfilled quickly.

1:3 It is a gross misunderstanding to think one is blessed simply for reading or studying Rv. It is necessary to heed what is written and apply it in one's life. This is the first of seven significant blessing statements, or beatitudes, in the book (14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7,14).

1:4 The presence of the name of an author ("John"), an audience ("the seven churches"), and a characteristic greeting ("Grace and peace") indicates that Rv has much in common with the other letters in the NT and is not an exotic or other-worldly work that cannot be understood. "The One who is, who was, and who is coming" (v. 8) indicates that God not only exists now but always has and always will. The term translated "seven spirits" may refer to the angels of the seven churches (chaps. 2–3), other angels (8:2), or possibly the fullness of the Holy Spirit described in Is 11:2.

1:5 Jesus being "firstborn from the dead" looks back to His resurrection, the guarantee of the future resurrection of all believers and unbelievers (1 Co 15:20,23; Rv 20:4-5). The idea that He "set us free from our sins by His blood" does not mean a person is automatically saved by Christ's death on the cross. Revelation clearly recognizes the need for proper response to the gospel (14:6-7) and repentance (9:20-21) by unbelievers.

1:6 The wording here does not mean that believers are already functioning as royalty or priests. Rather, it reflects the certainty believers can have that they will serve as priests (7:15; 20:6) and reign with Christ (5:10; 20:4,6).

1:7 This is the theme verse for Rv. The wording is a collage of Dn 7:13 and Zch 12:10. The mourning is often understood as the response of those for whom it is too late to be saved. The context of Zch 12:10 indicates that the mourning will include true saving repentance.

1:9 Historical tradition indicates the Apostle John was exiled by the Roman Emperor Domitian to the isle of Patmos about A.D. 95, then released after Domitian's death in 96.

1:11 The seven local churches listed were not the only churches in Asia Minor at that time (see Col 1:2; 4:13). These churches were chosen as examples of what was happening in their midst at the time and because they were located on the connecting roads of a circular postal route.

1:12-18 John had seen Jesus Christ in a similar glorified state at His transfiguration (Mt 17:2), and he had seen His resurrection body after He was raised, until the ascension (Jn 20; Ac 1:2-11). In this vision, the veil was lifted and John saw the One he had known in the flesh. Even though John had been as close as any of the disciples to Jesus, John had not begun to comprehend the majesty of the One with whom he had walked during Jesus' three years of ministry. The impact ofJesus' appearance was overwhelming.

1:19 The wording is an expansion of the command in verse 11 to encompass the whole book of Rv. The things already seen are the vision of verses 12-18. "Things that are now happening" refers to the present state of affairs in the churches in chaps. 2–3. "What will take place after this" refers to the body of the book (chaps. 4–22). Revelation should not be viewed as a subjective grouping of random visions. Its orderly structure is laid out in advance.

1:20; 2:1,8,12,18; 3:1,7,14 It is possible that the "angels" of the churches were human messengers, since the Greek aggeloi was occasionally used that way (e.g., Jms 2:25). However, the overwhelming usage of aggeloi in the book of Rv is in reference to spirit beings (e.g., 1:1; 5:2). Perhaps these angels functioned like so-called guardian angels (Heb 1:14).

2:1–3:22 Some have held that the seven churches chosen to receive mini-letters represent seven stages in church history. But given the different interpretations of these stages, it is unlikely the view has validity. More likely, the churches were chosen because of the lessons they provide for "all the churches" (2:23). In general, each letter includes the following elements: (1) a description of the risen Christ drawn from the vision in 1:12-18; (2) commendation of the church; (3) rebuke of the church's shortcomings (although there is no criticism of the churches at Smyrna and Philadelphia) and instruction about how to correct them; (4) a command to "listen to what the Spirit says to the churches"; and (5) promises to the persevering spiritual "overcomer" (Gk nikao, "to win, conquer").

2:1-7 A timeless concern facing the church at Ephesus was dead orthodoxy. Though commended for persevering in zeal for proper belief (vv. 2-3), these church members had left the "love" they had "at first" (v. 4). This probably means love for God, since the greatest commandment is to love the Lord with all one's being (Dt 6:5; Mt 22:36-38). Having "fallen" (Rv 2:5) does not mean losing one's salvation, though ceasing to love God is a serious spiritual matter requiring soul-searching repentance. The significance of the Nicolaitans (v. 6) is clarified in the letters to the churches at Pergamum (vv. 14-15) and Thyatira (vv. 20-21,24).

2:8-11 The church at Smyrna, against whom Christ voiced no criticism, was facing suffering related to spiritual warfare and imprisonment for their faith. A local Jewish synagogue was making blasphemous charges (v. 9) that would result in church members being thrown in jail for a short time ("10 days") and causing some to die (v. 10). They "say they are Jews and are not" does not deny the Jewish lineage of the persecutors but instead mirrors Paul's assertion that, ultimately, Jewishness is not just outward but inward, related to the circumcision of the heart by faith (Rm 2:28-29).

2:12-17 In the church at Pergamum, things were worse than at Smyrna. Though the church members seem to have been facing similar spiritual warfare from Satan (v. 13), a faithful one named Antipas had already died(v. 13). Also, a viewpoint called the teaching of Balaam (v. 14; see Nm 22–25), which is equated with the teaching of the Nicolaitans (v. 15), had a strong foothold in the church. Those involved were to repent of their sinful behavior of eating things sacrificed to idols and engaging in immorality (v. 14).

2:18-29 In the church at Thyatira, things had reached a crisis point. A false prophetess, called Jezebel (v. 20), had involved her followers in the same sins as those infecting the church at Pergamum (vv. 14,20). Here this view/lifestyle is unmasked as the "deep things of Satan" (v. 24). This false belief and behavior originated with the devil. As discipline for this waywardness, there would be maximized suffering (the Greek is thlipsis megale, "great tribulation," which refers to the end of the age in 7:14), which serves as a dire warning to "all the churches" (v. 23). The strong parallels between Jezebel and Babylon, the great harlot, in chapters 17–18, as well as the startling usage of "great tribulation" (v. 22), suggests Jezebel was a first-century preview of Babylon the Great.

3:1-6 The church at Sardis was an example of congregations that had basically quit walking with the Lord and standing for Him. They may have still been going through the right motions, but in God's eyes they were about to die (v. 2). There was a faithful remnant (v. 4), but it was time for the spiritually lethargic majority to wake up (v. 2) and repent (v. 3) or face serious consequences from the Lord.

3:7-13 The church at Philadelphia was the only other congregation besides that at Smyrna not to be criticized by the glorified Christ. Even though they were facing intense spiritual warfare, no one had denied the Lord (vv. 8-9), and they stood as examples of spiritual purity. As a result, they were promised protection from the hour of testing (v. 10), which refers to the great tribulation (7:14), designed for the judgment of the earth dwellers (see also 6:10) at the end of the age. "I will also keep you from the hour of testing" (v. 10) may mean (1) being removed before the time of tribulation or (2) being supernaturally protected within the tribulation.

3:14-22 The church at Laodicea was in even worse shape spiritually than the church at Sardis, because nothing positive was said to its members at all. Their spiritual lukewarmness made the Lord want to vomit (vv. 15-16). Their well-to-do status, materially, had blinded them to their utter spiritual destitution (vv. 17-18). The Lord had been pushed to the outside of this congregation and was now seeking to reenter (v. 20) through their repentance (v. 19). What the devil or false doctrine does not accomplish in the church, self-centered materialism often will.

4:1-2 It is not clear whether John was actually taken up (v. 1) into the heavenly throne room (v. 2) or was still "in the Spirit" (v. 2) on the isle of Patmos (1:9-10). Either way, what he saw of the heavenly throne room in chapters 4–5 is still trustworthy, since the vision came from the Lord. Some evangelicals believe the command to "come up here" in verse 1 refers to the rapture of the church, though this refers to only one person.

4:3-4 The "24 elders" could be angels. However, since "elders" refers to leaders in both Israel (Nm 11:16) and the church (Ti 1:5), it is more likely that 12 represent the tribes of Israel and 12 the apostles of Christ, mirroring the reference in the new Jerusalem (21:12,14).

4:5 This lightning and thunder are not just soundand fury in the heavenly throne room. As the book of Rv proceeds, the phenomena intensify and spill overas God's just judgment on the earth (8:5; 11:19; 16:18,21).

4:6-8 The "four living creatures" are angels. They are similar to—if not the same as—the cherubim in Ezk 1 and 10. Those angels were in proximity to a throne and accompanied the Shekinah glory as it departed the temple before the Babylonians destroyed it. Since the divine glory is to return to some future temple (Ezk 43:1-5), perhaps the four living creatures remain in the presence of God's glory, awaiting that return.

4:8-11 The heavenly throne room is characterized by unceasing joyful praise, thanksgiving, and worship toward the Lord by all the creatures present. As believers here on earth consistently engage in similar worshipful living (e.g., 1 Th 5:16-18), we prepare to live in the presence of the Lord.

5:1-7 Divine insight into the future is not available to those who are merely curious or clever. It is available only through Jesus, the Lion-Lamb, who has overcome (vv. 5-6) through the cross and the tomb. The Greek word biblion refers to this scroll with seven seals (v. 1) on the outside. It is not open for viewing until all seven seals have been removed.

5:8 The preciousness of all believers' prayers ("the prayers of the saints"; 8:3) to the Lord is emphasized as they are described as filling gold bowls in the presence of God.

5:9-10 The "new song" sung in heaven after Christ is declared worthy to open the scroll has to do with His redemptive work on the cross (v. 9). Its target group is the same as the Great Commission, which is for all the nations (Mt 28:19).

5:11-14 Worship of the Lord will eventually characterize all of creation (v. 13; Php 2:10-11), even as it already does heaven (vv. 11-12,14).

6:1–8:1 The scroll in the Lamb's hand (5:7) is not open for viewing until all seven seals have been removed. Six of those seals are removed in chapter 6. The two scenes in chapter 7 (7:1-8 and 7:9-17) form an interlude prior to the removal of the seventh seal (8:1). There is much parallelism between this section and the section of Jesus' Olivet discourse (Mt 24:4-14). If both passages are referring to the same events and timing, the unsealing sequence in Rv 6:1–8:1 occurs prior to the great tribulation (7:14).

6:1-8 The lifting of the first four seals is portrayed as four horsemen. There is debate as to whether any or all of what is pictured here has already taken place. While conquest (v. 2), widespread warfare (v. 4), and devastating effects from famine on economies (vv. 5-6) have occurred throughout history since the first century A.D., no catastrophe has devastated a full fourth of the earth (v. 8).

6:9-11 The martyrs plead for divine vengeance on those who live on the earth (3:10), and who shed the blood of the martyrs. Since the hour of testing (3:10) is focused on the earth dwellers, the delay here ("rest a little while longer"; 6:11) implies the hour of testing has not begun at this point in the book. Vengeance for the martyrs is not completed until 19:2.

6:12-17 The effects that occur when the sixth seal is lifted from the scroll are those of Jl 2:28-31, which occur just before the Day of the Lord, when the Lord's climactic wrath is poured out (Zph 1:14-15). Because the same Greek word and form (elthen) is used in Jd 14 with a futuristic meaning, it is best to translate it here as "the great day of their wrath is about to come." It is striking that the most arrogant people (i.e., the kings, the great men, and the rich) will be as terrified by God's coming judgment as the lowliest of mankind (the slaves).

7:1-3 The unearthly calming of winds on the earth and the half hour of silence in heaven (8:1) form a bookend effect around chapter 7. Special attention is focused on what the Lord is doing with the two groups in view (vv. 4-8 and v. 9) while judgment is being held back. The people of God are to be sealed, indicating God's ownership and protection, before the last seal is lifted from the scroll (8:1) and God's judgments contained in it are released.

7:4-8 The Jehovah's Witnesses teach that the 144,000 represents the total number of those who will reign with Christ. Since there is a much larger group—a "vast multitude . . . which no one could number"—mentioned immediately afterward as taken from earth to heaven (v. 9), the JW view is discredited even in its closest context in Rv. While many believe the 144,000 is symbolic for the church, the tribal names and numbers naturally refer to ethnic Israel. The 12 tribes are numbered as a protective military deployment (e.g., Nm 2), making it plausible that 7:1-8 is implying that this sealing has to do with the new covenant entry of the Holy Spirit into the Jewish remnant returned to the promised land (Ezk 36:27; 37:7-9,14), where the vision describes Israel as "a vast army" (Ezk 37:10).

7:9-12 The reference to the "vast multitude" wearing white robes links them to the martyrs (6:11) and, in the only other place where "vast multitude" is found (19:1,6), to the bride (19:7-8) and the armies (19:14) of the Lamb. As soon as the great multitude arrives in heaven, they begin to worship with all the other heavenly creatures.

7:13-14 The robes of the "vast multitude" (v. 9) being washed white in the blood of the Lamb could speak of martyrdom but probably refers to the redemptive blood of Christ (1:5; 5:9). If that is the case, the "vast multitude" being removed in relation to the great tribulation (referred to in Dn 12:1 and Mt 24:21, and what is meant by the hour of trial in Rv 3:10) could refer to the rapture of the church, even before the great tribulation, if that period does not begin until the events in the scroll are released by the lifting of the seventh seal (8:1).

7:15-17 The multitude's priestly service to the heavenly sanctuary is a partial fulfillment of the promises of 1:6 and 5:10. This passage looks ahead to the equating of the "vast multitude" with the heaven dwellers in 12:12 and 13:6. The wording in 7:16-17 recalls Ps 23 and looks ahead to the new heaven and earth (Rv 21:4; 22:1).

8:1 When the seventh seal is lifted, the scroll is finally completely open (5:1). The half hour of silence in heaven echoes Zph 1:7, "Be silent in the presence of the Lord GOD, for the Day of the LORD is near," indicating the Day of the Lord begins with the trumpets.

8:2-6 Before the blowing of the trumpets begins, the prayers of the saints go up before the Lord (vv. 3-4). This pause implies that God's answer to the prayers for the avenging of the blood of the martyrs (6:10) upon the earth dwellers, the focus of the hour of testing (3:10), begins with the trumpet judgments. The phenomena around the throne in heaven in 4:5 is intensified in 8:5 and poured out in the trumpet judgments.

8:8-12 The first four trumpet judgments bring horrific destruction upon a third of the focus of each judgment. Thus the trumpets are dramatically stronger than the strongest of the seals, in which a fourth of the earth was (selectively) impacted, but not totally destroyed, as with these trumpets.

8:13 The remaining three trumpet judgments will intensify the terror lying upon the earth dwellers, whom God has spotlighted for judgment and vengeance of the martyrs' blood (6:10) during the hour of testing (3:10). Since the seventh trumpet is open-ended, including the bowls of divine wrath (15:1–19:6), these terrors extend to the second coming of Christ (19:11-16).

9:1-11 The fifth trumpet recalls the plague of locusts in Jl 1:4 and 2:25. There is no protection from the extremely painful, but not fatal, scorpion-like stings of the demonic locusts (Rv 9:1-3) except the seal of God on one's forehead (7:3-4,8). Believers are protected in terms of their eternal destiny by the seal of the Holy Spirit (Eph 1:13-14; 4:30).

9:13-19 None of the earth dwellers is allowed to die during the plague of the locusts (v. 6). However, during the sixth trumpet judgment, a third of the human race is killed, in keeping with the first four trumpet judgments (8:7-12). Though some believe the armies of 200 million are human, it is more likely they are demonic, as were the locusts.

9:20-21 The only salvation for those not killed by the plagues of the trumpet judgments is repentance and faith. However, since their names are not written in the Lamb's book of life (17:8), they will not repent.

10:1-4 Chapters 10–11 provide a second interlude in the book, between the sixth and seventh trumpets. The "little scroll" (Gk biblaridion) may be either a second scroll or the same scroll, which appears small because the angel holding it is so big. Because the voices of the seven peals of thunder were sealed, God has not seen fit to reveal the contents, as He has in many cases (Dt 29:29).

10:5-7 The pace of divine judgment is about to quicken ("There will no longer be an interval of time," v. 6) with the sounding of the seventh trumpet (11:15-19). The "hidden plan" of God is truth that has not been previously revealed or fulfilled, but is being revealed now (e.g., Eph 3:9).

10:8-11 John eating the little scroll recalls Ezekiel being commanded to do the same thing (Ezk 3:1-3). In John's case, while the eating was sweet, the digesting was bitter (Rv 10:10). The implication here is that, while the Word of God (i.e., John's prophesying) is sweet, the calloused rejection of his hearers is bitter indeed. All ministry of the Word of God is similarly bittersweet.

11:1-6 It is not necessary for the temple to have still been standing in Jerusalem for John to have seen the temple and its court in his vision. This second scene in the second interlude (vv. 1-13) is set in Jerusalem during the times of the Gentiles (Lk 21:24) controlling the holy city. Two unnamed witnesses, who fulfill the imagery in Zch 4 and do miracles like Elijah and Moses, prophesy for a period of 1,260 days (three and a half years), and all who try to stop their ministry are killed. God's spokesmen have often been supernaturally protected until their appointed ministries were complete.

11:7 The beast—the Antichrist figure prophesied elsewhere (2 Th 2:9-11; 1 Jn 2:18)—makes his appearance. It is only because their period of ministry is completed that he is able to kill the two witnesses. The irony of using the word "conquer" to speak of the death of the witnesses is that, while it may briefly look like the beast is victorious (Rv 11:11-12), these witnesses, as martyrs, conquered through the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony (12:11).

11:8-10 Calling Jerusalem, the city where the Lord was crucified, the "great city" (the usual way of referring to Babylon the Great [e.g., 17:18; 18:10] as well as Sodom and Egypt) reflects how wicked most inhabitants of Jerusalem were. The killing of the two witnesses—which is paralleled to Jesus' death—and the desecration of not allowing a proper burial, as well as earth dwellers partying because of the witnesses' death, reflects that depravity.

11:11-12 The phrase, "after the three and a half days" is to be compared with Jesus being resurrected on the third day (1 Co 15:4). Great fear would be the expected response to a double resurrection. Such fear can be a positive thing, since the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom (Pr 1:7). The command, "Come up here," is understood by some to speak of the rapture of the church, though here it is a call to only two people.

11:13 In the midst of the widespread damage and death, fear turns into faith with many who saw the resurrection and ascension of the two witnesses. To fear God and glorify Him is the authentic response to the eternal gospel to be preached to all still alive on the earth (14:6-7). Since this takes place in Jerusalem, where most present would be Jewish, this could be the fulfillment of Paul's prophecy that all Israel will be saved (Rm 11:25-26).

11:15-19 The sound of finality in the wording of the seventh trumpet has caused some to think this is the point of the second coming of Christ and that the following chapters double back to retrace the same ground from a different perspective. Such a recapitulation viewpoint is not necessary, since the seventh trumpet overarches the bowls of wrath, with the seventh bowl telescoping all the way to the preparation for the second coming. This perspective is supported by the phenomena to be poured out on the earth under the seventh trumpet (v. 19) not being poured out until the seventh bowl (16:18,21).

12:1–14:20 Chapters 12–14 function as a prelude to the bowls-of-wrath sequence (chaps. 15–16). They provide a midstream orientation to characters and content that is crucial in understanding the latter part of Rv.

12:1-6 The initial imagery echoes Joseph's vision in Gn 37:9. The description of pregnancy and the pain of childbirth recall Gn 3:15-16, and it is possible the prophecy of the virgin birth (Is 7:14) is also in view. Similarly, the dragon (Satan; Rv 12:9) is tied all the way back to the angelic rebellion against the Lord. The wording in verses 4-5 implies that Herod the Great's attempt to kill the baby Jesus was satanically inspired. Though there is no mention of the death or resurrection of the messianic child, it is implied from other passages in Rv as well as from the parallel to the two witnesses in 11:11-12. The woman is taken care of by the Lord for 1,260 days, the same length of time the two witnesses were protected (11:3-6), though it is probably after the witnesses have ascended, since the "woman" fleeing refers most likely to the converts after the two witnesses were resurrected and ascended (11:11-13).

12:7-10 The sense that the "woman" in verse 6 is faithful Israel is strengthened by Satan's clash with Michael, the archangel assigned to protect Israel (Dn 12:1). Throughout Satan's career of deceiving the world and accusing the brethren (Rv 12:10), he was allowed a place in heaven (Jb 1–2). But now he is cast out. "The evil day" (Eph 6:13) of spiritual warfare will be far more intense, with Satan and his "angels" (demons) thrown down to the earth.

12:11 Sometimes what looks like defeat is victory, as when brethren die for their faith. Satan has killed them, but they have actually conquered him because of the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony.

12:12 Because Satan has been banned from heaven, those who dwell there can rejoice (13:6). However, having been cast down to earth, Satan is infuriated and will take out his rage on the earthly environment.

12:13-16 The devil does his utmost to persecute the "woman" (faithful Israel) for a period of "a time, times, and half a time" (three and a half years; 12:6). But he is completely unsuccessful because of the Lord's protection.

12:17 The devil does not give up easily. Unable to get at the "woman" and enraged, he turns aside to declare war against (i.e., kill) the Gentile saints (13:7). The Gentiles are Jesus' "other sheep that are not of [the Jewish] fold" (Jn 10:16).

13:1-4 The beast here, first mentioned in 11:7, is described in similar terms to the beasts (especially the fourth) in the vision of Dn 7. His power comes from Satan (the dragon). Since the beast had been embarrassed by the resurrection and ascension of the two witnesses (Rev 11:11-12), verse 3 appears to describe either a fake resurrection or a nearly fatal wound. That "miracle" overrides the raising of the two witnesses, now no longer visible. As a result, the world populace worships the beast and, whether knowingly or not, the devil who energizes the beast.

13:5-7 The beast's worldwide reign of terror is allowed by divine authority for "42 months" (three and a half years), after the witnesses complete their ministry and are taken to heaven (11:3,7,11-12).

13:8 The earth dwellers choosing to worship the blasphemous beast are rooted in the absence of their names from the Lamb's "book of life." Mankind is held responsible for choices that are ultimately attributed to divine election and predestination (e.g., Ac 2:23).

13:9-10 This is the only place in Rv where the wording, "If anyone has an ear, he should listen" is found outside the letters to the churches in chapters 2–3. It probably functions as a call to endurance and faith in the face of the explanation for why the world follows the beast (v. 8).

13:11-15 The second beast, the false prophet (16:13), is empowered to do "all kinds of false miracles, signs, and wonders" (2 Th 2:9), including having power over fire, similar to the two witnesses (Rv 13:13; see 11:5).

13:16-18 The "mark" of the beast is in contrast to the seal (7:3-4) and the name of the Lamb and the Father (14:1) on the foreheads of the 144,000. Many have attempted to calculate not just the number (666) but also the exact identity of the man to whom it refers. Since1 Jn 2:18 states that "many antichrists have come" (i.e., as foreshadowing the ultimate Antichrist figure), there may be some marginal usefulness in noting that names like Nero and Hitler can be shown to have a numerological value of 666 by assigning a numerical value to each letter of the alphabet. However, it is wise to realize that such a numerological calculation will be clear only as the actual events unfold.

14:1-5 The 144,000, first seen on earth in 7:4-8, are now seen on the heavenly Mount Zion with Christ the Lamb. The beast cannot touch them, even though they do not have his mark (13:16-17), because they have the Lord's name on their foreheads. In their purity they are fitting firstfruits of the Lord's final harvest (Rev 14:14-20).

14:6-7 Some say the gospel is not present in Rv. However, the Greek word translated "gospel" (euangelion) is found in verse 6, and the content of the climactic preaching is specified in verse 7—to fear, give glory to, and worship the Lord. This response has already been seen in 11:13.

14:8-11 Babylon the Great (and her just judgment) is introduced here and will be expanded in 16:17–19:3. All who worship the beast and take his mark will be judged with eternal torment. Although the torment is pictured as fire and sulfur, this is not earthly flammable material that will eventually burn out, so that the torment will stop (i.e., that the punishment of unbelievers is limited in duration). Nor are those being punished consumed by the flames. Their torment goes on forever.

14:12-13 The second great blessing statement of Rv awaits those who persevere and keep the faith until death, especially martyrs.

14:14-20 This section visualizes the "harvest . . . [at the] end of the age" (Mt 13:39), when the good seed (Rv 14:14-16) and the tares (vv. 17-20) are separated unto their eternal destinies. Some think verses 14-16 refer to the rapture of the church. The imagery in verses 18-20 ties it to the description of the second advent in 19:15.

15:1 Since the seventh bowl fulfills exactly what appears about to take place in 11:19, the bowls-of-wrath sequence (15:1–19:7) unfolds from the end of the trumpet sequence and telescopes all the way to the second coming.

15:2-4 Those who are victorious are martyrs (12:11) who responded properly to the preaching of the eternal gospel (14:6-7) by fearing, glorifying, and worshiping God (15:4). The "song of God's servant Moses, and the song of the Lamb" is a parallel description of the songs of the children of Israel, safe on the other side of the Red Sea after their escape from Egypt (Ex 15).

15:5-8 The mention of gold bowls links the pouring out of the bowls of wrath to the answering of the prayers of the saints, which are in gold bowls (5:8), especially the martyrs' prayer to avenge their blood on the earth dwellers (6:10).

16:1-7 The first three bowls are focused on those who worshiped the beast and took his mark. The significance of turning the water sources into blood is clarified in verses 5-7. Those who worshiped the beast are being judged for the martyrs' blood, with which judgment the heavenly martyrs under the altar agree (6:9). Since such vengeance was expected for the earth dwellers, the beast worshipers and the earth dwellers are the same group.

16:8-11 Even under the judgment of the most intense heat and darkness, the beast worshipers will not respond positively to the eternal gospel. They will not repent or glorify God (14:6-7).

16:12-16 The sixth bowl of wrath is the preparation for the battle of Armageddon. Many derivations have been proposed for the name Armageddon. It appears to mean "hill of Megiddo." In the midst of this description is the third blessing statement of the book, warning readers to remain spiritually alert (v. 15). Some have seen the stacked references to the dragon and the beast and the false prophet as a counterfeit "trinity."

16:17-21 The final bowl of wrath is focused on Babylon the Great, seen earlier in 14:8. The wording "It is done!" echoes Jesus' declaration on the cross, "It is finished!" (Jn 19:30). The phenomena poured out in judgment have been on hold since 11:19.

17:1-6 The next section (17:1–19:6) is a postlude to the bowls of wrath, expanding the reader's understanding of Babylon the Great, her relationship with the beast, and her just and final judgment. Babylon has essentially the same relationship with the earth dwellers (17:2) as Jezebel did with the sinners in the church at Thyatira (2:20). Babylon also has a close relationship to the beast (17:3; see 13:1). Further, Babylon has the trappings of wealth and royalty (v. 4). The wider mystery of Babylon at least partly has to do with her being the source of harlotry and abominations throughout history, including the martyrdom of God's saints (vv. 5-6).

17:7-8 Another aspect of the mystery of Babylon and the beast is their hold on the earth dwellers whose names are not in the book of life (13:8).

17:9-13 In the second cryptic wisdom statement in the book (13:18), the identity of the beast is clarified as a king who emerges from a group of rulers, apparently after a number of earlier empires or rulers. While it appears to the world that these rulers are dominant, they have received authority from the Lord only for a short time ("one hour"). This wording has caused some to speculate that perhaps the beast is Nero revived or that the beast will emerge out of a revived Roman Empire or the European Union. The details are not clear enough to determine this, however, and readers must exercise caution and not go beyond what is written (1 Co 4:6).

17:14 The battle here takes place at the second coming (note the reversed wording from "King of kings and Lord of lords"; 19:16). This verse clarifies that the armies following the Lamb in 19:14 are believers, since the terms "called and elect and faithful" are not used for angels.

17:15-17 The irony here is that, in the end, the very rulers with which the pseudo-queen (v. 4; 18:7), Babylon the Great, has acted immorally (v. 2), will turn on Babylon and destroy her. This is all according to God's sovereign plan.

17:18–18:3 The description of Babylon's destruction now returns to her being pictured as "the great city" (v. 18; see 16:19). While Babylon could include an actual city in the last times, it is more likely the lament in chapter 18 is modeled after Jr 51, which speaks of the wider Babylonian Empire, represented by the city of Babylon, of which it says that it will "never rise again" (Jr 51:64). It is now revealed that Babylon is not only the woman who has caroused with the nations, kings, and merchants of the earth (Rv 18:3), but she is, at core, demonic: the dwelling place of demons and unclean spirits (18:2).

18:4 The insight into the demonic heart of Babylon the Great causes the Lord to command His people to come out of Babylon. These words clearly echo Jr 51:6,45 and God's call for Lot's family to flee Sodom (Gn 19:15). But for the message to be powerful to John's readers in the churches, it appears to be a wake-up call in relation to those in league with the Nicolaitans, those receiving the teaching of Balaam, and the "children" of the false prophetess, Jezebel (Rv 2:6,14-15,20,24).

18:5-8 Babylon may sit as a queen with a proud sense of security, but the judgment for her mountain of sins is sure and will be strong and swift. Those who doubt Christ's coming in judgment misconstrue God's incredible patience with the unrepentant world for a lack of power to bring about justice (2 Pt 3:3-9).

18:9-19,21-23 The kings (v. 9) and merchants (v. 15) distance themselves from Babylon's sudden and violent destruction. These kings and merchants do not lament Babylon's grievous sins. They are most concerned with the fact that she will no longer generate wealth for them.

18:20,24 Babylon the Great must be an age-long entity, seen in Rv at its end-times manifestation, given that she is held guilty of killing all the martyrs who have been slain on the earth.

19:1-6 The "vast multitude" here pictured as a heavenly choir singing the "Hallelujah Chorus," was taken to heaven in 7:9 and identified as the heaven dwellers by comparing 7:15 and 13:6. They now praise God for the just judgment of Babylon, the notorious prostitute. Earlier it was seen that the beast worshipers were punished for the sins of the earth dwellers (16:5-7; see 6:10). Now, because Babylon is punished for the martyrdoms earlier attributed to the earth dwellers (6:10), it appears that Babylon is somehow also a corporate image for the earth dwellers.

19:7-9 The praise of the heavenly choir now turns to the marriage of the Lamb. His bride's garb is "fine linen, bright and pure," which is interpreted as "the righteous acts of the saints" (clearly in contrast to the gross sins of Babylon). It appears that this is a change in imagery from the "vast multitude" of heaven dwellers being a choir to being the bride of the Lamb. The fourth blessing statement of the book (v. 9) has a twist: By accepting the invitation to the marriage supper one becomes part of the bride.

19:10 It is sinful to worship any being other than the one true God (Ex 20:4-7). Besides false religions, many cults and even "personality cults" (i.e., groups who elevate gifted human leaders to almost godlike status) are often guilty on this front.

19:11-16 This passage portrays the physical second coming prophesied in Ac 1:9-11. The full preterist view, claiming that Christ already came in spirit and power in the judgment of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 and that there is no future second advent, is false. The unrivaled power of God's Word is pictured as a sharp sword coming out of the Lord's mouth (Heb 4:12). Since the armies with the Lord are "wearing pure white linen," it is likely that this is another image for the same group elsewhere called the "vast multitude," the heaven dwellers and bride of the Lamb.

19:17-19,21 The great armies of the earth assembled to make war against the Lamb (apparently at Armageddon; 16:12-14, 16) and end up being slaughtered by a word out of Christ's mouth (v. 15) and are fed to birds at the "great supper of God."

19:20 The beast and the false prophet are thrown alive into the eternal lake of fire. That means that they were not destroyed and will suffer conscious torment forever.

20:1-3 Satan (the dragon of Rv) is incarcerated in the abyss for a thousand years. Some evangelicals believe that the reference to "1,000 years" is merely figurative for a long period of time. Others think it speaks of a literal period of a thousand years. Still others think that John saw a vision of a thousand years but that it is impossible to know how the apocalyptic image will actually be fulfilled.

20:4-6 Some evangelicals, following the natural order of the text, believe that the "1,000 years" will come after the second coming of Christ. Others believe that this millennium will be a recapitulation of the time prior to the second coming, viewing it from a different perspective. Among those who take the recapitulation approach, some believe that the reign of Christ is through the church now, spiritually, for a long period of time, taking "1,000 years" as a generalization. Still others believe that the preaching of the gospel will bring about virtual worldwide conversion and a golden era of dominant biblical values lasting a thousand years.

The wording about being priests of God and reigning with Him shows that the "1,000 years" is the ultimate fulfillment of earlier precious promises to believers (1:5; 5:10; 7:15). Though those who reign are not just the martyrs, clearly they have an honored position (20:4). Some have argued that the first resurrection is spiritual (e.g., being born again spiritually) in order to maintain that there is one general resurrection of the dead. There is nothing in the text, however, that indicates that one resurrection is not literal and the other is what it says it is. While the second blessing statement focused on the death of the saints (14:13), the fifth focuses on their resurrection (20:6).

20:7-10 At the end of the "1,000 years," Satan will be released from the abyss and gather a final rebellion against God, related to the well-known Gog and Magog prophecy in Ezk 38–39. Apparently this incident will be the final proof that, even after an extended unrivaled reign of Christ, "Adam's and Eve's disease" (i.e., indwelling sin) will still prompt the overwhelming proportion of mankind alive at that time to follow the devil. When the rebellion is put down by fire from heaven, the devil will join the beast and false prophet in the lake of fire.

20:11-15 There are two sets of "books" at the great white throne judgment. The names of all believers are in the book of life. The names of the earth dwellers are not in the book of life (13:8; 17:8). They are judged according to their works, but no one can ever be saved by works because that would give place for human boasting (Eph 2:8-9).

The eternal dwelling place of all unbelievers is the lake of fire with the devil, the beast, and the false prophet. "Death and Hades" (Rv 20:13), as part of the present creation, are also thrown into the lake of fire.

21:1-6 The new heaven and earth, while like the present creation in some ways, will also be very different. For example, whereas water currently covers the majority of the globe, there will be no sea on the new earth. The bride of the Lamb, introduced in 19:7-9, is now pictured as the holy city coming down out of heaven. All things will be new then, not just the Christian's new spiritual life (2 Co 5:17). God's presence will do away with tears, pain, and death. The water of life will always be available without cost, an image of the free grace that offers life to us even now.

21:7-8 The heirs of the eternal state are the victors, addressed at the end of each of the seven letters to the churches, and the martyrs, who overcome through the blood of the Lamb (12:11). All others whose lifestyles indicate that their names are not in the book of life will live eternally in the lake of fire, the second death, in conscious torment.

21:9-11 As the focus on Babylon the Great shifted from the woman to "the great city" being destroyed because of her sins (chap. 18), so the focus shifts from the bride of Christ to "the holy city," new Jerusalem, showing forth the glory of God.

21:12-21 The 12 gates of the new Jerusalem have written on them the names of the 12 tribes of Israel, while the 12 foundation stones of the wall of the eternal city have the names of the 12 apostles of Christ. This strongly implies that the overall people of God, while more unified than some believe, will in some sense maintain the distinct covenant promises made to Israel and the church.

21:22-27; 22:5 As there was light from the Lord before the creation of the light sources of the universe (Gn 1:3,14-15), so there is no need for light in the new Jerusalem. There apparently will be national distinctions and human rulers in the eternal state, but since all who will be there are in the Lamb's book of life, there can be no sin.

22:1-4 The wording here pictures the new Jerusalem as also the new and permanent Eden which cannot be relinquished because there is no longer any curse. As Adam and Eve walked with the Lord periodically in the garden, so His presence will be constant and all inhabitants will have His name on their foreheads, as had the 144,000 (14:1).

22:6-7 As the body of the book ends, the transition to the conclusion of the book (vv. 6-21) combines the wording of 1:1 and 19:10. The sixth blessing repeatsthe emphasis on the imminence of the events in Rv and the need for application of its prophecies.

22:8-9 John repeated the same mistake of false worship as in 19:10. If the godly and mature Apostle John could repeat such an error, it must be admitted how easy it is to be involved in false worship and practice. Given the concerns over God's people and Jezebel (2:20-24), as well as the command to come out of Babylon (18:4), the tendency to err in such matters is a major practical emphasis of Rv.

22:10-12 The book of Daniel was sealed up until the end time (Dn 12:4,9) to conceal its contents. In clear contrast and in light of the imminence of the events portrayed in Rv, this book is not sealed up (v. 10). Until the events of the book are fulfilled, people will act in keeping with their spiritual nature. But when the Lord comes, He will render unto each person according to his or her works (20:12-13).

22:14-15,17 The final blessing of Rv leads into an elegant presentation of the gospel, initially using the imagery of the eternal city and the new Eden. "Wash[ing] their robes" means faith in the shed blood of Christ. The right to the tree of life is what Adam and Eve were cut off from by their sin. In this case the gates of the city and access to the tree of life are made available to the believer. However, all unbelievers, with their various sinful lifestyles, are excluded from the eternal city. The repeated invitation to "Come" and "take the living water as a gift" (i.e., free grace) means the book ends on a note of passionate evangelistic appeal.

22:18-19 It is doubtful the wording here refers to closing the canon of the Bible. The "book" (Gk biblion, "scroll") that is not to be tampered with (as new religions and other groups do, adding to or taking away from the final scriptural form) is the book of Rv. However, in a more subtle manner, the wording does imply a canonical perspective. The context in Rv is of a new Eden (vv. 1-5). In Gn 3, Eve added to the Word of God (Gn 3:3) and the serpent took away from what the Lord had said (Gn 3:4). The bookend effect of Rv 22:18-19 looking back to Gn 3:3-4 infers that this curse for altering Scripture at the end of Revelation should be viewed as the last biblical word on the subject.

22:20 Jesus promised to come quickly, but it has been almost two millennia since He made that promise. John prayed for Jesus to come soon. The amazing patience of the Lord toward the unbelieving world (2 Pt 3:9) is responsible for Jesus' delay and John's unanswered prayer.

22:21 The book of Rv, though made up largely of apocalyptic material (1:1) and prophecy (1:3), begins like a letter (1:4) and, with the concluding "grace," has an epistolary ending.

HCSB BULLET NOTES

The HCSB Bullet Notes are one of the unique features of the Holman Christian Standard Bible®. These notes explain frequently used biblical words or terms. These "bullet" words (for example: •abyss) are marked with a bullet only on their first occurrence in a chapter of the biblical text. Other frequently used words, like •gate, are marked with bullets only where the use of the word fits the definitions given below. A few words in footnotes, like •acrostic, also have a bullet.

Abaddon A Hebrew word for either the grave or the realm of the dead

Abba The Aramaic word for father

abyss The bottomless pit or the depths (of the sea); it is the prison for Satan and the demons.

acrostic A device in Hebrew poetry in which each verse begins with a successive letter of the Hebrew alphabet advocate The Greek word parakletos means one called alongside to help, counsel, or protect; it is used of the Holy Spirit in Jn and in 1Jn.

Almighty The Hebrew word is El Shaddai; El means God, but the meaning of Shaddai is disputed; traditionally it is translated "Almighty."

Alpha and Omega The first and last letters of the Greek alphabet; it is used to refer to God the Father in Rv 1:8 and 21:6 and to Jesus, God the Son, in Rv 22:13.

Amen The transliteration of a Hebrew word signifying that something is certain, valid, truthful, or faithful; it is often used at the end of biblical songs, hymns, and prayers.

annihilate(d) During periods of war in Canaan and its neighboring countries, this was the destruction of a city, its inhabitants, and their possessions, including livestock.

Arabah The section of the Great Rift in Palestine, extending from the Jordan Valley and the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Aqabah; the Hebrew word can also be translated as "plain," referring to any plain or to any part of the Arabah.

Asaph A musician appointed by David to oversee the music used in worship at the Temple; 12 psalms are attributed to Asaph.

Asherah(s)/Asherah pole(s) A Canaanite fertility goddess who was the mother of the god Baal; also the wooden poles associated with the worship of her Ashtoreth(s) A Canaanite goddess of fertility, love, and war, who was the daughter of Asherah and consort of Baal; the plural form of her name in Hebrew is Ashtaroth.

Asia A Roman province that is now part of modern Turkey; it did not refer to the modern continent of Asia.

asleep A term used in reference to believers who have died atone/atonement A theological term for God's provision to deal with human sin; in the OT, it primarily means purification. In some contexts forgiveness, pardon, expiation, propitiation, or reconciliation is included. The basis of atonement is substitutionary sacrifice offered in faith. The OT sacrifices were types and shadows of the great and final sacrifice of Jesus on the cross.

Baal A fertility god who was the main god of the Canaanite religion and the god of rain and thunderstorms; it is also the Hebrew word meaning "lord," "master," "owner," or "husband."

Beelzebul A term of slander, which was variously interpreted "lord of flies," "lord of dung," or "ruler of demons"

Bread of the Presence Bread that was offered in Yahweh's presence, that is, inside His house, not out on the altar (Lv 24:5-9) burnt offering(s) Or holocaust; an offering completely burned to ashes; it was used in connection with worship, seeking God's favor, expiating sin, or averting judgment.

cause(s) the downfall of/cause(s) to sin The Greek word skandalizo has a root meaning of snare or trap but has no real English counterpart.

centurion A Roman officer who commanded about 100 soldiers

Cephas The Aramaic word for rock: it is parallel to the Greek word petros from which the English name Peter is derived.

cherub(im) A class of winged angels associated with the throne of God who function as guardians and who prevented Adam and Eve from returning to the garden of Eden chief priest(s) A group of Jewish temple officers that included the high priest, captain of the temple, temple overseers, and treasurers clean When something is clean, it is holy or acceptable to God. When it is unclean, it is unholy (such as an unclean spirit). The term can be used in a ritual sense to apply to moral standards for living.

company Or cohort; a Roman military unit that numbered as many as 600 men completely destroy During periods of war in Canaan and its neighboring countries, this was the destruction of a city, its inhabitants, and their possessions, including livestock.

Counselor The Greek word parakletos means one called alongside to help, counsel, or protect; it is used of the Holy Spirit in Jn and 1Jn.

cubit(s) An OT measurement of distance that equaled about 18 inches

Cush/Cushite The lands of the Nile in southern Egypt, including Nubia and Northern Sudan; also the people who lived in that region

Decapolis Originally, it referred to a federation of 10 Gentile towns east of the Jordan River.

denarius/denarii A small silver Roman coin, which was equal to a day's wage for a common laborer divination An attempt to foresee future events or discover hidden knowledge by means of physical objects such as water, arrows, flying birds, or animal livers drink offering(s) An offering of a specified amount of wine or beer given along with animal sacrifices; it was poured over the sacrifice before it was burned.

engaged Jewish engagement was a binding agreement that could only be broken by divorce.

ephod A vest-like garment extending below the waist and worn under the breastpiece; it was used by both the priests and the high priest.

everyone Literally sons of man or sons of Adam family redeemer A family member who had certain obligations of marriage, redeeming an estate, and punishment of a wrongdoer fear(s) God or the LORD/fear of the Lord No single English word conveys every aspect of the word fear in this phrase. The meaning includes worshipful submission, reverential awe, and obedient respect to the covenant-keeping God of Israel.

firstfruits The agricultural products harvested first and given to God as an offering with more products to come in later harvests; it is also used as a metaphor for the first people to come to faith or for Jesus, the first person to rise from the dead, or for the Spirit who is given to believers as the first portion (or down payment) of our salvation with more to come in eternity.

fellowship sacrifice(s)/or offering(s) An animal offering was given to maintain and strengthen a person's relationship with God. It was not required as a remedy for impurity or sin but was an expression of thanksgiving for various blessings. An important function of this sacrifice was to provide meat for the priests and the participants in the sacrifice; also called the peace offering or the sacrifice of well-being.

gate(s) The center for community discussions, political meetings, and trying of court cases

Gittith Perhaps an instrument, musical term, tune from Gath, or song for the grape harvest

God Almighty The Hebrew word is El Shaddai; El means God, but the meaning of Shaddai is disputed; traditionally it is translated “Almighty.”

grain offering(s) An offering given along with animal sacrifices or given by itself; a portion was burnt and the priests and participant ate the remainder.

guilt/guilty The liability to be punished for a fault, a sin, an act, or an omission unless there is forgiveness or atonement; the term normally concerns an objective fact, not a subjective feeling.

Hades The Greek word for the place of the dead; it corresponds to the Hebrew word Sheol.

Hallelujah! Or Praise the LORD!; it literally means Praise Yah! (a shortened form of Yahweh).

headquarters The Latin word Praetorium was used by Greek writers for the residence of the Roman governor; it may also refer to military headquarters, the imperial court, or the emperor’s guard.

Hebrew Or Aramaic; the translation of this word is debated since some claim Aramaic was commonly spoken in Palestine during NT times. More recently others claim that Hebrew was the spoken language.

hell/hellfire The Greek word is gehenna; it is the Aramaic term for the Valley of Hinnom on the south side of Jerusalem; formerly, it was a place of human sacrifice, and in NT times, a place for the burning of garbage; it is the place of final judgment for those rejecting Christ.

Herod Name of the Idumean family ruling Palestine from 37 b.c. to a.d. 95; the main rulers from this family mentioned in the NT are:

Herod I (37 b.c.–4 b.c.) He was also known as Herod the Great; he built the great temple in Jerusalem and massacred the male babies in Bethlehem.

Herod Antipas (4 b.c.–a.d. 39) The son of Herod the Great; he ruled one-fourth of his father’s kingdom (Galilee and Perea); he killed John the Baptist and mocked Jesus.

Herod Agrippa I (a.d. 37–44) The grandson of Herod the Great; he beheaded James the apostle and imprisoned Peter.

Herod Agrippa II (a.d. 52–ca 95) The great-grandson of Herod the Great; he heard Paul’s defense.

Herodians They were the political supporters of Herod the Great and his family.

hidden plan Translation of the Greek word mysterion; it is a secret hidden in the past but now revealed.

Higgaion Term used for a musical notation, for a device denoting a pause in an instrumental interlude, or for a murmuring harp tone high place(s) An ancient place of worship most often associated with pagan religions; it was usually built on an elevated location.

horn A symbol of power based on the strength of animal horns

Hosanna A term of praise derived from the Hebrew word for save

Host(s) Military forces consisting of God's angels, sometimes including the sun, moon, and stars, and occasionally Israel human race Literally sons of man or sons of Adam

I assure you This is a phrase used only by Jesus to testify to the certainty and importance of His words; in Mt, Mk, and Lk it is literally Amen, I say to you; in Jn it is literally Amen, amen, I say to you.

Jews In Jn, the term Jews usually indicates those in Israel who were opposed to Jesus, particularly the Jewish authorities in Jerusalem who led the nation.

justification/justify/justified The act of God as judge that declares sinners (who were in the wrong) to be right or righteous in His sight. God is just in doing this because Jesus died on the cross to take away their sins and to give them His own righteousness (2Co 5:21). The sinner receives this justification by faith and by grace when he trusts Christ's work.

language(s) The Greek word glossa has traditionally (ca 1530) been translated as "tongue" because the Gk word is used for the organ of speech as well as for a language. Some see glossolalia as having a specialized meaning: either ecstatic speech or heavenly languages.

Leviathan Or twisting one; a mythological sea serpent or dragon associated with the chaos at creation; sometimes it is applied to an animal such as a crocodile.

life/lives The same Greek word (psyche) can be translated life or soul.

mankind Literally sons of man or sons of Adam

Mary Magdalene Or Mary of Magdala; Magdala was probably a town on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, north of Tiberias.

Maskil It is from a Hebrew word meaning to be prudent or to have insight; it could also mean a contemplative, instructive, or wisdom psalm.

men Literally sons of man or sons of Adam mercy seat Or place of atonement; it was the gold lid on the ark of the covenant that was first in the tabernacle and later in the temple.

Messiah Or the Christ; the Greek word is Christos and means the anointed one. Where the NT emphasizes Christos as a name of our Lord or has a Gentile context, "Christ" is used. Where the NT Christos has a Jewish context, the title “Messiah” is used.

Miktam A musical term of uncertain meaning; it possibly denotes a plaintive style.

Milcom An Ammonite god who was the equivalent of Baal, the Canaanite storm god

Molech A Canaanite god associated with death and the underworld; the worship ritual of passing someone through the fire is connected with him. This ritual could have been either fire-walking or child sacrifice.

Most High The Hebrew word is Elyon; it is often used with other names of God, such as Hebrew El (God) or Yahweh (LORD); it is used to refer to God as the supreme being.

Mount of Olives A mountain east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley mystery Translation of the Greek word mysterion; it is a secret hidden in the past but now revealed.

Nazarene A person from Nazareth; growing up in Nazareth was an aspect of the Messiah’s humble beginnings.

Negev An arid region in the southern part of Israel; the Hebrew word means south.

offend(ed) The Greek word skandalizo has a root meaning of snare or trap but has no real English counterpart.

offspring This term is used literally or metaphorically to refer to plants or grain, sowing or harvest, male reproductive seed, human children or physical descendants, and also to spiritual children or to Christ (Gl 3:16).

One and Only Or one of a kind, or incomparable, or only begotten; the Greek word can refer to someone’s only child as in Lk 7:12; 8:42; 9:38. It can also refer to someone’s special child as in Heb 11:17.

oracle A prophetic speech of a threatening or menacing character; it was often spoken against the nations.

overseer(s) Or elder(s), or bishop(s) palace The Latin word Praetorium was used by Greek writers for the residence of the Roman governor; it may also refer to military headquarters, the imperial court, or the emperor’s guard.

Passover The Israelite festival celebrated on the fourteenth day of the first month, in the early spring; it was a celebration of the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt, commemorating the final plague on Egypt when the firstborn were killed.

people Literally sons of man, or sons of Adam perverted men Literally sons of Belial; in Hebrew, the basic meaning of Belial is worthless.

Pharisee(s) A religious sect of Judaism that followed the whole written and oral law

Pilate Pontius Pilate was governor of the province of Judea a.d. 26–36.

Pit A term for either the grave or the realm of the dead proconsul The chief Roman government official in a senatorial province who presided over Roman court hearings propitiation The removal of divine wrath; Jesus' death is the means that turns God's wrath from the sinner.

proselyte(s) A person from another race or religion who went through a prescribed ritual to become a Jew

Rabbi The Hebrew word means my great one; it is used for a recognized teacher of the Scriptures.

Rabshakeh The title of a high-ranking Assyrian official who was the chief cupbearer to the king

Rahab Or boisterous one; it is the name of a mythological sea serpent or dragon defeated at the time of creation. Scripture sometimes uses the name metaphorically to describe Egypt.

redemption/redeemed The deliverance from bondage by a payment or ransom (Mk 10:45; 1Pt 1:18-19)

Red Sea Literally Sea of Reeds regiment Or cohort; a Roman military unit that numbered as many as 600 men restitution offering(s) An offering that was a penalty for unintentional sins, primarily committed in relation to the tabernacle or temple; it is traditionally translated trespass or guilt offering.

sackcloth A garment made of poor quality material and worn as a sign of grief and mourning sacred bread Literally bread of presentation; these were 12 loaves of bread, representing the 12 tribes of Israel and put on the table in the holy place in the tabernacle and later in the temple. The priests ate the previous week's loaves.

Sadducee(s) A religious sect of Judaism that mainly followed the first 5 books of the OT (the Torah or Pentateuch) saint(s)/sanctification/sanctify/sanctified The work of the Holy Spirit that separates believers in Jesus from the world; at the time of saving faith in Jesus, the believer is made a saint; therefore, all believers are saints. The believer participates with the Spirit in a process of transformation that continues until glorification. The goal of sanctification is progressive conformity to the image of Jesus Christ.

Samaritan(s) A people of mixed, Gentile/Jewish ancestry who lived between Galilee and Judea and were hated by the Jews Sanhedrin The supreme council of Judaism; it had 70 members and was patterned after Moses' 70 elders.

scribe(s) A professional group in Judaism that copied the law of Moses and interpreted it, especially in legal cases secret Translation of the Greek word mysterion; it is a secret hidden in the past but now revealed.

seed This term is used literally or metaphorically to refer to plants or grain, sowing or harvest, male reproductive seed, human children or physical descendants, and also to spiritual children or to Christ (Gl 3:16).

Selah A Hebrew word whose meaning is uncertain; various interpretations include: (1) a musical notation, (2) a pause for silence, (3) a signal for worshipers to fall prostrate on the ground, (4) a term for the worshipers to call out, and (5) a word meaning forever.

set apart for destruction During periods of war in Canaan and its neighboring countries, this was the destruction of a city, its inhabitants, and their possessions, including livestock.

shekel(s) In the OT the shekel is a measurement of weight that came to be used as money, either gold or silver.

Sheminith A musical term meaning instruments or on the instrument of eight strings

Sheol A Hebrew word for either the grave or the realm of the dead

Shinar A land in Mesopotamia, including ancient Sumer and Babylon; it is modern Iraq.

sin offering(s) Or purification offering; it was the most important OT sacrifice for cleansing from impurities. It provided purification from sin and certain forms of ceremonial uncleanness.

slave(s) The strong Greek word doulos cannot be accurately translated in English as servant or bond servant; the HCSB translates this word as slave, not out of insensitivity to the legitimate concerns of modern English speakers, but out of a commitment to accurately convey the brutal reality of the Roman empire's inhumane institution as well as the ownership called for by Christ.

Son of Man Most frequent title Jesus used for Himself (Dn 7:13; Mt 8:20) song of ascents A term that probably refers to the songs pilgrims sang as they traveled the roads going up to worship in Jerusalem (Pss 120–134) soul The same Greek word (psyche) can be translated life or soul.

stumble The Greek word skandalizo has a root meaning of snare or trap but has no real English counterpart.

synagogue This is a place where the Jewish people met for prayer, worship, and teaching of the Scriptures.

tabernacle(s) Or tent, or shelter; a term used for temporary housing.

take offense The Greek word skandalizo has a root meaning of snare or trap but has no real English counterpart.

tassel Fringe put on the clothing of devout Jews to remind them to keep the law temple complex In the Jerusalem temple, the complex included the sanctuary (the holy place and the holy of holies), at least 4 courtyards (for priests, Jews, women, and Gentiles), numerous gates, and several covered walkways.

testimony A reference to either the Mosaic law in general or to a specific section of the law, the Ten Commandments, which were written on stone tablets and placed in the ark of the covenant (also called the ark of the testimony)

Topheth A place of human sacrifice that was located outside Jerusalem in the Hinnom Valley (Jr 7:31-32) unclean When something is clean, it is holy or acceptable to God. When it is unclean, it is unholy (such as an unclean spirit). The term can be used in a ritual sense to apply to moral standards for living.

Unleavened Bread A seven-day festival celebrated in conjunction with the Passover (Ex 12:1-20)

Urim & Thummim Two objects used by Israelite priests to determine God's will wadi A valley, ravine, or stream that is dry except in the rainy season walk(ed)/walking A term often used in a figurative way to mean "way of life" or "behavior" wicked men Literally sons of Belial; in Hebrew, the basic meaning of Belial is worthless.

wise men The Greek word is magoi; the English word "magi" is based on a Persian word. They were eastern sages who observed the heavens for signs and omens.

woman When used in direct address, "Woman" was not a term of disrespect but of honor.

world The organized Satanic system that is opposed to God and hostile to Jesus and His followers; it also refers to the non-Christian culture including governments, educational systems, and businesses.

wormwood A small shrub that was used as a medicinal herb and noted for its bitter taste

Yah/Yahweh Or The LORD; it is the personal name of God in Hebrew; “Yah” is the shortened form. Yahweh is used in places where the personal name of God is discussed (Ps 68:4) or in places of His self-identification (Is 42:8).

Zion Originally a term for the fortified section of Jerusalem and then, by extension, used for the temple and the city of Jerusalem both in the present time and in the future

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY IN APOLOGETICS, RELIGIOUS PLURALISM, AND NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS

Douglas R. Groothuis, Ph.D., Denver Seminary

I. RECOMMENDED BOOKS IN CHRISTIAN APOLOGETICS

A. Recommended reference and general books in philosophy and apologetics

These fill out the spectrum of intellectual difficulty (not overall quality) from basic (B) to intermediate (I) to advanced (A). (I)/(A) means: "intermediate to advanced" or "between intermediate and advanced."

1. Audi, Robert, ed. The Cambridge Dictionary of Philosophy. Cambridge City: University Press, 1995; 2nd ed., 1999. Excellent, thorough, one-volume reference work.

2. Campbell-Jack, W. C., Gavin J. McGrath, and C. Stephen Evans, eds. New Dictionary of Christian Apologetics. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2006. Thorough resource written by qualified writers.

3. Craig, Edward, ed. Routledge Encyclopedia of Philosophy. New York: Routledge, 1998. Best contemporary, in-depth, multi-volume reference work. Available in the library. Also comes in a one-volume, condensed edition.

4. Evans, C. Stephen. Pocket Dictionary of Apologetics and Philosophy of Religion. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2002. Excellent short reference. Ideal for those with little or no background in these areas.

5. Geisler, Norman. Baker Encyclopedia of Christian Apologetics. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ.Group, 1999. This must be used with caution. No one person can cover this much material at a high level of quality. Explicitly philosophical topics are often addressed better in other works. (For instance, the entry on "Alvin Plantinga" is inadequate.) However, there is much helpful material, such as the essay on prophecy, the problem of evil, the virgin birth, etc.

6. Kreeft, Peter, and Ronald Tacelli. Handbook of Christian Apologetics. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1994. Well-written, witty, covers many important topics fairly briefly. Defects include their view of salvation in other religions and an ill-fated attempt to downplay theological differences between Protestantism and Roman Catholicism. The authors are Roman Catholic.

7. Moreland, J. P., and William Lane Craig. Philosophical Foundations for a Christian Worldview. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2003. A comprehensive and tightly argued approach to nearly all the philosophical issues related to Christian theism. (I)/(A)

8. Weston, Anthony. A Rulebook for Arguments, 3rd ed. Indianapolis, IN: Hackett, 2001. A concise guide to philosophical argumentation in writing papers. It is not written from a Christian perspective, and even takes some shots at Christianity; but a helpful resource, nevertheless. This book will help students with no background in philosophy to learn how to write philosophical papers.

B. Recommended periodicals that address apologetics

1. Aeropagus

2. The Christian Research Journal

C. General Books on Christian Apologetics

The following books cover a variety of topics, as I try to explain in the annotation.

1. Archer, Gleason. Encyclopedia of Biblical Difficulties. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1982. A respected Old Testament scholar assesses the major problem passages in both Testa-ments. (I)

2. Augustine, Saint. The Confessions. Many editions. Classic statement of how and why this great church father came to faith.

3. Beckwith, Francis, et al. To Everyone an Answer. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2004. Very good collection of apologetics essays. (B)

4. Blamires, Harry. The Christian Mind. 1963. Ann Arbor, MI: Servant Publications, 1997. Although some aspects of the author's high Anglicanism won't suit some evangelicals, Blamires laments the lack of a Christian mind, outlines its essence, and contrasts it with secular thinking. A classic. (I)

5. Blomberg, Craig. The Historical Reliability of the Gospels. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1987. Classic modern defense. (I)/(A)

6. Blomberg, Craig. The Historical Reliability of John. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2002. Major modern defense of the reliability of John. (I)/(A)

7. Burson, Scott R., and Jerry L. Walls. C.S. Lewis and Francis Schaeffer: Lessons for a New Century from the Most Influential Apologists of Our Time. Downer's Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1998. Good exposition of both thinkers, but the authors like things in Lewis that lean in a more liberal direction and do not like Schaeffer's Calvinism very much. Nevertheless, it is worthwhile overall. (I)

8. Carnell, Edward John. An Introduction to Christian Apologetics. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1948. Pioneering work in the "cumulative case method" of apologetics. The first book by a brilliant young leader of the then young evangelical movement. (I)

9. Carroll, Vincent, and David Shiflett. Christianity on Trial: Arguments Against Anti-Religious Bigotry. San Francisco: Encounter Books, 2001. Convincingly argues that Christianity has not been bad news for civilization—despite popular cliches, half-truths, and outright lies to the contrary. It presents a strong case that Christian ideals are behind many beneficial aspects of culture.

10. Carson, D. A., ed. Telling the Truth. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2000. Collection of essays on reaching postmodern culture. Especially excellent are essays by Carson and Ajith Fernando. (I)

11. Carson, D. A. The Gagging of God: Christianity Confronts Pluralism. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1996. Comprehensive biblical and theological critique of pluralistic theologies. (I)

12. Carson, D. A. How Long, O Lord? 2nd ed. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 2006. Classic treatment on the problem of evil. Very strong on biblical reflections.

13. Chesterton, G. K. Orthodoxy. Many editions. Classic defense of orthodoxy against heresy and confusion. Rare wit and insight from 1908. Available in various editions. (I)

14. Chesterton, G. K. The Everlasting Man. Garden City, NY: Image Books, 1955. Important, witty, and wise apologetic work that influenced C. S. Lewis considerably. (I)

15. Clark, David. Dialogical Apologetics. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1994. An approach that highlights the person-sensitive and relational aspects of apologetic argument. (I)

16. Clark, Gordon. A Christian View of Men and Things. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1953. Attempts to deduce Christian perspectives on various issues with a focus on epistemology. (I)

17. Clark, Gordon. Thales to Dewey: A History of Philosophy. Unicoi, TN: Trinity Foundation, 1989. First published by a secular publisher as a textbook, this history, which focuses on epistemology, has an implicit apologetic for Christian theism. It is one of the rare books of its kind to discuss Jesus' philosophy as well. A worthy reference. Republished by the Trinity Foundation in several editions. (I)

18. Clark, Kelly James, ed. Philosophers Who Believe. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1993. Important Christian philosophers, such as Alvin Plantinga, Stephen T. Davis, and Nicholas Wolterstorff, explain why they believe in Christianity.

19. Copan, Paul, ed. Will the Real Jesus Please Stand Up? Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1998. A debate between William Lane Craig and John Crossan, with responses by others (including Craig Blomberg) on both sides of the issue. (I)

20. Copan, Paul, and Ronald Tacelli, eds. Jesus' Resurrection: Fact or Fiction? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2000. Debate between William Lane Craig and Gerd Ludeman with responses by others on both sides of the issue. (I)

21. Copan, Paul and Paul K. Moser, eds. The Rationality of Theism. New York: Routledge, 2003. A collection of top notch essays by Christian philosophers on many topics. (I)/(A)

22. Copan, Paul. How Do You Know You Are Not Wrong? Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 2005. Short chapters on common objections brought against Christianity. (B)

23. Corduan, Winfried. Neighboring Faiths: A Christian Introduction to World Religions. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1998. Includes an important chapter on Native American religion, a topic not usually covered in these sorts of volumes. (I)

24. Corduan, Winfried. No Doubt About it. Nashville, TN: Broadman and Holman, 1997. An excellent and wide-ranging work of apologetics. Readable and challenging. (B)/(I)

25. Cowan, Steven, ed. Five Views of Apologetics. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1999. Presentations and critiques from William Lane Craig (Classical apologetics); Gary Habermas (Evidentialism); Paul Feinberg (Cumulative Case Method); John Frame (Presuppositionalism); and Kelly James Clark (Reformed Epistemology). (A)

26. Craig, William Lane. Reasonable Faith: Christian Truth and Apologetics. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1994. Excellent and thorough treatment by a leading Christian philosopher. Nothing on the problem of evil or creation-evolution, however. (I)/(A)

27. Dembski, William, ed. Mere Creation: Science, Faith, and Intelligent Design. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1998. Path-breaking material from a major conference on intelligent design. Contributions from Phillip Johnson, Michael Behe, and other notables. (I)/(A)

28. Dembski, William. Intelligent Design. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1999. Major statement of the theory behind the Intelligent Design Movement. (I)/(A).

29. Dembski, William. The Design Revolution. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2004. Made of many short chapters that answer questions raised about intelligent design theory. (I)

30. Downing, David. Most Reluctant Convert: C.S. Lewis's Journey to Faith. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2002. Excellent assessment of the reasons why Lewis moved from atheism to Christianity. It thus has biographical and apologetic significance. (I)

31. Erickson, Millard. Truth or Consequences. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2001. Thorough and careful assessment of postmodernism. One of the best evangelical treatments available.

32. Evans, C. Stephen. Philosophy of Religion. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1985. Excellent introduction to the subject offering many important apologetic points. (I)

33. Geisler, Norman, and Paul Hoffman, eds. Why I Am A Christian: Leading Christians Explain Why They Believe. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 2001. Very good contributions overall by top-notch scholars, such as William Lane Craig, Gary Habermas, and Hugh Ross, on a variety of standard apologetic topics. (B)/(I)

34. Geisler, Norman, and Abdul Saleeb. Answering Islam. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1993. Examines Islam theologically and historically and gives apologetic arguments against its claims to usurp Christianity. (I)

35. Geisler, Norman. Christian Apologetics. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1976. Gives extensive attention to apologetic methodology, assesses non-Christian worldviews, and develops a neo-Thomist approach to defending evangelical Christianity.

36. Geivett, Douglas R., and Gary R. Habermas, eds. In Defense of Miracles: A Comprehensive Case for God's Action in History. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1997. Excellent contributions from leading scholars, such as William Lane Craig, Stephen T. Davis, and David Clark, on all the important aspects of the question of miracles. (I)

37. Groothuis, Douglas. Unmasking the New Age: Is There a New Religious Movement Trying to Transform Society? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1986. An exposition and analysis of New Age thinking now somewhat dated. Nevertheless, it still addresses the main themes of what is now called "the new spirituality" or just "spirituality." (I)

38. Groothuis, Douglas. Confronting the New Age: How to Resist a Growing Religious Movement. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1988. An apologetic and action-oriented approach to addressing the New Age worldview and its social manifestations. (I)

39. Groothuis, Douglas. Are All Religions One? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996. Booklet comparing Christianity, Islam, and nondualist Hinduism in order to show that religions are not all one. (B)/(I)

40. Groothuis, Douglas. Jesus in an Age of Controversy. Eugene, OR: Wipf and Stock reprint, 2002. Defends the biblical view against mostly New Age alternatives. (I)

41. Groothuis, Douglas. On Pascal. Belmont, CA: Wadsworth/Thomson Learning, 2003. A short overview of Pascal's philosophy, science, and apologetics. (B)

42. Groothuis, Douglas. On Jesus. Belmont, CA: Wadsworth/Thomson Learning, 2003. Treats Jesus as a philosopher and explains his worldview. (B)

43. Guinness, Os. The Dust of Death. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1994. Originally published in 1973 (by InterVarsity) and now updated, this study of the philosophy of the counterculture still has apologetic value in its critique of secular humanism and Eastern mysticism. (I)

44. Guinness, Os. The Gravedigger File. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1983. Explains the social conditions—privatization, pluralization, secularization—that tend to impede Christian witness. Written in a kind of Screwtape Letters format. Takes important material from the sociology of religion and makes it more accessible. (I)

45. Guinness, Os. Fit Bodies, Fat Minds. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1994. A short but powerful assessment of anti-intellectualism in American evangelicalism and what can be done about it. (I)

46. Guinness, Os. God in the Dark. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1994. Classic treatment of the problem of doubt in the Christian life. Originally published by InterVarsity Press as

In Two Minds. (I)
47. Guinness, Os. Long Journey Home. Colorado Springs, CO: Waterbrook, 2001. A rare apologetics book oriented toward the person who has some inkling that there is something more to life, but is not yet drawn to Christianity. (B)
48. Guinness, Os. A Time for Truth. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 2000. Short, but cogent critique of the postmodern loss of truthfulness and a call to restoration. (I)
49. Guinness, Os. Unspeakable: Facing up to Evil in an Age of Genocide and Terror. San Francisco: Harper San Francisco, 2005. A wise Christian response to the problem of evil. (I)
50. Habermas, Gary. The Historical Jesus. Joplin, MO: College Press, 1996. Excellent on historical and extra-biblical evidence for Jesus. (I)
51. Habermas, Gary. The Risen Jesus and Future Hope. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield, 2003. An historical apologetic for the resurrection and an exploration of the implications of that doctrine.
52. Halverson, Dean, ed. Compact Guide to World Religions. Minneapolis, MN: Bethany House Publishers, 1996. Excellent introductory exposition and apologetic engagement on major religions. Supplemental apologetic material also. (B)
53. Henry, Carl F. H. God, Revelation, and Authority. 6 vols. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1999. This monumental, erudite, and wide-ranging work of philosophical theology covers many pertinent apologetic topics. Written by a pivotal evangelical intellectual who helped spark and sustain modern evangelicalism. (I)/(A)
54. Jenkins, Philip. Hidden Gospels: How the Search for Jesus Lost Its Way. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001. A critical look at the impetus behind the reconstructions of Jesus by liberal scholars. (I)
55. Johnson, Phillip E. Darwin on Trial. Rev. ed. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1993. A penetrating critique of naturalistic theories of macro-evolution on the basis of the logical and evidential problems with the theory itself. (I)
56. Johnson, Phillip E. Reason in the Balance: The Case Against Naturalism in Science, Law, and Education. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1995. Traces the wider implications of naturalism and its philosophical problems. (I)
57. Johnson, Phillip E. Defeating Darwinism by Opening Minds. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1997. Simplified version of Darwin on Trial with an emphasis on spotting logical problems in Darwinism. (B)
58. Johnson, Phillip E. Objections Sustained. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1998. Collection of essays on evolution and culture. (I)
59. Johnson, Phillip E. The Wedge of Truth. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2000. Explains the rationale of the Intelligent Design Movement's attempt to overthrow the domination of naturalism in modern science. (I)
60. Keener, Craig, and Glenn Usry. Defending Black Faith: Answers to Tough Questions About African-American Christianity. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1997. A follow-up volume to Black Man's Religion (see 95 below). (I)
61. Komoszewski, J. Ed, M. James Sawyer, and Daniel B. Wallace. Reinventing Jesus: What the Da Vinci Code and Other Novel Speculations Don't Tell You. Grand Rapids, MI: Kregal Publications, 2006.
62. Lewis, C. S. Mere Christianity. Many editions. Good on the moral argument and the deity of Jesus; weak on some theological points, such as the atonement. Marvelously written, of course.

(B)/(I)

63. Lewis, C. S. The Abolition of Man. New York: Macmillan, 1947. Brilliant attack on relativistic naturalism. (I)

64. Lewis, C. S. Miracles: A Preliminary Study. New York: Macmillan Publishing, 1978. A classic study of the supernaturalism of Christianity in relation to naturalism and pantheism. (I)

65. Lewis, C. S. God in the Dock. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1970. Superior collection of essays, many related to apologetics. See especially the essay, "Christian Apologetics." (I)

66. Lewis, Gordon. Testing Christianity's Truth Claims. Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1990. An excellent analysis of various modern apologetic methodologies, with special emphasis on E. J. Carnell. (I)

67. McDowell, Josh. Evidence for Christianity. Nashville, TN: Nelson Reference & Electronic, 2006. This is a treasury of apologetics resources from one of the most influential and effective Christian apologists of the last four decades.

68. McGrath, Alister E. Intellectuals Don't Need God and Other Modern Myths. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1993. A generally helpful approach to modern apologetics and much better than A Passion for Truth, which I critique in my book, Truth Decay. (B)/(I)

69. Montgomery, John Warwick. Faith Founded on Fact. Nashville, TN: T. Nelson, 1978. Montgomery is one of the leading evidentialist apologists with a long and distinguished career of debates and publications. An excellent collection of essays.

70. Moreland, J. P. Scaling the Secular City: A Defense of Christianity. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1987. A powerful apologetics for Christianity covering natural theology, the reliability of the New Testament, and the relationship of Christianity and science. (I)

71. Moreland, J. P. Love Your God With All Your Mind. Colorado Springs, CO: NavPress, 1997. Excellent introduction to developing a Christian mind, with many practical suggestions (about the church and personal spiritual disciplines) as well as philosophical arguments. (I)

72. Moreland, J. P. Christianity and the Nature of Science. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1989. High-level work on the relationship of philosophy of science and the Christian worldview. Excellent material on how the biblical view of creation is not unscientific. (I)/(A)

73. Morris, Thomas V., ed. God and the Philosophers: The Reconciliation of Faith and Reason. New York: Oxford University Press, 1994. Collection of essays by leading philosophers, such as Arthur Holmes and George Mavrodes, who are also theists (mostly Christians), which addresses the rationality of theism and Christianity.

74. Murray, Michael J., ed. Reason for the Hope Within. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1999. Collection of essays on apologetics written by younger Christian philosophers. Many of the essays tend to be a bit timid apologetically, but it is encouraging and instructive to find Christian philosophers early in their careers joining the apologetic cause. (I)

75. Nash, Ronald. Faith and Reason: Searching for a Rational Faith. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1988. Survey of the philosophy of religion from an evangelical perspective. Strong material on the reality of miracles.

76. Netland, Harold. Dissonant Voices: Christians and Religious Pluralism. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1991. Excellent discussion of the teachings of major world religions and how Christians should assess other religious worldviews theologically and apologetically. Descriptively accurate on the nature and teachings of religions as well as philosophically acute.

77. Netland, Harold. Encountering Religious Pluralism. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2001. Elaborates and further develops themes from Dissonant Voices, but also contains new material on modernity, postmodernity, and other issues. Clearly written and penetrating. (I)

77. Pascal, Blaise. The Mind on Fire. Ed. James Houston. Minneapolis, MN: Bethany House Publishers, reprint 1997. An edited collection of Pascal's works. Excellent introduction by Os Guinness. For the complete Pensées, see the Penguin edition (1966), edited by A. Krailsheimer. (I)

78. Phillips, Timothy, and Dennis Okholm, eds. Christian Apologetics in the Postmodern World. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1995. Essays are mixed in quality (the Kenneson piece is abysmally atrocious), but all give an understanding of the postmodern challenge. (I)

79. Plantinga, Alvin. Warranted Christian Belief. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000. Major work defending the "Reformed epistemology" perspective on apologetics. Excellent critiques of the anti-Christian theories of Freud, Marx, postmodernism, etc. (A)

80. Powell, Doug. Holman QuickSource Guide to Christian Apologetics. Nashville, TN: B&H Publishing Group, 2006. This volume may be the most accessible introduction to and overview of Christian apologetics. Lucid presentation with beautiful, well-chosen graphics for the visual generation.

81. Ramachandra, Vinoth. Faiths in Conflict: Christian Integrity in a Multicultural World. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1999. Challenges the idea that religious conflict is the major cause of all conflict between cultures. (I)

82. Reppert, Victor. C. S. Lewis's Dangerous Idea: In Defense of the Argument from Reason. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2003. An superb updating of Lewis's famous argument from Miracles. (I)

83. Samples, Kenneth. Without a Doubt. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 2004. Superb apologetics overview.

84. Schaeffer, Francis A. The God Who is There, 30th anniversary ed. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1998. First published in 1968. A prophetic book that roused many from their anti-apologetics slumbers. Still worth pondering. A pivotal book in my journey into apologetics and Christian witness. (I)

85. Schaeffer, Francis A. The Collected Works of Francis Schaeffer. Five vols. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1985. From the late 1960s until his death in 1984, Schaeffer wrote rafts of important books covering theology, apologetics, ethics, and cultural criticism—all collected here. These books, while not technical scholarship (and sometimes a bit swashbuckling), influenced scores of young evangelicals—myself included—to apply Christian truth in the world of ideas and culture. Young evangelicals of the 21st century would do well to read these works as well. (I)

86. Sennett, James F., and Douglas Groothuis. In Defense of Natural Theology: A Post Humean Assessment. Downers Grove, IL: Inter Varsity Press, 2005. A commendation of natural theology in light of Hume's famous, but overrated criticisms of such.

87. Sheler, Jeffery L. Is the Bible True? How Modern Debates and Discoveries Affirm the Essence of the Scriptures. San Francisco: Harper San Francisco, 1999. A religion journalist from US News and World Report investigates the reliability of both Testaments. Basic, but helpful. (B)

88. Sire, James W. The Universe Next Door, 4th ed. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2004. A model work on world view comparisons. Very well written with many illustrations from literature. A durable and outstanding work. (I)

89. Sire, James W. Why Should Anyone Believe Anything at All? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1994. A readable case for Christianity, emphasizing the identity of Jesus. (I)

90. Sire, James W. Habits of the Mind. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2000. A wonderful book on how a Christian ought to develop the life of the mind. (I)/(A)

91. Sire, James. Why Good Arguments Fail. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2006. A study of the logic and rhetoric of apologetics.

92. Sproul, R. C. Not a Chance: The Myth of Chance in Modern Science and Cosmology. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1994. An able philosophical critique of the metaphysical status of chance in contemporary naturalism. (I)

93. Strobel, Lee. The Case for Christ. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1998. Strobel takes a journalistic approach by interviewing experts—such as Craig Blomberg, William Lane Craig, and J. P. Moreland—on the historicity and identity of Jesus. The result is an introductory survey of the case for the reliability of the NT and the deity of Christ. For the more developed apologetic arguments, read the people Strobel interviews. (B)

94. Strobel, Lee. The Case for Faith. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2000. This follow up to The Case for Christ uses the same form of interviewing Christian experts—such as Peter Kreeft, Norman Geisler, and Ravi Zacharias—on apologetic questions. This time objections to faith are in view, such as the problem of evil and evolution. (B)

95. Strobel, Lee. The Case for a Creator. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2004. Focuses on scientific arguments for God, especially those of intelligent design. (B)

96. Usry, Glen, and Craig S. Keener. Black Man's Religion: Can Christianity be Afrocentric? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996. An apologetic dealing with key concerns of the African American community. (I)

97. Van Voorst, Robert E. Jesus Outside the New Testament. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2000. Probably the best contemporary source on this subject. (I)/(A)

98. Wright, N. T. The Resurrection of the Son of God. Minneapolis, MN: Augsburg Fortress Publishers, 2003. A masterful defense of the resurrection by a world-class New Testament scholar.

99. Wright, N. T. Evil and the Justice of God. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2006. Short, generally wise treatment of the problem of evil from the biblical perspective on redemption.

II. RECOMMENDED BOOKS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS PLURALISM AND WORLD RELIGIONS

1. Adler, Mortimer. Truth In Religion. New York: Macmillan, 1990. Argues that religions teach different things and thus cannot all be true. (I)

2. Anderson, Norman. Christianity and World Religions: The Challenge of Pluralism. Downers Grove: IL: InterVarsity Press, 1985. (I)

3. Berger, Peter L., ed. The Desecularization of the World: Resurgent Religion and World Politics. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1999. Challenges the idea that the modern world is becoming increasingly secular in accordance with sociological forces. (I)

4. Clark, Andrew, and Bruce Winter. One God, One Lord: Christianity in a World of Religious Pluralism. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1992. (I)

5. Corduan, Winfried. Mysticism: An Evangelical Option? Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1991. (I)

6. Crockett, William, and James Sigountos, eds. Through No Fault of Their Own: The Fate of Those Who Have Never Heard. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1991. (I)

7. Erickson, Millard. How Shall They Be Saved? The Destiny of Those Who Do Not Hear of Jesus. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Books, 1996. (I)

8. Fernando, Ajith. The Supremacy of Christ. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1995. Excellent defense of Jesus as Lord, based on John 14:6. (B)/(I)

9. Fernando, Ajith. Sharing the Truth in Love. Grand Rapids, MI: Discovery House, 2001. Helpful update of his earlier book, The Christian Attitude Towards World Religions (Tyndale, 1987). (B)/(I)

10. Gabriel, Mark. Jesus and Mohammad: Profound Differences and Surprising Similarities. Lake Mary, FL: Charisma House, 2004. Written by an ex-Muslim who taught Islamic history. Makes a strong case for Christianity over Islam.

11. Griffiths, Paul, ed. Christianity Through Non-Christian Eyes. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1990. (I)

12. Griffiths, Paul. An Apology for Apologetics. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1991. Argues that inter-religious apologetics is proper and fruitful—an unpopular view in the world of Religious Studies. (I)

13. Groothuis, Douglas. Unmasking the New Age. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1986. (I)

14. Groothuis, Douglas. Are All Religions One? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996. Booklet comparing Christianity, Islam, and nondualistic Hinduism. (I)

15. Groothuis, Douglas. Confronting the New Age. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1988. (I)

16. Halverson, Dean, ed. Compact Guide to World Religions. Minneapolis, MN: Bethany House Publishers, 1996. Excellent introductory exposition and apologetic engagement on major religions. (B)

17. Hackett, Stuart. Oriental Philosophy: A Westerner's Guide to Eastern Thought. Madison, WI: University of Wisconsin Press, 1979. Excellent philosophical treatment. (A)

18. Jenkins, Philip. The Next Christendom. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002. Argues that Christianity is growing most rapidly in third world contexts, and is taking on new non-Western forms. Also refutes the notion that Christian growth outside of the West has usually been imposed upon unwilling cultures. Compare this book to the earlier Fire From Heaven by Harvey Cox. (I)

19. Johnson, David L. A Reasoned Look at Asian Religions. Minneapolis, MN: Bethany House, 1985. Good expository and apologetic material. (I)

20. Mangalwadi, Vishal. The World of Gurus. Chicago: Cornerstone Press, 1992. (I)

21. Nash, Ronald. Is Jesus the Only Savior? Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1994. Good critique of John Hick and a defense of exclusivism. (I)

22. Netland, Harold. Dissonant Voices. Oakland, CA: Regent Press, 1998; orig. pub. Eerdmans, 1991. Probably the best and most thorough evangelical treatment of the subject of religious pluralism. Moderately difficult but well-written and lucid. (I)

23. Netland, Harold. Encountering Religious Pluralism. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2001. Elaborates and further develops themes from Dissonant Voices, but also contains new material on modernity, postmodernity, and other issues. Clearly written and penetrating. (I)

24. Okholm, Dennis L., and Timothy Phillips, eds. Salvation: Four Views. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1995. Four authors debate the proper approach to non-Christian religions. (I)

25. Stackhouse, John Jr., ed. No Other Gods Before Me? Evangelicals and the Challenge of World Religions. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2001. The Hexam and Mouw essays are particularly good.

26. Yandell, Keith. The Epistemology of Religious Experience. New York, NY: Cambridge University Press, 1993. Philosophical assessment of religious experience claims. (A)

27. Yandell, Keith, Philosophy of Religion. New York: Routledge, 1999. Strong analytic approach with an equally strong emphasis on comparative religious philosophy. (I)/(A)

III. RECOMMENDED BOOKS ON NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS

1. Ankerberg, John, and John Weldon. Encyclopedia of New Age Beliefs. Eugene, OR: Harvest House, 1996. Quite thorough and generally on track. Probably a bit too negative on alternative medicine. Weldon is the primary author. (B)

2. Bowman, Robert. Orthodoxy and Heresy: A Biblical Guide to Doctrinal Discernment. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1992. Well-informed and clearly written guide to biblical thinking about theologically errant groups. (B)/(I)

3. Chandler, Russell. Understanding the New Age. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1993. Christian journalist looks at the New Age movement. (B)

4. Clark, David, and Norman Geisler. Apologetics for the New Age. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1990. Very thorough and philosophical. (I)/(A)

5. Groothuis, Douglas. Unmasking the New Age. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1986. One of the first worldview analyses of the New Age movement from an evangelical perspective. (I)

6. Groothuis, Douglas. Confronting the New Age. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1988. Oriented toward apologetic engagement and social action. (I)

7. Groothuis, Douglas. Christianity That Counts. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1995. Collection of essays, many of which address New Age concerns. (B)/(I)

8. Groothuis, Douglas. Are All Religions One? Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996. Compares Christianity, Islam, and nondualistic Hinduism. (I)

9. Guinness, Os. The Dust of Death. Rev. ed. Wheaton, IL: Good News/Crossway Publ., 1994. Still the best assessment of the counterculture, including its embrace of Eastern religion and occultism. (I)

10. Jenkins, Philip. Hidden Gospels: How the Search for Jesus Lost Its Way. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001. Critique of exotic reconstructions—often New Age in orientation—of Jesus based on very liberal scholarship. (I)

11. Martin, Walter R. Kingdom of the Cults. Rev. ed. Ed. Hank Hanegraaff. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1997. Revision of a classic work after the author's death in 1989. Most of the new work is not done by Hanegraaff. (B)/(I)

12. Miller, Elliot. A Crash Course on the New Age. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Publ. Group, 1989. Excellent overview. (I)

13. Newport, John. The New Age Movement and the Biblical Worldview. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1998. Compendium of materials on just about every aspect of the New Age movement. Little new research. (I)

14. North, Gary. Unholy Spirits. Tyler, TX: Institute of Christian Economics, 1988. Emphasizes worldview critique. (I)

15. Partridge, Christopher, and Douglas Groothuis, eds. Dictionary of Contemporary Religion in the Western World. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2002 (March). Features many articles on new religious movements, (I)

16. Sire, James. The Universe Next Door, 4th ed. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 2004. Excellent chapters on Eastern pantheistic monism and New Age thought. (I)

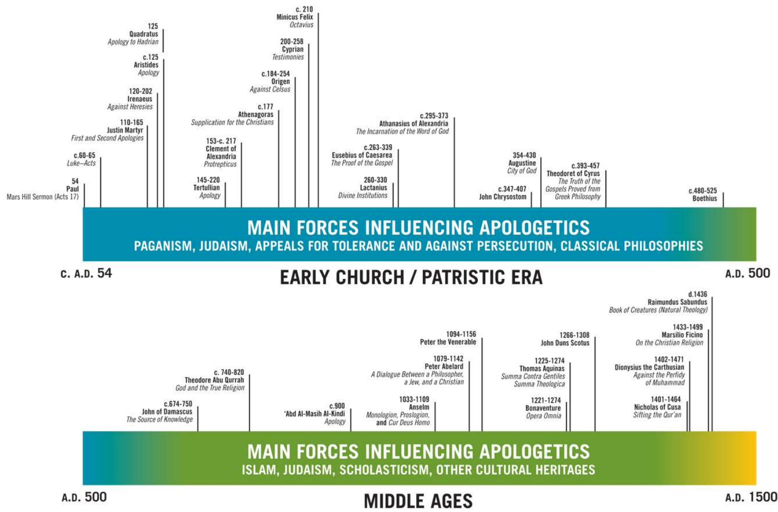
17. Sire, James. Scripture Twisting: Twenty Ways Cults Misinterpret the Bible. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1980. (I)

18. Strohmer, Charles. The Gospel and the New Spirituality. Eugene, OR: Wipf and Stock, 2004. Excellent on how to communicate the Gospel to New Age people. (B)

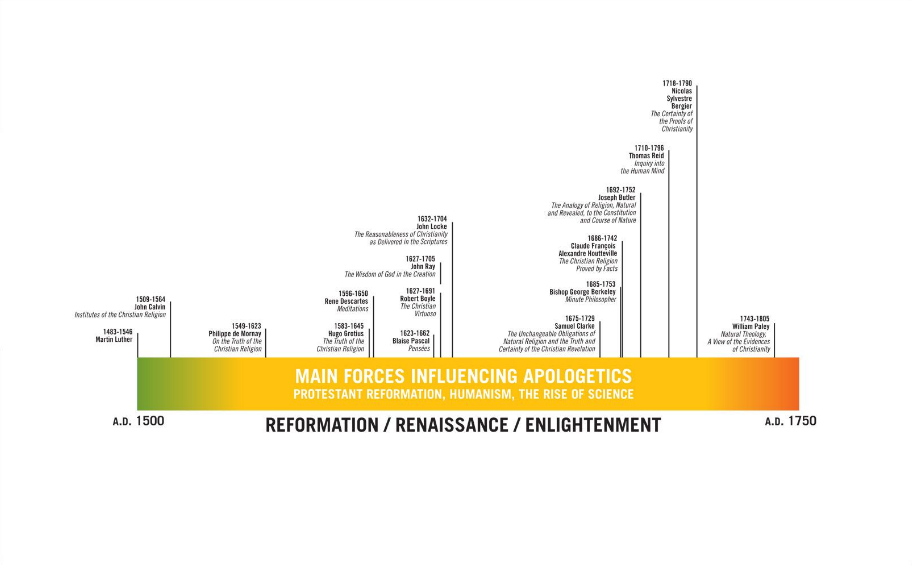
CHARTS AND MAPS

Chronology of the Kings of Israel and Judah

The Tribal Allotments of Israel



The Kingdoms of Israel and Judah



Palestine in the Time of Jesus

The Passion Week in Jerusalem

Paul’s Missionary Journeys

TIMELINE OF APOLOGISTS AND NOTABLE WORKS

TIMELINE OF APOLOGISTS AND NOTABLE WORKS
1483-1546 Martin Luther 1509-1564 John Calvin Institutes of the Christian Religion
1549-1623 Philippe de Mornay On the Truth of the Christian Religion
1583-1645 Hugo Grotius The Truth of the Christian Religion
1596-1650 Rene Descartes Meditations
1623-1662 Blaise Pascal Pensées
1627-1691 Robert Boyle The Christian Virtuoso
1627-1705 John Ray The Wisdom of God in the Creation
1632-1704 John Locke The Reasonableness of Christianity as Delivered in the Scriptures
1675-1729 Samuel Clarke The Unchangeable Obligations of Natural Religion and the Truth and Certainty of the Christian Revelation
1685-1753 Bishop George Berkeley Minute Philosopher
1686-1742 Claude François Alexandre Houtteville The Christian Religion Proved by Facts
1692-1752 Joseph Butler The Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature
1710-1796 Thomas Reid Inquiry into the Human Mind
1718-1790 Nicolas Sylvestre Bergier The Certainty of the Proofs of Christianity
1743-1805 William Paley Natural Theology, A View of the Evidences of Christianity
MAIN FORCES INFLUENCING APOLOGETICS PROTESTANT REFORMATION, HUMANISM, THE RISE OF SCIENCE
A.D. 1500
REFORMATION / RENAISSANCE / ENLIGHTENMENT
A.D. 1750

TIMELINE OF APOLOGISTS AND NOTABLE WORKS

1753-1821
Joseph de Maistre
St. Petersburg Dialogues

1759-1844
Bruno Liebermann
Theological Intstitutions

1768-1848
François René de Chateaubriand
The Genius of Christianity; or, Beauties of the Christian Religion

1777-1853
Johann Sebastian von Drey
Apologetics as a Scientific Demonstration of the Divinity of Christianity

1780-1847
Thomas Chalmers
Miraculous and Internal Evidences of the Christian Revelation

1782-1860
Abbé Felicité de Lamennais
Essay on Indifference in Matters of Religion

1783-1853
Simon Greenleaf
The Testimony of the Evangelists

1787-1863
Richard Whately
Introductory Lessons on Christian Evidence

1794-1876
Giovanni Perrone, S.J.
Lectures on Dogmatics

1796-1865
Carl Ullmann
The Sinlessness of Jesus

1796-1867
Abbé Louis-Eugène Bautain
Philosophy of Christianity

1797-1878
Charles Hodge
What is Darwinism and Systematic Theology

1799-1877
August Tholuck
The Credibility of the Evangelical History

1801-1890
John Henry Newman
Essays on Miracles

1807-1888
C.F. Keil
Commentary on the Old Testament

1810-1848
Jaime Balmes
Criterion, and Letters to a Skeptic on Religious Matters

1813-1855
Søren Kierkegaard Philosophical Fragments

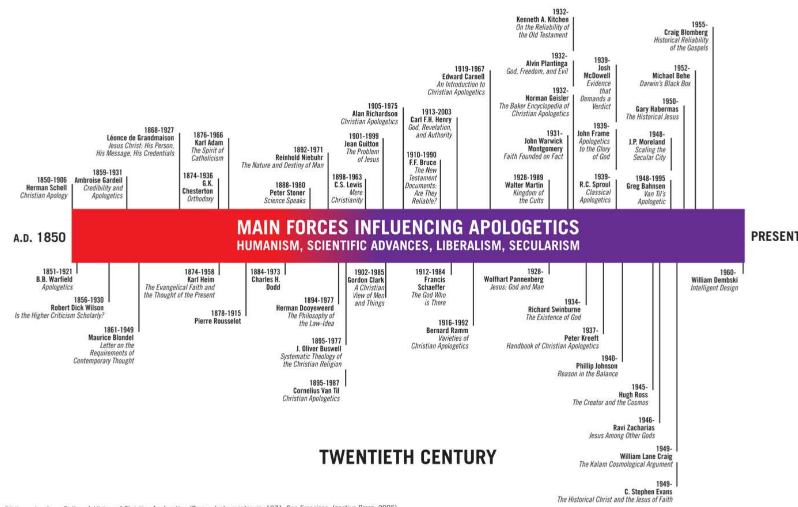
1818-1888
August Ebrard
Apologetics; or the Scientific Vindication of Christianity

1831-1899
Alexander B. Bruce
Apologetics; or Christianity Defensively Stated

1834-1895
Paul de Broglie
Positivism and Experimental Science

1837-1915
Fulcran Vigouroux
The Bible and Modern Discoveries in Egypt and Assyria



1837-1920
Abraham Kuyper
Principles of Sacred Theology

1844–1913
James Orr
The Bible Under Trial

MAIN FORCES INFLUENCING APOLOGETICS
HUMANISM, DARWINISM, SCIENTIFIC ADVANCES, AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF ARCHAEOLOGY AND HISTORICAL METHODS

A.D. 1750 — NINETEENTH CENTURY — A.D. 1850

TIMELINE OF APOLOGISTS AND NOTABLE WORKS

Bibliography: Avery Dulles, A History of Christian Apologetics, (Corpus Instrumentorum, 1971; San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 2005).
Kenneth D. Boa and Robert M. Bowman, JR., Faith Has Its Reasons, (Colorado Springs: Navpress, 2001).

SELECTED IMPORTANT NEW TESTAMENT ARCHAELOGICAL FINDS

FIND	DISCOVERED	IMPORTANCE
The Pilate Stone Inscription	1961, Caesarea Maritima	Confirmed the existence and office of Pilate
The Delphi, or Gallio, Inscription	1905	Fixed the date of Gallio's proconsulship at A.D. 51-52, providing a way of dating Acts 18:12-17, and as a result, much of the rest of Paul's ministry
Caiaphas Ossuary	1990, near Jerusalem	Confirmed the existence of Caiaphas
Sergius Paulus Inscription	1877, Paphos, Cyprus	Confirms the existence of Sergius Paulus, proconsul of Cyprus encountered by Paul and Barnabas in Acts 13:7
Pool of Siloam	2004, Jerusalem	Site of Jesus' miracle recorded in John 9:1-11
Skeleton of Yohanan	1968, Jerusalem	Only known remains of crucifixion victim; corroborates the Bible's description of crucifixion
Rylands Papyrus P52	1920	Oldest universally accepted manuscript of the New Testament, a small fragment of John's Gospel dated by papyrologists to A.D. 125
Bodmer Papyrus II	1952, Pabau, Egypt	Contains most of John's Gospel and dates from A.D. 150-200
Magdalene Papyrus	1901, Luxor, Egypt	Contains framents of Matthew and has been dated as being earlier than A.D. 70, though there is debate concerning the date
Chester Beatty Papyri	acquired 1931-35, Cairo, Egypt	Three papyri dating from A.D. 200 that contain most of the New Testament
Codex Vaticanus	In the Vatican Library's earliest inventory (1481)	Dated A.D. 325-50 and contains a nearly complete Bible
Codex Sinaiticus	1859, Mt Sinai, Egypt	Codex containing nearly complete New Testament and over half of the Old Testament (the books at the beginning of the Bible appear to have been lost to damage), dated at A.D. 350
7Q5	1955, Qumran, Israel	Possible fragment of Mark that can be dated no later than A.D. 68 which would make it the oldest extant New Testament fragment if confirmed
Galilee Boat	1986, near Tiberias, Israel	The boat, 30' x 8', held approximately 15 passengers and would be like the boats Jesus' disciples used in crossing the Sea of Galilee. Carbon 14 dating places the boat between 120 B.C. and A.D. 40.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Craig Blomberg, "The Historical Reliability of the New Testament," in William Lane Craig, Reasonable Faith, (Wheaton: Crossway, 1994).
Norman Geisler, Christian Apologetics, (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1976).
Gary Habermas, The Historical Jesus, (Joplin, MO: College Press, 1996).
Walter C. Kaiser Jr., "Top 15 Finds from Biblical Archaelogy," Contact, Winter 2006-2006
Josh McDowell, Evidence that Demands a Verdict, (San Bernadino: Here's Life, 1972, 1979).
Bruce M. Metzger, The New Testament, its Background, Growth, and Content, (Nashville: Abingdon, 1965, 1983).
Randal Price, Secrets of the Dead Sea Scroll, (Eugene, OR: Harvest House, 1996).
Keith N. Schoville, "Top Ten Archaeological Discoveries of the Twentieth Century Relating to the Biblical World, " http://biblicalstudies.info
Richard N. Soulen, Handbook of Biblical Criticism, (Atlanta: John Knox, 1976, 1982).

SELECTED IMPORTANT OLD TESTAMENT ARCHAELOGICAL FINDS

FIND	DISCOVERED	IMPORTANCE
Dead Sea Scrolls	1947-56, Qumran, Israel	Provided our oldest copies of almost all books of the Old Testament and confirmed reliability of the transmission process
Taylor Prism	1830, Nineveh, Iraq	Corroborates the campaigns of Sennacherib found in 2 Kg 18:13-19:37; 2 Ch 32:1-12; Is 36:1-37:38
House of David Inscriptions	1993-94, Tel Dan, Israel	Earliest mention outside the Bible of King David, whom some scholars have held to be a fictional character
Cylinder of Nabonidus	1854, Ur, Iraq	Corroborates Belshazzar as last king of Babylon as recorded in Daniel 5:1-30; 7:1; 8:1
Sargon Inscriptions	1843, Khorsabad, Iraq	Confirms the existence of Sargon, King of Assyria, Isaiah 20:1, as well as his conquering of Samaria (2 Kings 17:23-24)
Tiglath-Pileser III Inscriptions	1845-49, Nimrud, Iraq	Corroborates 2 Kings 15:29
Cyrus Cylinder	1879, Babylon, Iraq	Contains a decree from Cyrus that corroborates Ezra 1:1-3; 6:3; 2 Chronicles 36:23; Isaiah 44:28.
Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser	1846, Nimrud, Iraq	Depicts Jehu, son of Omri, oldest known picture of an ancient Israelite.
Moabite Stone	1868, Palestine	Corroborates 2 Kings 3
Ketef Hinnom Amulets	1779, Jerusalem	Contains the Hebrew text of Numbers 6:24-26 and Deuteronomy 9:7. This is the oldest instance to date of Hebrew text of the Old Testament, 7th-6th century B.C.
Seal of Baruch	early-mid 1970's, Jerusalem	Contains the phrase "belonging to Beruch son of Neriah," Jeremiah's scribe, 6th century B.C.
Epic of Gilgamesh	1853, Nineveh, Iraq	First extra-biblical find that appears to reference the great flood of Genesis 7-8
Weld-Blundell Prism	1922, Babylon, Iraq	Contains a list of Sumerian Kings that ruled before and after the great flood; the kings that pre-dated the flood are attributed enormous life spans reminiscent of, though greater than, the lifespans of pre-flood inhabitants of the Bible
Siloam Inscription	1880, Jerusalem	One of the few extant ancient Hebrew writings from the 8th century B.C. or earlier.
Gedaliah Seal	1935, Lachish, Israel	Corroborates 2 Kings 25:22

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.M. Blaiklock and R.K. Harrison, The New International Dictionary of Biblical Archaeology, (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1983).
Walter C. Kaiser Jr., "Top 15 Finds from Biblical Archaelogy," Contact, Winter 2006-2006
Josh McDowell, Evidence that Demands a Verdict, (San Bernadino: Here's Life, 1972, 1979).
Randal Price, Secrets of the Dead Sea Scroll, (Eugene, OR.: Harvest House, 1996).
Hershel Shanks, Understanding the Dead Sea Scrolls, (New York: Random House, 1992).
Keith N. Schoville, "Top Ten Archaeological Discoveries of the Twentieth Century Relating to the Biblical World, " http://biblicalstudies.info
Merrill F. Unger, Archaeology and the Old Testament, (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1954, 1975).
Howard F. Vos, Archaeology in Bible Lands, (Chicago: Moody Press, 1977, 1982).

MANUSCRIPT AUTHORITY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT COMPARED TO OTHER CLASSICAL WORKS

Note: Homer's Illiad is the best attested ancient work after the New Testament. Plato and Aristotle are used in the graph for how well known they are.

Bibliography: Josh McDowell, Evidence that Demands a Verdict, (San Bernadino, CA: Here"s Life, 1972, 1992).

NATURALISM VS. THEISM: WHICH CONTEXT BEST EXPLAINS THE PHENOMENA WE OBSERVE?

PHENOMENA WE OBSERVE	THEISTIC CONTEXT	NATURALISTIC CONTEXT
(Self-)consciousness exists.	God is supremely self-aware/-conscious.	The universe was produced by mindless, non-conscious processes.
Personal beings exist.	God is a personal Being.	The universe was produced by impersonal processes.
We believe we make free personal decisions/choices, assuming humans are accountable for their actions.	God is spirit and a free Being, who can freely choose to act (e.g., to create or not).	We have emerged by material, deterministic processes and forces beyond our control.
Secondary qualities (colors, smells, sounds, tastes, textures) exist throughout the world.	God is joyful, and secondary qualities make the world pleasurable and joyful to His creatures.	The universe was produced from colorless, odorless, soundless, tasteless, textureless particles and processes.
We trust our senses and rational faculties as generally reliable in producing true beliefs.	A God of truth and rationality exists.	Because of our impulse to survive and reproduce, our beliefs would only help us survive, but a number of these could be completely false.
Human beings have intrinsic value/dignity and rights.	God is the supremely valuable Being.	Human beings were produced by valueless processes.
Objective moral values exist.	God's character is the source of goodness/moral values.	The universe was produced by non-moral processes.
The universe began to exist a finite time ago—without previously existing matter, energy, space or time.	A powerful, previously-existing God brought the universe into being without any pre-existing material. (Here, something emerges from something.)	The universe came into existence from nothing by nothing—or was, perhaps, self-caused. (Here, something comes from nothing.)
The universe is finely-tuned for human life (known as "the Goldilocks effect"—the universe is "just right" for life).	God is a wise, intelligent Designer.	All the cosmic constants just happened to be right; given enough time and/or many possible worlds, a finely-tuned world eventually emerged.
First life emerged.	God is a living, active Being.	Life somehow emerged from non-living matter.
Beauty exists (e.g., not only in landscapes and sunsets but in "elegant" or "beautiful" scientific theories).	God is beautiful (Ps. 27:4) and capable of creating beautiful things according to His pleasure.	Beauty in the natural world is superabundant and in many cases superfluous (often not linked to survival).
We (tend to) believe that life has purpose and meaning. For most of us, life is worth living.	God has created/designed us for certain purposes (to love Him, others, etc.); when we live them out, our lives find meaning/enrichment.	There is no cosmic purpose, blueprint, or goal for human existence.
Real evils—both moral and natural—exist/take place in the world.	Evil's definition assumes a design plan (how things ought to be, but are not) or standard of goodness (a corruption or absence of goodness), by which we judge something to be evil. God is a good Designer; His existence supplies the crucial moral context to make sense of evil.	Atrocities, pain, and suffering just happen. This is just how things are—with no "plan" or standard of goodness to which things ought to conform.

COMPARISONS OF NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS

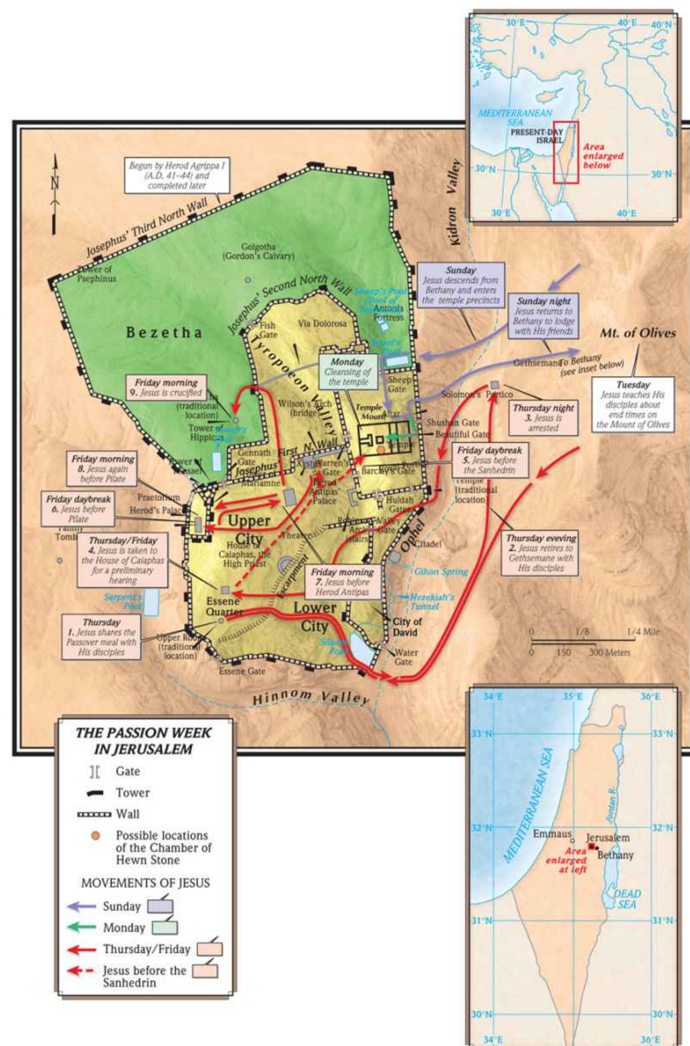
	AUTHORITY	GOD	MAN	CHRIST	SALVATION	FUTURE HOPE
LDS	The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) has four primary works (the "Standard Works") which are authoritative: The Bible (preferably the KJV), The Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and The Pearl of Great Price. Joseph Smith is considered to be the latter-day prophet who has re-established the true church with his teachings.	There are many gods and the Trinity is comprised of three separate beings, two with physical bodies and one with a spirit body. The Father is an exalted man who was granted rule over our world. He himself has a father and mother and also has a wife. He is the creator of all the spirits of those who will eventually be born on earth.	The Fall of Adam and Eve was not actually a serious sin, since it was necessary for opening the way to perfection. Humans do commit sins, but they can overcome that tendency and live lives that please the Father.	Jesus was the eldest of the Father's spirit children before being born into this world. He was conceived through physical union between the Father and the virgin Mary. He was a man who lived a perfect life, was married and had children, and was exalted to god-hood in his resurrection.	Christ's death canceled the penalty of death, but did not actually purchase salvation. Though grace plays a role in salvation, it only comes into play after we do all we can to merit eternal life.	The future life is made up of three realms, plus hell, though it is not clear that many besides the devil and his angels will spend eternity in hell. Some hold that hell also includes anyone who has specifically rejected LDS teaching, as well as LDS apostates. The other realms include the telestial kingdom, the terrestrial kingdom, and the celestial kingdom. Only the celestial kingdom is actually "heaven," open only to Mormons.
WATCHTOWER SOCIETY (JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES)	The New World Translation of the Bible, a translation produced by the JW organization, deliberately reinforces certain doctrinal beliefs of the organization. The organization also teaches that one cannot understand the Bible without its help.	God is unitarian, not trinitarian, and is creator of the earth. The doctrine of the Trinity, according to this group, is a Satanic doctrine.	Humans are made in God's image, and they are a combination of a body and the "life force" given by Jehovah. Humans do not "have" souls as something distinct from the body, and at death they simply go to sleep until the resurrection.	Before becoming a man, Jesus was Michael the archangel, the first creation of Jehovah. Christ is "a god," but not God, and in his earthly life was merely a perfect man. He was made immortal in his resurrection.	Jesus' death did not pay for humans' sin, but only opened the way to salvation. Salvation is merited by following the teachings of the JW organization.	Three possible destinies await human beings. Those who are finally unrepentant will be destroyed in the lake of fire—hell is thus a temporary flash of punishment after which the wicked cease to exist. The redeemed are divided into two groups. The "little flock" (144,000) will live in heaven, sharing the divine nature of Christ and, in effect, becoming gods. The "other sheep" live on a redeemed earth (Paradise) forever.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE (CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST, SCIENTIST)	The Bible is authoritative, but only as interpreted by Mary Baker Eddy, especially through her book, Science and Health with Key to Scriptures.	God is infinite Mind. God is the Father-Mother. The Trinity is only a trinity of attributes, not of persons.	Humans, like God, are also mind. Matter, sin, disease, and death are unreal.	"Christ" is the divine or spiritual element of God. The man Jesus was possessed of the Christ spirit. He came to show us the way to attain the Christ spirit for ourselves.	Salvation is gained through enlightenment as to the true nature of humans. All are eventually saved, but it is good to attain that enlightenment during their earthly sojourn.	There is no actual heaven or hell, but humans will progress even after this earthly sojourn to a higher form of spiritual consciousness. Only mind and spirit are good, and in fact, it will become clear that they are all that really exists.
SCIENTOLOGY	Spiritual authority is found in the writings of L. Ron Hubbard, especially, Dianetics. Hubbard claimed that the sources for this book included various eastern traditions as well as Native American shamanism.	Scientology claims to have no dogma and claims that God is what God is to each person. Hubbard's own discussions about God are essentially a combination of Judeo-Christian monotheism with Hindu polytheism and pantheism.	Humans are partly god-like themselves, since man is part god. Humans are basically good, with one nature divided into two parts—the physical and the spiritual. Within every human lies a Thetan spirit, a spirit that is eighty trillion years old, and which survives death to be re-implanted within another person. The ultimate goal is to achieve this divinity completely.	Jesus plays little role in Scientology.	Humans are caught in a web of reincarnations, which can only be ended through the process of "auditing," a kind of spiritual therapy. This therapy enables them to eliminate the accumulation of "engrams" which humans acquire through the course of each individual existence and even the aggregate of former existences. These engrams often develop as a result of maltreatment at the hands of parents and others and can only be eliminated through auditing.	When one develops "clarity" and then passes through progressive levels of development, one can achieve true knowledge of his Thetan spirit, join the intergalactic Thetan collective, and cease the cycle of reincarnation.
WICCA	There is no common scripture in this tradition, only intuitive convictions that characterize its various groups and forms.	The deity is a polarity, with a horned male god and a Mother goddess. Wiccans claim that this brings balance, though in actuality many female Wiccans reject the male deity as inferior.	Humans have an inner divinity that connects them with god/goddess. Humans, and the world in general, are extensions of god's essence (panentheism). All the world is divine.	Jesus plays little role in most Wiccan traditions, though some co-opt him as a supporter, while others see him as an enemy.	There is no real sin in Wicca, so no real redemption. "Do what you will if it harm none" is a major theme. Joy is found in finding god in the phenomena of this life, such as food and sex. The predominantly feminine forms often see maleness as the problem of the world.

COMPARISONS OF WORLD RELIGIONS

	DOCTRINE OF GOD	HUMAN PREDICAMENT	WAY OF DELIVERANCE	ULTIMATE GOAL
BUDDHISM	Essentially atheistic at core, Buddha himself did not emphasize the gods, though some forms of Buddhism practice devotion to specific deities; in some cases the "deities" are departed Bodhisattvas—great figures of Buddhist history.	Humanity is in state of suffering; this suffering arises from a desire, any kind of desire, even the desire for good things; desire is the root of all human problems.	Follow the "Eight-fold path"; it includes right understanding, right speech, right effort, and right mindfulness (meditation and concentration); this practiced over a lifetime with the right intensity leads to elimination of desire, which is the key to deliverance (moksha); there are variations in different Buddhist traditions, but this was the teaching of Gautama.	Release from suffering by entering a state of non-existence (moksha) as an individuated human being (nirvana); to cease to exist as an individual is the highest goal.
HINDUISM	Many gods, but the most important are Brahma (impersonal reality), Shiva (death and reproduction), Vishnu (love and play); gods not sovereign over events in the world, but subject to the same cosmic forces as humans are, such as karma; along with the common gods recognized by most Hindus, many locations have their own unique deities; at the same time, "Atman (humanity) is Brahman (ultimate reality)"—all is One.	The human predicament is existence itself; humanity lives with the illusion (maya) of perceiving the world as it seems to be rather than as it really is (Brahman, or the One); moral retribution (karma) follows us through multiple incarnations (samsara).	Understanding the human predicament through disciplines such as yoga, devotion to one of the gods (especially Shiva), and through a flash of knowledge; knowledge brings release from karmic cycle of reincarnation (samsara); often, men leave their families in their later years to become hermits, working off their karma by ascetic practices.	Release from existence by achieving non-existence (moksha) and an entering into oneness with the One (Brahman) ceasing to exist as an individuated human being (nirvana); one becomes like a drop of water that falls into the ocean; this can be achieved quickly for those who achieve enlightenment, though eventually it will be the experience of all.
ISLAM	"No God but Allah"; a unitarian, monotheistic faith which sees Allah as determining every specific event that happens in the world; Allah is virtually co-terminous with his Word, part of which is found in the Koran.	Humans are finite in contrast to the infinite sovereignty of Allah; they are foolish and need instruction, which comes from the Koran; they are also sinners, such sin being especially seen in violations of Muslim taboos or prohibited behavior and failure to do the will of Allah perfectly.	Embrace the Five Pillars (daily recitation of creed, prayer, giving alms, pilgrimage to Mecca, fasting during Ramadan); complete and utter devotion to Allah; final salvation is reserved only for the most diligent of Muslims.	Future resurrection of the righteous unto eternal bliss in a heavenly Paradise; all of the physical pleasures that one may not have access to in this life will be available in Paradise; infidels spend eternity in a most torturous hell.
JUDAISM	"The Lord is God, the Lord is One"; monotheistic faith in which God is maker of all things and the Lord of Heaven and Earth; contemporary (Conservative and Reform) Judaism tends to see God as not exercising dominant sovereignty over the world.	Humanity is sinful, but not so blinded by sin that they cannot be instructed in the way of righteousness.	Follow the teachings of Torah, especially as it relates to Sabbath, food laws, and holy days (among the Conservative and Orthodox); practice the faith with its traditions; many contemporary Jews (especially in the Reform and Conservative synagogues) are inclusivists, believing that salvation can be found in many religions; Kabalistic Judaism (mysticism) calls for a series of spiritual experiences that eventually allows one to see God.	Future state of resurrection in an earthly Paradise centered in the Holy Land (Orthodox); or a state of spiritual bliss after death (Reform); most Jews have no clear doctrine of eternal punishment, though some hold to the annihilation of the wicked.
CHRISTIANITY	Monotheistic, trinitarian belief; Father, Son and Spirit are equal and eternal and sovereign over all; God is love and is also holy; he is both transcendent and immanent, but is never dependant upon the world; his true nature is most easily seen in the person of his Incarnate Son, Jesus.	In their natural condition, humans are dead in trespasses and sins; they require a specific work of the Holy Spirit to rescue them; they cannot be saved by their own goodness and efforts.	Receive the gift of God's grace by trusting in Jesus Christ alone for salvation, which he purchased with his shed blood; this initial experience of justification is followed by a life of fellowship with other Christians and faithfulness to the Lord.	Immediate entering into the spiritual presence of God at death for believers; future resurrection of the body at the Second Advent of Christ; new heavens and new earth in an eternal realm of peace and righteousness for believers; eternal punishment in hell for the finally impenitent.

HEBREW KINGS CHRONOLOGY

TEXT	DATE (B.C.)	KING	NATION	SYNCHRONIZATION	LENGTH	NOTES
1 Kg 12:1-24 1 Kg 14:21-31	930-913	Rehoboam	Judah		17 years
1 Kg 12:25—14:20	930-909	Jeroboam I	Israel		22 years
1 Kg 15:1-8	913-909	Abijam	Judah	18th of Jeroboam I	3 years
1 Kg 15:9-24	910-869	Asa	Judah	20th of Jeroboam I	41 years
1 Kg 15:25-31	909-908	Nadab	Israel	2nd of Asa	2 years
1 Kg 15:32—16:7	908-886	Baasha	Israel	3rd of Asa	24 years
1 Kg 16:8-14	886-885	Elah	Israel	26th of Asa	2 years
1 Kg 16:15-20	885	Zimri	Israel	27th of Asa	7 days
1 Kg 16:21-22	885-880	Tibni	Israel	27th of Asa	6 years	overlap with Omri
1 Kg 16:23-28	885 885-880 880-874 880	Omri	Israel	27th of Asa 31st of Asa	12 years	made king by the people overlap with Tibni official reign = 11 years beginning of sole reign
1 Kg 16:29—22:40	874-853	Ahab	Israel	38th of Asa	22 years	official reign = 21 years
1 Kg 22:41-50	872-869 872-848 869 853-848	Jehoshaphat	Judah	4th of Ahab	25 years	coregency with Asa official reign beginning of sole reign Jehoram is coregent
1 Kg 22:51—2 Kg 1:18	853-852	Ahaziah	Israel	17th of Jehoshaphat	2 years	official reign = 1 year
2 Kg 1:17 2 Kg 3:1—8:15	852 852-841	Joram	Israel	2nd of Jehoram 18th of Jehoshaphat	 12 years	 official reign = 1 year
2 Kg 8:16-24	848 848-841	Jehoram	Judah	5th of Joram	8 years	beginning of sole reign official reign = 7 years
2 Kg 8:25-29 2 Kg 9:29	841 841	Ahaziah	Judah	12th of Joram 11th of Joram	1 year	nonaccession-year dating accession-year dating
2 Kg 9:30—10:36	841-814	Jehu	Israel		28 years
2 Kg 11:1-21	841-835	Athaliah	Judah		7 years
2 Kg 12:1-21	835-796	Joash	Judah	7th of Jehu	40 years
2 Kg 13:1-9	814-798	Jehoahaz	Israel	23rd of Joash	17 years
2 Kg 13:10-25	798-782	Jehoash	Israel	37th of Joash	16 years
2 Kg 14:1-22	796-767 792-767 793-782	Amaziah	Judah	2nd of Jehoash	29 years	 overlap with Azariah coregency with Jehoash
2 Kg 14:23-29	793-753 782	Jeroboam II	Israel	15th of Amaziah	41 years	total reign beginning of sole reign
2 Kg 15:1-7	792-767 792-740 767	Azariah	Judah	27th of Jeroboam II	52 years	overlap with Amaziah total reign beginning of sole reign
2 Kg 15:8-12	753	Zachariah	Israel	38th of Azariah	6 months
2 Kg 15:13-15	752	Shallum	Israel	39th of Azariah	1 month
2 Kg 15:16-22	752-742	Menahem	Israel	39th of Azariah	10 years	ruled in Samaria
2 Kg 15:23-26	742-740	Pekahiah	Israel	50th of Azariah	2 years
2 Kg 15:27-31	752-740 752-732 740	Pekah	Israel	52nd of Azariah	20 years	in Gilead; overlapping years total reign beginning of sole reign
2 Kg 15:32-38 2 Kg 15:30	750-740 750-735 750-732 750	Jotham	Judah	 2nd of Pekah	16 years	coregency with Azariah official reign reign to his 20th year beginning of coregency
2 Kg 16:1-20	735-715 735	Ahaz	Judah	17th of Pekah		total reign
2 Kg 15:30 2 Kg 17:1-41	732 732-723	Hoshea	Israel	12th of Ahaz	9 years	20th of Jotham
2 Kg 18:1—20:21	715-686	Hezekiah	Judah	3rd of Hoshea	29 years
2 Kg 21:1-18	697-686 697-642	Manasseh	Judah		55 years	coregency with Hezekiah total reign
2 Kg 21:19-26	642-640	Amon	Judah		2 years
2 Kg 22:1—23:30	640-609	Josiah	Judah		31 years
2 Kg 23:31-33	609	Jehoahaz	Judah		3 months
2 Kg 23:34—24:7	609-598	Jehoiakim	Judah		11 year
2 Kg 24:8-17	598-597	Jehoiachin	Judah		3 months
2 Kg 24:18—25:26	597-586	Zedekiah	Judah		11 years



THE TRIBAL ALLOTMENTS OF ISRAEL
JOSH 13:8–19:49
City
City (uncertain location)
Mountain peak
35°E
36°E
33°N
32°N
31°N
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
Sidon
TYRE
Damascus
Abana River
ARAM
Pharpar River
Mt. Hermon
Ijon
Dan
Tyre
Litani River
Beth-anath
Kedesh
Lake Huleh
Yiron
Hazor
ASHER
Merom
NAPHTALI
EAST MANASSEH
Acco
Cabul
Capernaum
Aphek
Mishal
Nahalal
Hannathon
Rimmon
Rakkath
Sea of Galilee
Achshaph
ZEBULUN
Hammath
Golan
Ashtaroth
Mt. Carmel
Kishon River
Chesulloth
Helkath
Daberath
Jabneel
En-haddah
Sarid
Tabor
Mt. Tabor
Yarmuk River
Jokneam
Endor
Lo-debar
Megiddo
Shunem
Edrei
Dor
ISSACHAR
Jarmuth
Jezreel
Taanach
Beth-shan
Ramoth-gilead
En-gannim
Dothan
Ibleam
Jabesh-gilead
WEST MANASSEH
Socoh
Samaria
Tirzah
Jordan River
Mt. Ebal
Zaphon
Gerasa
Shechem
Penuel
Mahanaim
Pirathon
Mt. Gerizim
Succoth
Jabbok River
AMMON
Yarkon River
Aphek
Janoah
Joppa
Gath-rimmon
Tappuah
Shiloh
GAD EPHRAIM Ophrah
Jehud
Jazer
Lod
DAN
Upper Beth-horon
Bethel
Amman
Gittaim Shaalbim
Mizpah
Naaran
Gilgal
Beth-nimrah
Gezer
Chephirah
Gibeon
Ramah
Jabneel
Aijalon
Jericho
Abel-shittim
Heshbon
Baalath
Gibbethon
Chesalon
Kiriath-jearim
Adummim
Ashdod
Ekron
Zorah
Eshtaol
Jerusalem
Beth-hoglah
Bezer
Mt. Nebo
Timnah
Beth-shemesh
BENJAMIN
Medeba
Bethlehem
Gath
Tekoa
Kedemoth
Ashkelon
Beth-zur
REUBEN
Lachish
Mareshah
Hebron
DEAD SEA
Jahaz
Eglon
Dibon
Gaza JUDAH Juttah
En-gedi
Aroer
Arnon River
Eshtemoa
N. Besor
Gerar
Ziklag
Jattir
Bethul
Ashan
Arad
Sharuhen
Kabzeel
MOAB
Beersheba
Hormah
Kir-hareseth
Hazar-shual
Baalah
SIMEON
Eltolad
Ezem
Zered River
Tamar
Arabah
EDOM
0 10 20 30 40 Miles
0 10 20 30 40 Kilometers

THE KINGDOMS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH
1 KGS 12
City
Capital city
City (uncertain location)
Mountain peak
Israel
Judah
International roads
Local roads
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
PHOENICIA
ARAM
GESHUR
ISRAEL
AMMON PHILISTIA JUDAH Negeb
MOAB
EDOM
Eastern Desert
Wilderness
Jeraboam built a sanctuary
Political capital of Israel from Omri onward
Jeraboam built a sanctuary
DEAD SEA
Sea of Galilee
Beirut
Sidon
Tyre
Damascus
Dan
Hazor
Samaria
Shechem
Bethel
Jerusalem
Hebron
Beersheba
Gaza
Joppa
Jericho
Kadesh-barnea
International Coastal Highway
King's Highway

PALESTINE IN THE TIME OF JESUS
City
City (uncertain location)
Decapolis city
Decapolis city (uncertain location)
Administrative capital
Mountain peak
Major roads
Other roads
First Procuratorship
Territory of Antipas
Territory of Phillip
Syrian territory
Coponius was named the first prefect and established the Administrative capital at Caesarea Maritima
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
PHOENICIA (TYRE)
ITUREA
ABILENE
GAULANITIS
BATANEA
TRACHONITIS
AURANITIS
GALILEE
SAMARIA
JUDEA IDUMEA
PEREA DECAPOLIS
NABATEA
Eastern Desert
Esdraelon Valley
King's Highway
Sidon
Tyre
Damascus
Caesarea Philippi (Panias)
Mt. Hermon
Cadasa (Kedesh)
Gischala (Gush Halav)
Ptolemais (Acco)
Capernaum
Bethsaida
Sea of Galilee
Gergesa (Kursi)
Gamala
Hippos
Tiberias
Jotapata
Sepphoris
Nazareth
Geba
Xaloth (Chesulloth)
Mt. Tabor
Mt. Carmel
Dora
Legio (Megiddo)
Caesarea Maritima (Strato's Tower)
Raphana
Canatha
Mt. Hauran
Abila
Gadara
Adraa (Edrei)
Bostra
Scythopolis (Beth-shan)
Ginae (Jenin)
Pella
Dion
Aenon
Salim
Gerasa (Jerash)
Sebaste (Samaria)
Mt. Ebal
Neapolis (Shechem)
Mt. Gerizim
Amathus
Coreae
Alexandrium
Apollonia
Antipatris (Aphek)
Joppa
Ephraim (Ophrah)
Gedor (Gadara)
Lydda
Archelais
Philadelphia (Amman)
Jamnia
Azotus (Ashdod)
Emmaus (Nicopolis)
Jericho
Cyprus
Jerusalem
Bethany
Mt. Nebo
Esbus (Heshbon)
Medeba
Hyrcania
Mesad Hasidim (Qumran)
Ascalon (Ashkelon)
Machaerus
Betogabris (Beth-guvrin)
Hebron
Callirrhoe (Zereth-shahar)
DEAD SEA
En-gedi
Gaza
Masada
Arad
Raphia
Beersheba
Malatha
Khirbet Tannur
Arabah
Jordan R.
Jabbok R.
Yarmuk R.
Arnon R.
Zered R.
Abana R.
Pharpar R.
Litani R.
Yarkon R.
Kishon R.
N. Besor
35°E
36°E
33°N
32°N
31°N
0 10 20 30 40 50 Miles
0 10 20 30 40 50 Kilometers

THE PASSION WEEK IN JERUSALEM Gate
Tower
Wall
Possible locations of the Chamber of Hewn Stone MOVEMENTS OF JESUS
Sunday
Monday
Thursday/Friday
Jesus before the Sanhedrin
N
Begun by Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 41–44) and completed later
Josephus' Third North Wall
Josephus' Second North Wall
Golgotha (Gordon's Calvary)
Bezetha
Fish Gate
Via Dolorosa
Antonia Fortress
Tyropoeon Valley
Wilson's Arch (bridge)
Temple Mount Altar
Temple
Sheep Gate
Shushan Gate
Beautiful Gate
Barclay's Gate
Warren's Gate
Huldah Gates
Gennath Gate
First N. Wall
Herod Antipas' Palace
Tower of Hippicus
Praetorium
Herod's Palace
Upper City
Theatre
House of Caiaphas, the High Priest
Escarpment
Essene Quarter
Upper Room (traditional location)
Essene Gate
Lower City
City of David
Water Gate
Ophel
Citadel
Gihon Spring
Hezekiah's Tunnel
Serpent's Pool
Hinnom Valley
Kidron Valley
Mt. of Olives
Gethsemane
To Bethany (see inset below)
Solomon's Portico
Sunday
Jesus descends from Bethany and enters the temple precincts
Sunday night
Jesus returns to Bethany to lodge with His friends
Monday
Cleansing of the temple
Tuesday
Jesus teaches His disciples about end times on the Mount of Olives
Thursday
1. Jesus shares the Passover meal with His disciples
Thursday eveving
2. Jesus retires to Gethsemane with His disciples
Thursday night
3. Jesus is arrested
Thursday/Friday
4. Jesus is taken to the House of Caiaphas for a preliminary hearing
Friday daybreak
5. Jesus before the Sanhedrin
Friday daybreak
6. Jesus before Pilate
Friday morning
7. Jesus before Herod Antipas
Friday morning
8. Jesus again before Pilate
Friday morning
9. Jesus is crucified
(traditional location)
0 1/8 1/4 Mile
0 150 300 Meters
30°E 40°E 40°N 30°N
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
PRESENT-DAY ISRAEL
Area enlarged below
34°E 35°E 36°E 33°N 32°N 31°N 30°N
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
Jordan R.
Emmaus
Jerusalem
Bethany
Area enlarged at left
DEAD SEA

PAUL'S MISSIONARY JOURNEYS
City
Paul's first missionary journey
Paul's second missionary journey
Paul's third missionary journey
Paul's voyage to Rome
0 100 200 300 Miles
0 100 200 300 Kilometers
N
Paul spends two years preaching the gospel as he awaits his appeal to Nero
Luke joins Paul
Paul restores life to young Eutychus
Paul and Barnabas mistaken for gods
Paul resumes his missionary travels
Paul speaks to the Areopagus
Ship lost in storm
Proconsul Sergius Paulus converted
Porcius Fetus sends Paul to Rome to appeal to Caesar
Jerusalem Conference A.D. 49
Rome
Three Taverns
Forum of Appius
Puteoli
Pompeii
ITALIA
ADRIATIC SEA
Brundisium
Tarentum
TYRRHENIAN SEA
Messana
Rhegium Sicily
Syracuse
Sytris Minor
Malta MACEDONIA
THRACE
Amphipolis
Neapolis
Berea
Thessalonica
Larissa
Delphi
Olympia
ACHAIA
Athens
Sparta
AEGEAN SEA
Cyclades Islands
Troas
BLACK SEA
Byzantium (Istanbul)
Heracleia
Sinope
BITHYNIA AND PONTUS
Ancyra (Ankara)
Tavium
GALATIA
Parnassus
Adramyttium ASIA
Ancyra
Sebaste
Pergamum
Ephesus
Tripolis
PHRYGIA CAPPADOCIA
Archelais
COMMAGENE
Seleucia
Cremna
Lystra
PAMPHYLIA
Derbe
CILICIA
Tarsus
Cnidus
LYCIA
Myra
Rhodes
Antioch
Euphrates R.
Salamis
Cyprus
Paphos
SYRIA
Phoenix
Crete
Cauda
Lasea Fair Havens
Salmone
MEDITERRANEAN SEA
Sidon
Caesarea Maritima
Antipatris
Jerusalem
JUDEA
Syrtis Major Cyrene
CYRENAICA
Alexandria
EGYPT
Memphis
Nile R.

ARTICLES

Notable Christian Apologist: William Paley

by Ted Cabal

Can Religious Experience Show That There is a God?

by R. Douglas Geivett

Are Miracles Believable?

by Ronald H. Nash

Is the Old Testament Ethical?

by Christopher Wright

The Uniqueness of Israel's Religion

by E. Ray Clendenen

Does the Bible Affirm Open Theism?

by John M. Frame

Who Wrote the Pentateuch and When Was It Written?

by Daniel I. Block

Does the Bible Provide Ethical Guidance for Business?

by Scott B. Rae

How Can Modern Medicine Relate to the Old Testament?

by John A. Bloom

Has Christianity Had a Bad Influence on History?

by Alvin J. Schmidt

Does the Bible Affirm That Animals Have Rights?

by Steve W. Lemke

What Did Jesus Have to Do with Violence?

by Mark Durie

Is the Old Testament Trustworthy?

by Walter C. Kaiser Jr.

How Should We Handle Unresolved Questions About the Bible?

by Paul Copan

Why Does God Hide Himself?

by Kenneth T. Magnuson

Is Psychology Biblical?

by John Coe

What Is the Occult?

by Leonard G. Goss

Has the Bible Been Accurately Copied Down Through the Centuries?

by Norman L. Geisler

Can Biblical Chronology Be Trusted?

by E. Ray Clendenen

What Does the Bible Teach About Angels?

by Ron Rhodes

Aren't All Religions Basically the Same?

by Craig J. Hazen

Does the Existence of the Mind Provide Evidence for God?

by J. P. Moreland

Don't Christian Missionaries Impose Their Culture on Others?

by Philip J. Sampson

How Can We Know the Bible Includes the Correct Books?

Norman L. Geisler

Does the Bible Demean Women?

by Sharon James

What Does the Bible Say About Euthanasia?

by Nigel Cameron

Didn't the Church Oppose Galileo?

by Mark A. Kalthoff

Does the Bible Teach the Abuse of Nature?

by Steve W. Lemke

What Does the Bible Teach About Human Beings?

by Russell D. Moore

Does the Cosmological Argument Show There Is a God?

by J. P. Moreland

Is Beauty in the Eye of the Beholder?

by David A. Horner

Does Science Support the Bible?

by Walter L. Bradley

If God Made the Universe, Who Made God?

by Paul Copan

How Should a Christian Understand the Age of the Earth Controversy?

Does the Bible Provide Guidance Regarding Human Cloning?

by R. Albert Mohler Jr.

What Does the Bible Say About Abortion?

by Nigel Cameron

What is a Worldview?

by Ronald H. Nash

Is Logic Arbitrary?

by David K. Clark

How Should a Christian Relate to a Scientific Naturalist?

by J. P. Moreland

Intellectuals Who Found God

by Chad Owen Brand

Is the Bible Sexually Oppressive?

by Josh D. McDowell

Does the Bible Support a Just War?

by Norman L. Geisler

Can God's Actions Be Detected Scientifically?

by C. John Collins

How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and Human Freedom?

by C. John Collins

How Does Christianity Relate to Hinduism?

by Ravi Zacharias

How Does Christianity Relate to the Baha'i Faith?

by Douglas R. Groothuis

How Has Archaeology Corroborated the Bible?

by Walter C. Kaiser Jr.

Don't Religious Beliefs Just Reflect Where One Was Raised?

by Paul Copan

Is God a Male?

by Chad Owen Brand

How Does Christianity Relate to Other Eastern Religions?

by Winfried Corduan

What Does It Mean to Say, "Jesus Is Messiah"?

by Walter Russell

Does the Bible Teach Annihilationism?

by J. P. Moreland

Does the "New Physics" Conflict with Christianity?

by Jeremy Royal Howard

What Is the Relationship Between Science and the Bible?

by J. P. Moreland

Does the Design Argument Show There Is a God?

by William A. Dembski

What Does the Hebrew Bible Say About the Coming Messiah?

by Michael Rydelnik

How Should a Christian Understand Postmodernism?

by Douglas R. Groothuis

Does the Bible Teach That Everyone Will Be Saved?

by Gregory Alan Thornbury

Does the New Testament Misquote the Old Testament?

by Paul Copan

Does the Bible Contain Errors?

by Paul D. Feinberg

Who Are You to Judge Others?

by Paul Copan

Are Biblical Miracles Imitations of Pagan Myths?

by Gary R. Habermas

How Should We Treat New Challenges to the Christian Faith?

by Gary R. Habermas

Is the New Testament Trustworthy?

by Darrell L. Bock

The Trinity: Is It Possible That God Be Both One and Three?

by Douglas K. Blount

Has Historical Criticism Proved the Bible False?

by Thomas R. Schreiner

Can We Still Believe in Demons Today?

by Clinton E. Arnold

Why Would a Good God Send People to an Everlasting Hell?

by Paul Copan

Can God Create a Stone Too Heavy for Him to Lift?

by Charles Taliaferro

What About "Gospels" Not in Our New Testament?

by Graham H. Twelftree

Could the Gospel Writers Withstand the Scrutiny of a Lawyer?

by John Warwick Montgomery

What About Those Who Never Heard About Christ?

by Chad Owen Brand

Does the Bible Teach That There Is a Purgatory?

by Chad Owen Brand

Are the Teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses Compatible with the Bible?

by Robert M. Bowman Jr.

How Is the Transformation of Jesus' Disciples Different from Other Religious Transformations?

by Gary R. Habermas

Aren't the Gospels the Product of Greek Thinking?

by Ronald H.Nash

Can the Gospel Be Presented Across Cultures?

by John Mark Terry

Are Jesus' Claims Unique Among the Religions of the World?

by Gary R. Habermas

Is There Evidence for Life After Death?

by Hank Hanegraaff

More Evidence for Life After Death

by J. P. Moreland

How Does the Bible Relate to Islam?

by Barbara B. Pemberton

Can Something Be True for You and Not for Me?

by Paul Copan

How Should a Christian Deal with Doubt?

by Gary R. Habermas

Can Naturalistic Theories Account for the Resurrection?

by Gary R. Habermas

Does the Disciples' Conviction That They Saw the Risen Jesus Establish the Truth of the Resurrection?

by Gary R. Habermas

What is the Christian Identity Movement?

by R. Alan Streett

How Should a Christian Relate to Those in Non-Christian Movements and Religions?

by Alan W. Gomes

What Should a Christian Think About Near-death Experiences?

by Charles Colson

Did Jesus Really Rise from the Dead?

by William Lane Craig

What Are Self-defeating Statements?

by J. P. Moreland

Are Scientology and the Bible Compatible?

by Philip R. Roberts

Is Allah Identical to the God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ?

by Ergun Mehmet Caner

How Does the Bible Relate to Judaism?

by Larry R. Helyer

How Can Jesus' Death Bring Forgiveness?

by Chad Owen Brand

How Can We Know Anything at All?

by Garrett DeWeese

The Incarnation: Could God Become Man Without Ceasing to Be God?

by James A. Parker III

How Should a Christian Relate to the New Age Movement?

by Ted Cabal

How Should a Christian Understand the Role of Government?

by Charles Colson

How Is Jihad Understood in Islam?

by Ergun Mehmet Caner

What Does It Mean That God Inspired the Bible?

by Gordon R. Lewis

What Is Divine Revelation?

by Gordon R. Lewis

Does the Bible Teach Reincarnation?

by Paul Copan

How Can the Bible Affirm Both Divine Sovereignty and Human Freedom?

by William Lane Craig

What Are the Three Laws of Logic?

by J. P. Moreland

Isn’t That Just Your Interpretation?

by Paul Copan

Can a Christian Have Assurance of Salvation?

by Chad Owen Brand

Is Christian Science Compatible with the Bible?

by Robert B. Stewart

What Are Common Characteristics of the New Religious Movements?

by Leonard G. Goss

Isn't Christianity Intolerant?

by Paul Copan

Does the Bible Teach That Humans Are More Than Their Bodies?

by J. P. Moreland

How Does a Christian Converse with a Buddhist?

by Ravi Zacharias

Table of Contents

Old Testament

1 Chronicles

2 Chronicles

Ezra

Nehemiah

Esther

Job

Psalm

Proverbs

Ecclesiastes

Song of Songs

Isaiah

Jeremiah

Lamentations

Ezekiel

Daniel

Hosea

Joel

Amos

Obadiah

Jonah